Mr. SHIELDS. I say if this becomes the law it will only pension the men who served in the Mexican war, and none served there for a less time than one year. There seems to be talk about the drain that is made upon the Treasury. Since we commenced agitating this question hundreds of these soldiers have passed away. According to the report received the other day at a gathering of the survivors in Baltimore, they are dying off at the rate of a hundred men a month.

Senators talk about it being a drain on the Treasury. Sir, this country is never going to be bankrupted by paying the men who fought for and served it. Those have not been the means that have drained the Treasury. I have no wish to make a speech, and it would take up time. I am very sorry, I regret exceedingly to be compelled to say it, but I do not think the proposed law is going to have the effect, stated by the Senator from New York. In my opinion we are jeopardizing the whole bill, not only the soldiers of the Mexican war, but the whole bill is in danger if we proceed to amend the amendment as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the soldiers in what is called the Black Hawk war were very meritorious soldiers and fought well and deserve well of their country; but if we begin to tack on to this bill all the soldiers who have fought in the numerous Indian wars of the country, where shall we stop? Is it not apparent that, whether intended or not—and I certainly do not impute the intention to anybody—it would inevitably result in killing the bill? How many Indian wars have we had? If we pension the soldiers in the Black Hawk war, then we must pension the soldiers of the Creek war in Florida and we must pension the soldiers in the Oregon war and the soldiers in divers other Indian wars too numerous to mention, and where are we to end? If we take up every little Indian war we have had and tack the soldiers of that war to this bill it will result in the failure of the measure.

I am ready to consider as a separate measure a bill to pension the soldiers of the Black Hawk war, if my friend from Nebraska will introduce such a bill, or the soldiers of any other war in which the American soldier has served his country and has become disabled in the service of his country; but I am not willing to make this an omnibus bill and to have it killed by making it an omnibus bill.

Therefore, without any prejudice whatever to the very meritorious men whom my friend from Nebraska wishes to take care of, without any expression of unkindness to them or any condemnation of his proposition, I hope that amendment will not be tacked upon this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SAUNDERS and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all questions arising upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.]

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.]

Mr. COCKRELL, (when the name of Mr. WITHERS was called.) The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] is absent, as has already been announced. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 37; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the amendment as follows:

Provided further, That no pension shall ever be paid under this act to Jefferson Davis, the late president of the so-called confederacy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS.]

Mr. HOAR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to say but one word. I have no idea that the Senator has meant to create any feeling in the consideration of this measure, but at the same time his amendment is intended in some way to provoke controversy and to open discussion. It would make Mr. Davis the only exception to the amnesty that has been granted by the American people to the entire people of the South, and I trust that the gentleman who introduced the amendment will not insist upon it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the person named in my amendment certainly has been singled out by no selection of mine, by no selection of any person who agrees with me on the important public questions which divide the people of the country to-day. He has been selected by his own act in a marked and conspicuous manner, as the representative and leader of an attack on the life of the country which had educated and which had honored him.

It is not for the purpose of provoking any discussion or controversy that this amendment is suggested. This gentleman never has given utterance to an expression of regret for his attack on the life of the Republic which educated and honored him. He never even has requested, as so many of his associates in the late rebellion have done, that his constitutional disabilities should be removed. Spurning the clemency of the Republic to-day, he stands spurning the opportunities which the Constitution would give him, by the consent of Congress, if he should apply for public service, which few others who acted with him have done. And it is now proposed by the votes of this Senate to do to that person, his treason unrepented of, the singular honor of putting him upon the pension-rolls of this country, and to tax the widow and the orphan of the loyal soldier to pay to him that pension. The gentlemen who propose to do that are the gentlemen who provoke all the controversy which the proposition instigates or excites. I do not propose to do it. I do not propose that the vote of the State which I have the honor in part to represent shall be cast for that proposition; and therefore I offer the amendment.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to have the amendment reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be again reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That no pension shall ever be paid under this act to Jefferson Davis, the late president of the so-called confederacy.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, of course I do not know the motives of the Senator who introduced this amendment beyond his own explanation; but it is a curious spectacle for the American people to behold at this late hour of the session and this late hour of the day, or rather early hour of the morning, that when this Government is pensioning General Longstreet by a small post-office, I believe, in the State of Georgia, whose chief boast and best glory is having killed more Yankees possibly than anybody else in the confederate army; and when the present Postmaster-General served gallantly and nobly also in that army, and the late James L. Orr was sent to Russia by the chief of the American Army, as it is so called; and when Mosby, who bragged also that he was the Marion of the second war and that the bravest examples in his army were the "Culpeper boys" of Virginia, is cared for by the Government; then there is Akerman, who was well provided for also by the Government he fought—putting all this together, it is rather a strange thing to me, and the proposition must strike the American people at this day, as I said just now, with somewhat of surprise.

So far as Mr. Davis is concerned, I do not suppose he wants a pension. I do not suppose he ever thought of it a moment. As one who served with him in a civil capacity in the late war, I wish I had the power and the authority now, but I have not, although I know it would accord with every impulse of his heart, to enter here upon the record before the people of the country a receipt in full to the Senator from Massachusetts and all others who occupy the same position toward that distinguished gentleman. He would scorn it if tendered grudgingly. He does not ask it, and he would not receive it unless given freely and in the spirit it is bestowed upon others. He was a gallant soldier in that war. His services are upon the record of this country, and while they may not surpass, yet they will equal in history all Grecian fame and all Roman glory. If there is anything of credit to the Senator for offering the amendment, he is welcome to it; but I do not envy him in this work.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to add to the arguments for my amendment the further argument that the gentleman who claims to have stood in confidential relations to Jefferson Davis and to speak his sentiments says that Jefferson Davis would scorn this honor if it were tendered him by the country.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I take a different view from both sides of the question. My opinion is that it would be conferring a distinction upon Jefferson Davis that would elevate him in the South much higher than I want to see him elevated to except him from ten million people. That is my difficulty. To make him the one solitary exception is about the highest distinction that can be conferred upon him in history, and I am not in favor of that. It was said of a distinguished Roman whose statue was not carried in a triumph that he being excepted was the most distinguished man of that period. So it went down to history; so it sounds to this day; and so will you send Jefferson Davis down by making him the one solitary distinguished exception among ten million people.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not know what are Mr. Davis's views in this regard. I imagine he has never given one moment's thought to the question whether he would receive a pension or not. I suppose he would not apply for it, at all events not for the present. I know nothing about that; I do not profess to speak for him; but I wish to say that this country is to-day longing and wishing for peace and for quiet. I appeal to the gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber; I beg and I entreat them to let us be at peace. That is what we in the South desire. We have lost all; we are poor; we are desirous to restore our industries and to restore our prosperity, and not to revive or in any way to recognize that there is to-day, or that there has been in the past, any difference between the two sections.

A few nights ago the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri was adopted by a vote of almost two to one, or quite two to one. Senators upon the other side of the Chamber voted for it then, but for some reason a change has come over them. Since that time a motion was entered to reconsider; it has been reconsidered; and now the pending amendment is offered to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. Why is this done, Mr. President? I said it must be intended with a view to provoke discussion. We intend to have none; we cannot afford to have any. Our unhappy condition will not permit it, even if we desired it. But we of the South do not desire it; we wish to avoid it; we will submit to anything that you say rather than to have further enmity or further hostility. We implore you for the sake of our common country to avoid everything of this kind.

Why single out Mr. Davis? Is it intended to place an affront upon the South, or is it intended for a political purpose? I fear, Mr. President, that it is the expectation in some way by singling him out that differences may arise, that hostility may be provoked, that something may be said in debate of which advantage can be taken. I trust that is not the purpose, but I fear it may be.

I trust, therefore, that the Senator who offered this amendment—and I do not know who offered it—may withdraw it, and that we shall have an end to all these discussions and all these differences, and let us be at peace. Has Mr. Davis applied for a pension? Not at all. Has he sought it? Not at all. Whether he will accept it I do not know, and I do not believe that he will, because there are many gentlemen who were in the war with Mexico who probably will never apply for this pension; not because of their hostility to the Government, but for a higher, a more patriotic, reason; for the reason that there is no necessity for it.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have not risen to discuss this question. I believe that wise statesmanship demands always oblivion of the causes and conduct of a great civil war, and he who seeks to keep these alive is the country's worst enemy. He is ignorant of the world's history or reckless of its teachings who would urge a measure calculated to revive unpleasant memories. It is a question that I never have and which I never shall discuss here, because it uselessly stirs up passions that had best be buried. I only desire to say that if you were to summon from the North and the South and the East and the West the survivors of the war who at the battle of Monterey on the 19th and 20th and 21st of September, 1846, served with Jefferson Davis, the great leader of the Mississippi Rifles, which performed such glorious service that the whole country rang with his and their praise, they would with one accord vote against such a proposition. It is not one that could possibly meet their approval.

I will say in addition that there was a glorious band of five thousand soldiers fighting under the stars and stripes at Buena Vista on the 21st, 22d, and 23d of February, 1847, who stood up against more than twenty thousand of Santa Anna's army, and the movement of the Mississippi Rifles with its V formation under Jefferson Davis attracted the attention of the whole country. Boldly they stood there resisting assaults from the right and from the left, hurling back the hosts of Santa Anna, and the gallant band led by Davis did as much as any other one command to gain that glorious victory which shed immortal luster upon American arms. Not one of the survivors of that band of five thousand men, whether they came from the State of Massachusetts or elsewhere, would stand here and back and indorse the proposition made by the Senator from Massachusetts. Ay, more; the gallant soldiers of the North, who imperiled their lives in the war of giants, fresh in memory, honor the devotion of their gallant adversaries to their conviction of duty, illustrated on many a hard-fought field. Leave this question to the chivalry of the Union Army, and they would repudiate this thin political maneuver as utterly unworthy.

I leave this question not here, but I leave it to the men who followed the flag of the Union in those wars. Let them say whether this battle-scarred, knightly gentleman, who is now tottering upon the brink of the grave, whose white hair blossoms for the better land which is soon to be his home, shall have this stigma placed upon him. I leave it to them to say whether when a movement is made which is so patent that a man although he might be a fool could read and understand the purpose and object of it—I leave it to them to say whether they would support such a proposition. I do not wish ever to have it said of me that I made such a proposition. Let those who seek such notoriety wear its honors.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have already stated that I am instructed by my Legislature to support granting pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war. I do not read anywhere in those instructions that I am to except Mr. Jefferson Davis, nor do I see in their spirit that it is the opinion of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio that the punishment of the people of the South ought to be vicarious in the person of Jefferson Davis. I do not anywhere see in those instructions that it is the desire of the people of the State of Ohio to single out Jefferson Davis and make him a martyr, while other men who went quite as far as he did are not only not punished but are received into the highest stations in this Government. I have seen an Attorney-General of the United States who was a confederate officer. I see now a Postmaster-General of the United States who was a confederate officer. I have seen one of the most gallant and bravest soldiers of the confederacy, General Longstreet, confirmed for office by the dominant party in this Senate again and again. I have seen the guerrilla, Mosby, sent to a foreign country as the representative of this nation. I am repeating only what was said by the Senator from Arkansas, but it cannot be repeated too often. I see on the benches of the Federal courts in the Southern States men who were engaged in the confederacy, and who were just as guilty as Jefferson Davis, if you talk about guilt.

I do not believe much in this assumed indignation toward that man, especially when it comes from a Senator from the State in which treason has been published and preached longer and more violently than it ever was in any other State in this Union. I do not know that the Senator from Massachusetts ever had any denunciations for Lloyd Garrison and the like who denounced the Constitution of the United States as a compact with hell, who said they were in favor of achieving the liberty of the slaves over the broken Union and over the trampled-down Constitution of the country. I never heard of his denouncing them. I never heard that his indignation then rose in the way that it seems to be excited to-night.

No, Mr. President, the American people want not only that there shall be amnesty, as I have said, but that as soon as possible there may be oblivion. They do not want to set up Mr. Jefferson Davis or any other one man as a monument that the people may be eternally looking upon and the people of his section be eternally looking upon as a martyr, when all other men walk free and unchallenged on the face of this Republic.

I am not the least bit afraid of the verdict of the people of my State upon this subject, nor of the people of the nineteen other States whose Legislatures have passed resolutions in favor of these pensions. I am told by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS,] and I was told the same thing the other day by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] not now in his place, that twenty Legislatures have passed resolutions in favor of granting these pensions. Show me one of them that asked us to except Mr. Davis, or except any other one man, and make him the vicarious sufferer for the sins of the southern people.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, one word in reply to the Senator from Ohio. I will state the distinction between the case of Mr. Davis and that of Postmaster-General Key and Mr. Longstreet and Mr. Akerman.

Mr. GORDON. One is a radical and the other is not; that is all.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman says in his seat that one is a radical and the other is not.

Mr. GORDON. I did not mean that for the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. These gentlemen have planted themselves on the platform of a restored unity; they have adopted not solely the republican faith, but they have adopted the results of the war; they have acquiesced in the good faith, in the judgment of the American people. When we stand by their side we stand on a platform made up of the unity of the Republic and of the three new amendments to the Constitution. No people more gladly than the people of the State which I represent have approved the policy of inviting into the service of the Republic those men who have been lately in arms against them, wherever and whenever they show a sign, whatever may be the past, that the present controlling feeling in their bosom is love of their country.

But, how is it with Mr. Davis? What do we find? What sign. I do not say of repentance but of present patriotic feeling, has come from the bosom of the president of the confederacy? The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] himself said that Mr. Davis would scorn the pension. Does Mr. Davis come to take advantage of the signal and noble clemency of the Republic which, by express constitutional enactment, the American people have clothed Congress with the right of extending? They have come one by one, asking that they may be set free from their disabilities and that they may enter again into the service of their country, take the place of American citizens, and be clothed with all the constitutional rights which pertain to persons who did not engage in the rebellion. But, how is it with Mr. Davis? He scorns the constitutional clemency of this people. He would scorn, as his friend—who undertakes to speak for him—has just said in the presence of the Senate, the pension. He glories in "the lost cause." There is not an utterance which comes from his lips which does not say to the people of the South "remember the past, and set your faces against the present." There is no voice which comes from him as it does from Longstreet and from Mosby and from Key, inviting his countrymen of the South to forget the past and join hands with us in looking to the glorious future which is before us.

This is not an attack upon this gentleman. It is a proposition, thoughtless originally I doubt not, but now adhered to after full consideration, to make it possible and lawful to place him upon the roll of honor of the Republic, and to support him with his opinions unchanged and his influence unchanged, at the expense of the loyalty of this country.

The Senator from Arkansas alluded to the courage which this gentleman had shown in battle, and I do not deny it. Two of the bravest officers of our revolutionary war were Aaron Burr and Benedict Arnold. It is related of Arnold that when an exile in England he met an American lady at the entrance of the House of Commons, and asked her what the people of America would say if he should return to his native land. The lady's reply was: "They would bury your wounded leg with the honors of war and hang the rest of you." No such spirit or temper has been displayed to Mr. Davis. He lives in peace; he can go unharmed without insult, without disrespect, without molestation, from one end to the other of this country. There is not a nation on earth, there never was a nation in history which ever exhibited or would exhibit to-day such clemency as the victorious American people have exhibited toward the president of the late Confederate States; but this is a little too bitter cup to put to our lips and ask us, which I say to his credit he does not ask us—

Mr. GORDON. And nobody else, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. And nobody else, to put him upon the roll of honor of the Republic, and pension him at the cost of the widows and orphans of the soldiers of the late war.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I must say that I shall never get so old as not to be surprised. We are always learning something. I have found out to-night for the first time that the only way in which a man can show himself to be truly loyal, truly devoted to the Union of the States and to the support of the Constitution is to be an office-seeker. If he does not seek office, then he is disloyal. What is the complaint that the Senator from Massachusetts makes of Jefferson Davis? That he does not seek office; that he does not ask his disabilities to be removed in order that he may receive the same rewards from the republican party that have been showered on Akerman, on Longstreet, on Key, and on Mosby. Because he does not seek office, because he is not an office-seeker, and therefore does not ask to have his disabilities removed, the Senator from Massachusetts is indignant and says that he shall not have a poor pittance for the wounds that he received and the services that he performed in the Mexican war should this bill pass. I say that that argument is the most remarkable thing that I have ever discovered yet. I have not read any of Mr. Davis's productions for some years past; but I am told that in correction of criticisms that were made upon some speech of his, not long since he published a letter as patriotic, as devoted to this Union, as ever was written by man. I have not seen it, and I speak of it only from the reports of others; but certainly, so far as I have seen, he has been peaceable and quiet and has counseled submission as fully as any of these gentlemen who have been rewarded by the republican party.

If he had undertaken to give that extreme proof of loyalty which the Senator from Massachusetts seems to consider a sine qua non, if he had come to this Congress and asked them to remove his disabilities, I must be permitted to doubt whether there is one Senator on that side of the Chamber who would have voted for the bill. I doubt it extremely. I do not think that I have ever seen the day since I took my seat in the Senate that the republican side of this Chamber would have voted to remove Jefferson Davis's disabilities. By some strange perversion, as it seems to me, of reason, they seem determined that he shall be the vicarious sufferer, that he shall be in the opinion of the men of his section of the Union the man marked out as a martyr.

Mr. President, I am not disposed to make a martyr of Mr. Jefferson Davis, any more than I am disposed to make a martyr of any other man who was on that side of the question. I am not disposed to single him out for any such honor at all, and least of all do I wish in this measure of national gratitude to those who were engaged in the Mexican war to mix with it, to put in the same text with it, this offensive discrimination against a man of the South which is an insult to nearly the entire people of the South.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, it is with extreme reluctance that I rise to say a word upon this subject. I must confess my surprise and regret that the Senator from Massachusetts should have wantonly, without provocation, flung this insult—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The Senator from Mississippi is out of order. He cannot impute to any other Senator either wantonness or insult.

Mr. LAMAR. I stand corrected. I suppose it is in perfect order for certain Senators to insult other Senators, but they cannot be characterized by those who receive the blow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The observations of the Senator from Mississippi, in the opinion of the Chair, are not in order.

Mr. LAMAR. The observations of the Senator from Mississippi, in his own opinion, are not only in order but perfectly and absolutely true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will take his seat until the question of order is decided.

Mr. LAMAR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules of the Senate explicitly require that the Chair shall preserve order in respect of observations between Senators. The Chair is of opinion that the statement of the Senator from Mississippi, that the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is an insult and is wanton, is out of order.

Mr. LAMAR. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon that question the Senator from Mississippi appeals from the decision of the Chair. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GARLAND. I ask that the Secretary take down the words.

Mr. MORRILL. They have been taken down.

Mr. GARLAND. They should be taken down and read before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remarks of the Senator from Mississippi will be read by the Reporter.

The Reporter read as follows:

I must confess my surprise and regret that the Senator from Massachusetts should have wantonly, without provocation, flung this insult—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Chair has decided that the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi, read by the reporter, are not in order. From that decision the Senator from Mississippi has taken an appeal. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question? Senators, as many as are of the opinion that the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate will answer "yea;" the contrary opinion, "nay."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired for the evening with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—15.
Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Dorsey,	Paddock,
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ferry,	Rollins,

Hill,	McDonald,	Saunders,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The judgment of the Chair is reversed, and the Senate decides that the words uttered by the Senator from Mississippi are in order, and the Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. LAMAR. Now, Mr. President, having been decided by my associates to have been in order in the language I used, I desire to say that if it is at all offensive or unacceptable to any member of this Senate, the language is withdrawn, for it is not my purpose to offend or stab the sensibilities of any of my associates on this floor. But what I meant by that remark was this: Jefferson Davis stands in precisely the position that I stand in, that every Southern man who believed in the right of a State to secede stands in.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to assure him—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will address the Chair. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LAMAR. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to assure him and other Senators on this floor who stand like him that in making the motion which I made I did not conceive that any of them stood in the same position in which I supposed Mr. Davis to stand. I should not have moved to except the gentleman from Mississippi from the pension-roll.

Mr. LAMAR. The only difference between myself and Jefferson Davis is that his exalted character, his pre-eminent talents, his well-established reputation as a statesman, as a patriot, and as a soldier enabled him to take the lead in the cause to which I consecrated myself, and to which every fiber of my heart responded. There was no distinction between insult to him and the southern people, except that he was their chosen leader and they his enthusiastic followers; and there has been no difference since.

Jefferson Davis, since the war, has never counseled insurrection against the authority of this Government. Not one word has he uttered inconsistent with the greatness and glory of this American Republic. The Senator from Massachusetts can point to no utterance of Jefferson Davis which bids the people of the South to cherish animosities and hostilities to this Union, nor does he cherish them himself.

The Senator, it pains me to say it, not only introduced this amendment, but he coupled that honored name with treason; for, sir, he is honored among the southern people. He did only what they sought to do; he was simply chosen to lead them in a cause which we all cherished, and his name will continue to be honored for his participation in that great movement which inspired an entire people, the people who were animated by motives as sacred and noble as ever inspired the breast of a Hampden or a Washington. I say this as a Union man to-day. The people of the South drank their inspiration from the fountain of devotion to liberty and to constitutional government. We believed that we were fighting for it, and the Senator cannot put his finger upon one distinction between the people of the South and the man whom the Senator has to-day selected for dishonor as the representative of the South.

Now, sir, I do not wish to make any remarks here that will engender any excitement or discussion; but I say that the Senator from Massachusetts connected that name with treason. We all know that the results of this war have attached to the people of the South the technical crime of rebellion, and we submit to it; but that was not the sense in which the gentleman used that term as applied to Mr. Davis. He intended to affix—I will not say he intended, but the inevitable effect of it was to affix upon this aged man, this man broken in fortune, suffering from bereavement—an epithet of odium, an imputation of moral turpitude.

Sir, it required no courage to do that; it required no magnanimity to do it; it required no courtesy; it only required hate, bitter, malignant sectional feeling and a sense of personal impunity. The gentleman I believe takes rank among Christian statesmen. He might have learned a better lesson even from the pages of mythology. When Prometheus was bound to the rock it was not an eagle—it was a vulture—that buried his beak in the tortured vitals of the victim.

I send to the desk a letter written by Mr. Davis upon this subject to Mr. SINGLETON, a gentleman who represents one of the districts of Mississippi in the other House; and with the expression of my opinion that the Senator from Massachusetts does not represent Massachusetts in the step that he has taken and the sentiments he has uttered this day, I shall take my seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire to have the letter he sent to the desk read?

Mr. LAMAR. I do, sir; I wish it read as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read, there being no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

MISSISSIPPI CITY, 1878.

DEAR SIR: I am quite unwilling that personal objections to me by members of Congress should defeat the proposed measure to grant pensions to the veterans of the war against Mexico, therefore request and authorize you, should the fate of the bill depend upon excluding me from its benefits, in my behalf, to ask my friends and the friends of the measure silently to allow a provision for my exclusion from the benefits of the bill to be inserted in it. From other sources you will have learned that not a few of those who then periled their lives for their country are now so indigent and infirm as to require relief, and it would be to me sorrowful indeed if my comrades in that war should suffer deprivation because of their association with me.

While on this subject I will mention that it did not require a law to entitle me to be put on the list of pensioners, but it rather requires legal prohibition to deprive me of that right. As an officer regularly mustered into the military service of the United States and while serving as such I was "severely wounded" in battle, and could, under the laws then existing, have applied for and received a pension. My circumstances did not require pecuniary relief from the Government, and I did not make the requisite application, therefore my name has never been upon the roll of pensioners and offers no obstruction to the restoration of those names which have been stricken from it.

Respectfully and truly, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Hon. O. R. SINGLETON.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio indulged himself in a line of remark which I hardly think was justifiable. He was arraigning this entire side of the Chamber for running at the name of Jefferson Davis. I wish to say to the honorable Senator from Ohio, and to all the Senators on that side, that, neither in this Chamber nor in the other in which I have served, did I ever hear what he would call an attack made on Jefferson Davis until he was borne into the Chamber for some favor to be asked and some vote to be exacted.

Who brought him here to-night? Who has brought him into Congress at different times? No republican. No republican Senator or Representative has ever asked censure or comment or reference to him; but you bring him here and ask us either to vote or keep silent; and if we do not keep silent, then the honorable Senator is astonished and indignant, and the honorable Senator from Mississippi thinks that a wanton insult is intended. I want the country to understand that it is that side of the Chamber and not this side that brings Jefferson Davis to the front.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the honorable Senator—

Mr. THURMAN. I will say to the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to either of the Senators.

Mr. BUTLER. The first occasion upon which I heard the name of Jefferson Davis in this Chamber was made by the honorable Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] last night. The Senator from Maine cannot, therefore, say that truthfully.

Mr. BLAINE. Some allusion, the Senator means?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; precisely.

Mr. BLAINE. This is not an allusion in debate; this is for legislative action. This is something that every man must answer for.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will address the Chair, if that is in order. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish the Senator to explain what he means by our bringing Jefferson Davis here? Does he mean introducing this proposition to pension the soldiers who served in Mexico?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, the measure you are agitating brings him here.

Mr. THURMAN. Then it is a crime?

Mr. BLAINE. Not a crime at all. I am not charging the Senator with a crime, but I resent with some little feeling that the Senator should look over to this side of the Chamber and complain that we are taking some extraordinary course with the name of Jefferson Davis. We do not bring him here. You bear his mangled remains before us, and then if we do not happen to view them with the same admiration that seems to inspire the Senator from Ohio we are doing something derogatory to our own dignity and the honor of the country, and when the honorable Senator from Mississippi comes to his defense the first word he had to speak for Mr. Davis was that he never has counseled insurrection against the Government. I took the words down.

Mr. OGLESBY. Since when?

Mr. BLAINE. Since the close of the war. He has never counseled insurrection! Let us be thankful. Why should we not pension a man who has shown such loyalty that he has never counseled insurrection! That is from the representative of his own State. I took the words down when he spoke them. I was amazed. I did not exactly consider the words of the honorable Senator from Mississippi a wanton insult to apply to me or anybody else, but I considered them to be most extraordinary words, that when pleading the case of Jefferson Davis at the bar of the American Senate to be pensioned on its roll of honor, his personal representative, his associate, his friend, his follower, commends him to the American people because he has been so loyal that he has never counseled insurrection since the war was over.

This is the man brought in here who, according to the Senator from Mississippi, is to go down to history the peer of Washington and Hampden, fighting in the same cause, entitled to the same niche in history, inspired by the same patriotic motives, to be admired for the same self-consecration.

Let me tell the honorable Senator from Mississippi that in all the years that I have served in Congress I have never voluntarily brought the name of Jefferson Davis before either branch, but I tell him that he is asking humanity to forget its instincts and patriotism to be changed to crime before he will find impartial history place Mr. Jefferson Davis anywhere in the roll that has for its brightest and greatest names George Washington and John Hampden.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, I shall only say one word in reply to the Senator from Maine. I was not presenting the title of Jefferson Davis to a pension or pleading for anything in his behalf when I made use of the expression that has excited the Senator's criticism. I was seeking not to prove the loyalty of Mr. Davis but to repel the charge of disloyalty that was made against him by another Senator. I meant to repel the idea that he stood isolated, separate and distinct, representing a different order of ideas, a different class of society, from the people of the South at large. I stated that his position was that of all in the South who were acquiescing in the results of the war and co-operating in giving them a harmonious and successful development. I will state a single typical fact in illustration.

Two or three years since a riot occurred in a Southern State, where Mr. Davis was temporarily residing, in the course of which violence was done to several negroes. A meeting was called to express the indignation of the community and their determination to put down these lawless violations of the rights of the newly emancipated portion of our citizens. Among the most prominent and eloquent speakers in that meeting was the man who has been singled out for this public reproach and whose name has to-night been characterized by the worst epithets which the vocabulary of abuse can furnish. He denounced riots and outrages, showed that violence could not and would not be tolerated and that relief from wrongs must be sought by peaceful and lawful means.

Mr. President, I state this fact not for the purpose of pleading for Jefferson Davis, as the Senator from Maine states it, or of presenting his claim for a pension. We only insist that he being summoned to the leadership of the southern people in the late war there is no reason why he should be set apart for disgrace and punishment on account of a political offense which was the offense of the whole people who called him into their service.

Such a policy is in my opinion neither wise nor just; it is not the course that even the monarchical governments of Europe, the most arbitrary among them, have pursued. Who for years has been the prime minister of the Austrian cabinet? A man who was the leader of the Hungarian revolt and was for a long time a fugitive from Austria under sentence of death and a reward put upon his head. And there is the great and eloquent Kossuth, who was the chief of the revolutionary government of Hungary, the leader of that war, afterward admitted to a seat in the parliament, the legislative body of Austria. This political intolerance is not worthy of the present age. In all enlightened governments political offenses are dealt with in the light of a broad and comprehensive policy looking to the future interests of the whole country. They are not regarded in the light of crimes. In great revolutions, where large masses of society are arrayed as belligerents against each other, it is now considered that to punish the defeated party as criminals, to go a single step further than to make secure the results of the victory won, is the dictate of dwarfed statesmanship and ignoble vengeance. There is no longer any distinction between the southern people and the northern people with reference to any of the results of the late war. The relations of the States to the Federal Government, the relations of the people to the States, the social, civil, and political rights of the people, are recognized alike at the North and the South, and it is my opinion, sir, that this proposed measure does not represent the sentiment of the people either North or South. With regard to the status of Mr. Davis in the political history of this country, whatever may be the opinion of the Senator from Maine, or whatever may be my own, will have to undergo the revision of posterity, and I cheerfully remit the question to that tribunal.

Mr. BLAINE. Why, Mr. President, does the honorable Senator from Mississippi declare that the policy of the Government of the United States, administered as it has been through the Republican party, has been one of intolerance toward those who were prominent in the war, if I may use a euphemism, and leave out rebellion, which is offensive to his ears? Do I understand the honorable Senator to maintain here on this floor that the Government of the United States has been intolerant? Certainly the Senator does not mean that.

Mr. LAMAR. Do you yield, sir?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. LAMAR. Why does the gentleman from Maine ask me that question? It was not one that I was discussing.

Mr. BLAINE. But it is the very language the gentleman used.

Mr. LAMAR. No, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman spoke of intolerance.

Mr. LAMAR. I was speaking of the intolerance involved in the legislation now proposed. But, sir, I have no disguises whatever on this subject. I do not wish to go back now and discuss the policy of the reconstruction laws nor the general policy of the republican party. I have in the other House repeatedly given my views very fully upon each of these topics. I will say that a policy which emancipated the servile class of the South and disfranchised the southern people, excluding them from all participation in the governments maintained by force over them, was rank intolerance. I say, sir, that a harder and more ungracious system of legislation could not be devised than to thus disfranchise a whole people and put them under the domination of their slaves. I assert that it was a policy more severe in its punishment and more terrible in its consequences than if a general confiscation had been inflicted upon that people. It not only subjected them to that humiliation which is the greatest of all tortures to a proud and manly race, but it held them down by force while they were being robbed and plundered by their dishonest officers. In these and many other respects which I will not mention, the policy of the republican party was intolerant.

But, sir, there were some things in the history of reconstruction to which I can refer with pleasure.

Many republicans in this Senate and many in the other House have been always willing to remove the political disabilities imposed upon the southern people by the proscriptive section of the fourteenth amendment, although they have inexorably required a formal petition in every instance to be made by the party relieved. I have always considered this action by republicans, with their views in relation to the war, as magnanimous. I have so felt it in my own case. I have, therefore, no hesitation in saying that there has been in this respect much of an imposing character in the action of the victorious section in its treatment of the section that was conquered. Sir, the very fact that the representatives of a people who were in insurrection against the national authority—for that is the status to which the fortunes of war have assigned us in history—are now participating in the exercise of that national authority is a great, imposing, and inspiring spectacle of the benignant power of free institutions, and it gives me pleasure to express my admiration of it.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator has made the speech I was intending to make myself. I was about to ask him whether he considered this Government intolerant. I was not going to make the argumentum ad hominem. I was not intending to make any personal allusion to the Senator.

The Senator confuses things in his argument. He says it was not magnanimous to release a servile race, and he mixes up the policy made necessary by war—

Mr. LAMAR. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not say that it was not magnanimous to release the servile race. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLAINE. What did the Senator say?

Mr. LAMAR. I said that it was not magnanimous to release and set that servile race over a race of freemen and make them their rulers.

Mr. BLAINE. That is another point.

Mr. LAMAR. It is the point.

Mr. BLAINE. The point?

Mr. LAMAR. It is the point which I made.

Mr. BLAINE. The Government of the United States never disfranchised or put under political disabilities more than fourteen thousand men in the entire South. Out of the millions who were in the war it never disfranchised over fourteen thousand men. There are not two hundred left to-day with political disabilities upon them. There is not one that ever respectfully or in any other way petitioned to be relieved and was refused. I know very well what the honorable Senator from Ohio meant when he said that Hon. Jefferson Davis should commend himself because he was not an office-seeker and had not asked to be relieved of disabilities. Why, if the newspapers are to be credited, especially those in the southern democratic interest, Mr. Davis is a candidate for office; he is pledged to sit on the other side of this Chamber two years hence, and the honorable Senator from Ohio will in the next Congress with his eloquence—I am predicting now—urge that these disabilities be removed from him. I predict further that he will urge it without Jefferson Davis paying the respect to the great Government against which he rebelled of simply asking in respectful language that disabilities be taken from him. He has never asked it. I do not say that I can quote the authority but I think I am correct in saying that Mr. Davis has boasted that he never asked it. I am very sure that another great leader in the South, Mr. Toombs, of Georgia, has boasted that he would never do it, and in the House of Representatives three years ago when the general amnesty bill was pending and it was proposed that the amnesty should be granted merely on the condition that it should be asked for by each person desiring it, that was resisted to the bitter end. This great Government was to go to them and ask them if they would take it. The action of the democratic House of Representatives—I am speaking of the past now, which is quite within parliamentary limits—the action of the democratic House of Representatives was not that Jefferson Davis might have his disabilities removed upon respectful petition, but that we should go to him and petition him to allow us to remove them.

The Senator from Mississippi quotes European governments as precedents for us. I know it is not graceful to boast of magnanimity, but I maintain that there is nothing in history to compare with the magnanimity of the Government of the United States after the war. Nearly one-half of this body on Wednesday next will be composed of gentlemen who took part in the war against the Government; a very large and imposing membership already in my eye here to-day, once in the rebellion, and now forgiven, welcomed, honored, invited to the highest council board of the nation.

And let me say that the Senator himself having received the magnanimity of the Government, justly bestowed upon him, honorably asked for, let me say to him that it does not become him to speak of intolerance. There is no parallel to the magnanimity of our Government; not one single execution, not one single confiscation; at the outside only fourteen thousand out of millions put under disfranchisement, and all of them released and all of them invited to come to the common board fraternally and patriotically with the rest of us and share a common destiny for weal or for woe in the future. I tell the honorable Senator it does not become him or any southern man to speak of intolerance on the part of the National Government; rather, if he speaks of it at all, he should allude to its magnanimity and its grandeur.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I regret very much that the few remarks I submitted to the Senate after the reporting of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts have probably given rise to this debate, and I regret very much that the session has been prolonged in consequence of those remarks, because in the two years I have been here I have kept an estimate of the time I have occupied in the Senate and I have not quite consumed five hours in those two years; but having to some extent provoked this debate I must be permitted, and I claim the indulgence of the Senate a few moments, to express my views upon the subject as presented since I sat down last.

It is true I did say in the remarks I first submitted that Mr. Davis would scorn this pension. I uttered those remarks, and I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to them in reference to the time, the occasion, and the circumstance of presenting the amendment that he offered; and I repeat now for the second time that Mr. Davis, while he would be proud of any recognition of his services for his country at any time, if he believed there was a man, woman, or child in the State of Massachusetts or any other State of this Union that begrudged him recognition or that looked upon him with suspicion on account of that recognition, would scorn it and turn from it as he would turn from the hiss of an adder.

Mr. Davis and myself were not in a general way of the same politics in reference to this Government; but I have never had occasion, in the long service that I had with him and under him, in a civil capacity entirely, to doubt his capacity, to doubt his integrity, or to doubt his power of purpose under any and all circumstances; and I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts, and all others who agree with him and indulge in the spirit that prompted this amendment, that whenever they seek to see a game man die, whether he dies in adversity or in prosperity, they may go to the dying bed of Jefferson Davis and they will witness that.

But the Senator from Maine calls on the Senator from Mississippi to state whether the General Government has not been generous to those whom they conquered, to use his language in this Hall. I will say to him and to you, Mr. President, and to all others, that he is a bold man who would say they had not been generous, but he is a much bolder man who would say they had been generous. But take the circumstance that provokes this debate, I deny in toto et in longo vallo that the conduct of this Government has been generous to Jefferson Davis, and that is the matter now in hand. When he was incarcerated in the prisons of their country, as they then called it, poor and emaciated and broken down, beyond the power of doing harm to any living person, much less any living government, and carried to Richmond, almost as often as Troy viewed her walls encircled and her chief pursued, to stand his trial, they dared not try him, and they have not to this day tried him. The sacred principle at the bottom of this Government is that no man has a right to say another is criminal until he is presented, indicted, tried, and convicted; it matters not what your individual opinions may be as to his guilt or innocence. Mr. Davis has sought and implored, and his friends and attorneys for him, trial from time to time; and it has never been granted. How could he in decency's name, in the name of all that is sacred and all that is worth pleading for, let me submit to the Senator from Maine, how could he ask the country to pardon him when they kept him in chains, although liberated upon the bond of friends in the North?

Now we are speaking of the conduct toward Jefferson Davis, and I shall not be drawn into a discussion of the conduct of the northern people to the South generally, or toward Mr. Toombs. The work of the day is enough for that day. The question here is upon Jefferson Davis on this amendment; and I say, considering those times, followed up by what has been uttered in Congress from time to time against that gentleman, with the amendment to this bill, the conduct instead of being generous has been cruel; it is barbarous; it is inhuman.

As I look over the Chamber, I see now sitting here the gentleman who has acquired the name of "Cerro Gordo" (Senator Williams, of Kentucky) by his distinguished conduct at that battle; and in a few days, if we have an executive session, he is to be sworn in here as a Senator, one of the highest offices known to this country. Why not level your shafts at him? Why not strike him down when you strike this gallant American whose name has become historic and interwoven into the very best annals of his country? Senator Williams, after illustrious service in Mexico, and gallant service in the confederate cause, is soon to be with us and adorn this high theater; yet Jefferson Davis cannot receive a pittance from the Government he has served so well, and the mere mention of it stirs the blood of gentlemen who talk of generosity to indignation.

I could give instance after instance. But you talk of generosity, and you speak of the proud eras of your history. Why, sir, in the proudest era of Roman history no general was ever permitted to have a triumph or bear a trophy that he had won in a civil war; and the proudest and greatest military nation of modern Europe, England, has had her escutcheon blurred because she held the great Napoleon a prisoner, as this Government would have held Jefferson Davis but for the generosity of Horace Greeley and a few others, the latches of whose political shoes those who are urging this motion are unworthy to unloose.

These are my convictions, here and everywhere else. I am authorized to express them. That man is beyond the pale of injury to any one. He has demanded his trial; he has asked to come before witnesses and his accusers, the highest and best gift under the American Constitution. You may talk about your thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, but that thing of being confronted by your accusers and the witnesses against you is the greatest privilege and right yet. He has asked and demanded it, and yet they have not given it to him; and they would make him, by their own denial of a trial in the courts, a tramp and a vagabond, and condemn him by this amendment, and brand him even with worse than the mark put upon Cain.

Mr. BURNESIDE. I shall detain the Senate but a moment. I approached this question when it was first broached by the Senator from Missouri with an entirely non-partisan spirit. I have believed for a long time that the surviving soldiers of the Mexican war should be pensioned. I have never before thought on the subject with a view to the connection which the soldiers themselves had with the late rebellion. I have been forced to think of it in that connection to-night. I would not myself feel willing to vote myself and my Mexican war comrades of the North a pension and withhold from those who served with us in Mexico that are now in the South, and I therefore voted against the amendment which proposed to exclude them.

With reference to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will say that I feel no hesitancy in voting to exclude the name of Mr. Jefferson Davis from any pension-list of our Government. I would not willingly bring his name up for the purpose of excluding it unless it was necessary. I recognize the motive of the Senator from Massachusetts in making his motion as a proper motive.

Mr. Davis, at any time since the Government of the United States has adopted the system of removing the disabilities of men who like him served the rebellion, could have asked for the removal of his disabilities. As to whether Congress would have removed those disabilities or not, is another question. Mr. Davis could have asked for their removal, and in view of the great part he took in the rebellion, if he felt like again joining with the citizens of the United States in working for the public good, he could have asked for the removal of his disabilities. He has chosen—

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether the indictment against Jefferson Davis is still pending before the courts?

Mr. BURNESIDE. I confess I cannot answer the question. I think not, though.

Mr. MORGAN. My impression is that it is pending. I know that indictments against Mr. Clay are pending in the district or circuit court of North Alabama; and I know in reference to Mr. Clay, and I think the remark is equally true in reference to Mr. Davis, that while under indictment he feels that he cannot apply for the removal of his disabilities for it would be a confession of guilt.

Mr. BURNESIDE. That is a view I confess I had not taken of it, but I hold that any man who bore arms against the Government of the United States, who after the termination of the rebellion desired to re-enter upon his duties as a citizen, ought to have done all in his power to place himself upon the same footing as other citizens of the United States, but a man who holds himself aloof from those duties has no right to consideration, particularly as to pension-lists.

Now, I am speaking of this in a general way. I would cast no slur now upon Jefferson Davis and would do him no harm. As has been said, he is an old man, with one foot in the grave; he can do nobody any harm in the future; but he was responsible for a great wrong; he was a leader, an originator to a considerable extent of the wrong; but certainly a leader of public opinion in the South during the rebellion.

But enough of that. I would rather not vote for this amendment if I could avoid it, but if I am pressed to vote for it I shall do so.

Now, Mr. President, a few practical words in reference to the position in which I find myself. As I said before, I approached this subject in a non-partisan spirit, and if a law could have been passed granting pensions to the Mexican war soldiers on the vote which was taken the other day I would have been glad. Since then I have had some misgivings about it in view of the additional drain it would cause upon the Treasury. Besides, I find that the large majority, in fact almost every member of my party on this floor, is opposed to the passage of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri unless the Mexican war veterans who served in the South during the rebellion are excluded from its benefits. If that exclusion is made I am satisfied that Senators on the other side of this Chamber will not vote for it. If the exclusion is not made and my vote goes to pass the amendment in the Senate, and it should go to the House and be passed there, there is no reason for me to suppose that the President, in the face of the fact that every republican Senator on this floor except myself voted against the amendment, would not feel called upon to veto the bill. In view of this danger which threatens the pension bill if thus amended, and in view of the great harm that would result to Union soldiers by the failure of the bill to become a law, and in view of the duty which I owe to Union soldiers, I deem it my duty to vote to change my position and vote against the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

I still believe that these Mexican veterans should be pensioned; but I do not think, in view of all that has occurred here to-night, that an amendment looking to that should be placed upon this bill; and I am sorry now that the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS,] my old comrade and friend, introduced his amendment, and I am sorry I voted for it, although my vote did not carry it, for it was carried by a large majority. But now that my vote may influence the result, I desire to place myself where I shall feel that I have done my duty to my country, to my own comrades who are interested in this bill, and to my party. I am a member of the republican party and desire to vote with it when not conscientiously constrained to do otherwise. There is a necessity for two great parties in this country, and the man who tries to do his work outside of party lines will be a failure; and I do not desire to be any more of a failure than God has made me.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to give my reasons for my change of views and I am not afraid to say that I have changed them. I think it is the part of wisdom to separate this amendment from the arrears of pension bill, and pass the bill as soon as possible in accordance with the wishes of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, finish our other work here, and go to our homes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I was not in the Senate when the arrears of pensions bill was voted on and when the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was adopted. If I had been here I should have voted for that amendment and for the bill, and I propose to vote for both to-night.

I regret very much to see the turn that this debate has taken to-night. I had hoped that all my republican friends would vote to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war; and when you vote to pension the Mexican war soldiers you should vote to pension all the Mexican war soldiers. I do not care if Jeff. Davis is among the number. Jeff. Davis was a gallant soldier in the Mexican war and I do not propose by my vote to punish Jeff. Davis in this way for his rebellion. Every other person who was engaged in that rebellion has been pardoned, has been forgiven, and I do not think the people of this country—and when I say the people of this country I mean particularly the people of the North, and I happen to know as much about the sentiment of the people of the North as any Senator on this side of the Chamber; I am a northern man and I am proud of it—I do not believe the people of the North, the republicans of the North care that much about Jefferson Davis that they would want the Senate, in passing a bill pensioning the Mexican war soldiers, to make an exception of Jefferson Davis.

I vote against the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as a republican. I do not want the republican party to make that much of Jefferson Davis. Let Jefferson Davis go on that roll if he chooses to go; he is not here to-night asking to be placed on the pension-roll. He happens to be a soldier of the Mexican war, and it is not a charity, it is a duty we owe to the soldiers of the Mexican war to pass a pension bill for them, and if we find Jefferson Davis's name among the list I say let him go on the Mexican war pension-roll if he wants to go; and if he does not want it he need not take it. But the people of this country do not care that much about Jefferson Davis; and the republican party make a great mistake when they single Jefferson Davis out and make him an exception. I love the republican party too much to desire to see it make a mistake of that kind. I want the republican party to succeed; I want the republican party to control this country; and I say to my friends on this side of the Chamber, you cannot control this country by any narrow, illiberal policy of that kind.

I shall vote against that amendment and I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to pension the Mexican war soldiers whenever I get a chance, for I believe in doing that I represent the people of my own State and I believe I represent the people of the North. The people of the North never did and never will begrudge a debt they owe the soldier; I have never heard one man in the North complain of the $30,000,000 we pay every year to the soldiers by way of pension; and you may add to that and they will not complain. I am told that this will add twelve or fifteen millions more. The people of the North, the people of the South, the people of the whole country do not care what it takes to pension the soldiers; they will pay it, and they will pay it cheerfully. If the representatives of the people on this floor do not think so, let them go home and ask the people if we shall not pay the soldiers, and they will tell you yes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, having known Jefferson Davis for more than a quarter of a century, and believing, as I do, that I understand the motives which have guided his actions as a public man, I must be permitted to express my profound regret that the Senator from Massachusetts should have deemed it necessary to have submitted this amendment, because of the fact that it makes an invidious and unjust distinction between Mr. Davis and the people of eleven States who were in full sympathy with him. If the course pursued by Jefferson Davis in 1861 and the years that followed, was criminal, and is not to be forgiven, and he is still to be held up not only for censure and abuse, but as a criminal, I beg to say that I am as guilty as he, and I see around me on this floor a number of gentlemen, honored by their respective States, and honored by the various members of this body by daily and most kindly association and intercourse, who were no more and no less guilty than Jefferson Davis.

Issues upon grave and important questions of constitutional law, which affected the rights and interests of the people of nearly half the States of the Union, had agitated the public mind, and been the fruitful subject of much and angry discussion upon the floor of Congress for many years, and which culminated in 1861 in the secession of eleven States. I will not stop now to inquire into the merits of the question. For the purposes of my argument it does not matter which side was right or which wrong. History will record the facts, and posterity will determine the question when passion and prejudice shall have subsided. But the fact that the people of both the North and the South immediately flew to arms, putting their lives upon the issue, is proof conclusive that they were impelled by profound and sincere convictions.

It was the struggle of giants, fierce, protracted, and sanguinary. After four years of bloody strife, greatly outnumbered, shut out from the world by blockades, and resources exhausted, we accepted the liberal terms which were offered by General Sherman and surrendered our arms. It was the surrender of brave men in good faith, and from that moment no word or act of Mr. Davis or the men who composed the confederate armies has done violence to those terms. From that moment we have recognized the fact that the issues of the war were settled, and forever settled. And being so settled, it was sincerely hoped by the people of the South, and, so far as I know, by a large proportion of the people of the North, that the passions engendered by and the bitter memories of that bloody struggle should be soothed by time, if not forgotten.

If I understood the honorable Senator from Massachusetts he spoke with commendation and approval of the fact that General Longstreet, Colonel Mosby, Postmaster-General Key, and others who were confederate soldiers, had asked that the events of the war should be forgotten. The Senator assents. Then I am authorized to assume that he, too, believes that these bitter and bloody memories should be buried in the deep grave of forgetfulness and oblivion.

I appeal to the honorable Senator to know if in his opinion this amendment of his is calculated to promote peace, harmony, and forgetfulness of that bloody past? So far from it, does he not recognize in it a fire-brand, potent only to revive those memories and rekindle the fires of sectional prejudice and hate?

What valuable end will be accomplished by the adoption of this amendment? The pittance that it will save to the Treasury is too paltry to furnish a motive to any Senator to desire its adoption. Whatever may be the motive prompting its introduction, and I do not propose to inquire into that, its chief, if not its only effect will be, to fire the northern heart and revive sectional animosity which may possibly tend to array a solid North against a solid South.

Mr. President, the country has suffered already by far too much from these sectional strifes. Let us turn from them now and forever, and devote our undivided energies and efforts to building up the languishing industries of our people and restoring prosperity to the country.

Why single out Jefferson Davis as the victim, and the only victim, of your resentment when he is no more guilty than the whole people of eleven States? Why censure and stigmatize him when all others are forgiven? Has the Senator from Massachusetts a single motive prompting him to desire the peace, happiness, prosperity, greatness, and glory of this country that is not shared by Mr. Davis? This is his home, his country, and his only home and country. The graves of his ancestors and his children are here; all that he has is here; all that he is, all that he can hope to be, is inseparably identified with this country. If this is not his home, his country, he has no home or country. Every consideration of interest, honor, and patriotism prompts him, as it does the whole people of the South, to promote by all legitimate means the peace, prosperity, success, and glory of the country, and the whole country.

If the amendment which excluded all the veterans of the Mexican war who had been confederate soldiers from the pension-roll had been adopted I should not have felt the injustice so keenly, though I should have regarded it as an unjust discrimination between the veterans of that war; but when the judgment of the Senate has been pronounced against excluding that class, and you single out one man for the purpose of casting obloquy upon him, my sense of justice revolts at the idea.

I shall vote against the amendment, and am resolved that neither my vote nor my silence shall ever cast a stigma upon the name of Jefferson Davis. I have known him long, and I know him well; and take pleasure in saying that, broken in fortune and in health as he is, in all the elements of true manhood, talent, attainments, and purity of personal character, he stands to-day, and proudly stands, the peer of any Senator upon this floor.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, whence cometh all this noise? Let us trace this record and see if the fault lies at our door. The arrears of pensions bill came into this body through the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] and was passed by a non-partisan vote, without any partisan feeling, or bitterness, or passion. But four Senators on this side of the Chamber cast their votes against it. Pending its passage the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS,] a soldier in two wars, bearing upon his body the scars earned in the war with Mexico, comes to plead before the Congress of his country for those who with him earned for us an empire; and the Senate, in response to his appeal, placed upon that bill pensions for the Mexican veterans—a praiseworthy and a generous act. It was passed; it became apparently the recorded will of the Senate, and was about to be sent to the other House for its concurrence, when a Senator not occupying a place upon this side of the Chamber, a Senator leading and prominent upon the other side—the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM]—interposed, and prevented the bill from going to the House by making a motion to reconsider the vote by which the arrears of pensions bill was passed. He voted for the bill. Was this his purpose? That motion to reconsider was not our act; it was the act of the republican side of the Chamber. The bill and the motion to reconsider slumbered upon the records of the Senate until to-night; and now this motion to reconsider the vote by which the arrears of pensions bill was passed is called up for action. By whom? By our side? Nothing of the kind; but by the republican side of the Chamber. It is brought to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from Minnesota, and the motion to reconsider is pressed to a vote, and that having been discussed by the Senate, it was reconsidered, and the measure was again before us. Then followed a motion by a republican—the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY]—to reconsider the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which gave pensions to the veterans of the Mexican war. That motion prevailed, and it was passed by almost a strict party vote, gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber voting "nay" and gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber voting "yea." After it was thus reconsidered the next proposition was that of the Senator from Oregon now in the chair, [Mr. MITCHELL,] another republican Senator, who introduced a proposition by which the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] should be restricted in its application to men in the Southern States who had been in the rebellion. By its prescriptive terms no man living in and loving the South, however much he might have suffered for his whole country, could partake of the benefits of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. [Mr. SHIELDS.] In other words, although they of the South who had aided in obtaining for us a vast empire upon the Pacific slope had been brave and true soldiers in the war with Mexico, yet because they had gone into the war of the rebellion they are forbidden to be recognized as patriots; and this, too, although many of their comrades now sit upon this floor, in the highest council chamber of the Republic. Although some of their comrades have occupied places in the Cabinet of the nation; although many of them occupy places upon the bench in the judiciary of the country; yet, in the face of all this, these men are to be deprived of the benefits we give by this law to Mexican veterans.

In casting my vote for this measure I have obeyed the direction of my own State. I have obeyed the wishes of many there who had gone into this war and are now needy and poor. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri; but I could not vote for the proposition of the Senator from Oregon. It cuts a deep and wide line between those of the North and those of the South, where none such ought to be. I voted against that amendment, and every one of my political brethren upon this side of the Chamber voted with me and against it. A democratic House passed the pension bill, democratic votes passed it here; democrats vote to pension Mexican veterans, republicans reconsider it and amend it with opprobrium upon a class of brave men. This was defeated mainly by our votes, and now the fire-brand of dissension is thrown in by the same party action in bringing into the Chamber a proposition in regard to Jefferson Davis. We thought of no pension for him; his letter disclaims it for himself. Not only Jefferson Davis, but every other man South who had shouldered his musket or wielded his sword in the war with Mexico, was attacked and dishonored by the proposition of the Senator from Oregon. That proposition has been voted down; and but two Senators upon the republican side of the Chamber voted against it. What has followed? Jeff. Davis and a bitter debate. This amendment has come from the Senator from Massachusetts. Its purpose may have been just; its results are bad. Having failed to deprive all of those South who had aided us in the Mexican war of their right to a pension, which I believe this people would cheerfully give if the question were left to them, Senators on the other side select a single man, and he is to be elevated upon a pedestal of dishonor, to the end that their votes against the bill may be justified. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] brought hither that name, and no one on this side of the Chamber had ought to do with it. The responsibility for throwing this man's name here, the responsibility for attempting to take from the roll of Mexican veterans the names of those in South Carolina, in Mississippi, in Texas, and in all the South who aided us in the struggle with Mexico, is not upon this side of the Chamber; it lies upon you, Senators, republicans, and not upon us. Its purpose is plain. The bill is to be killed, and your votes in doing it must be justified to the people by partisan acrimony and political debate.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I do not wish to engage in the general debate, but to suggest some reasons which might justify those of us who sympathized with the South in the late war in withholding our votes upon the amendment. The Senator from Massachusetts who has offered this amendment excluding Mr. Davis from participation with all the other soldiers who contributed blood or services to give victory to American arms in Mexico must have taxed his ingenuity to place southern men upon this floor in an attitude most disagreeable. He knows full well that our self-respect must of necessity rebel at the thoughts of voting for such an amendment. He knows full well that a vote by us to exclude Mr. Davis is to place a brand upon our own foreheads and upon those who fought or fell with us in the late war. He knows that whatever poison is carried to the breast of Mr. Davis by this Parthian arrow, sent back from recently defeated republican ranks, must of necessity find lodgment in the breast of every man at the South whose sensibilities are capable of a wound. That Senator [Mr. HOAR] knows that every impulse of manhood and every sentiment of honor forbid a vote by a southern man for any such proposition as he has seen fit to offer; and yet, he does offer it with notice from that side of the Chamber that if the amendment is defeated the bill itself is also to be defeated. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] therefore asks us to vote for an amendment at which our manhood revolts and to defeat which we are notified is to defeat the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I agree with the Senator from Georgia as to what should be the course of those who come from the Southern States.

Mr. GORDON. I want to add another word if my friend will allow me. I have given the reasons which must be apparent to every Senator from every section why we cannot and will not vote to single out Mr. Davis from among southern men, as in any degree more responsible for the war or more worthy of republican spleen than those of us who followed and sustained him in the late revolution. I have also mentioned one reason why I am disinclined to vote against that amendment, namely, that if the amendment is defeated by our votes the bill is to be defeated, and we are to be held responsible for depriving not only the soldiers who fought in Mexico, but the Union soldiers of the late war of their pensions. Since my entrance upon public duty I have never failed on any occasion to pay all due respect to the soldiers who fought on the northern side in the late war, nor to deprive them of pensions, and all honors and emoluments which a grateful country might wish to bestow. I submit, therefore, that it is unworthy of any Senator to descend to the level of such a plane as this in order to secure as he wrongly imagines some political advantages. For one, therefore, I am disposed to sit silent while the Senator from Massachusetts and those who sympathize with him take the responsibility of settling the fate of the amendment or of the bill. In this, however, I shall be guided by the wishes of my friends on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator from Georgia in what he deems to be the proper course to be taken by gentlemen on this side of the Chamber has spoken for those from the South. So far as Mr. Davis is personally concerned we have his authority in the letter which has been read from the desk to-night, that he does not wish to embarrass any soldier of the Mexican war by the fact of his name being mentioned. It seemed to me that his expressions of regard for his comrades during that war were very tender and very manly. When he stated in that letter to his friends that he never entertained the idea that any soldiers should be left off the pension-roll because of any offense he might have been supposed to have committed against the Government of the United States, I think he gave utterance to one of those expressions that he was capable of on all occasions. I would therefore feel warranted entirely even in accepting the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, if I did not feel satisfied that there was much more in the amendment than the mere desire to exclude Mr. Davis from a pension. Mr. Davis has not claimed a pension though he has been entitled to it for many years. He has not claimed it because he was excluded by the laws of the United States, but he has not claimed it because he thought that in claiming it he would bring himself in contact with a public sentiment which would grate harshly on his own feelings, and he did not choose for the small pittance of the pension to make the sacrifice of feeling that would necessarily have to be made in order to secure it. I dare say that Mr. Davis has never thought about claiming the pension of the United States Government at any moment of time, no matter what may be his position or personal necessities. He no more thought of that than the honorable Senator from Missouri did, who is entitled in his own person, as I think justly, to the sobriquet of "the hero of two wars."

When the Senator from Missouri brought in this amendment to the bill for the purpose of benefiting his comrades in the war with Mexico, I dare say it never entered his thoughts that Mr. Davis might be one of the pensioners under that amendment. He was not undertaking to pension Jefferson Davis. He had no thought of drawing him into controversy under any circumstances. The heart of the grand old soldier bore itself out in that amendment, and he came here and spent perhaps the last hours of his public service in rendering a tribute of respect and regard for those men of whom he spoke so eloquently the other day in the Senate, and who stood with him in that little army of ten thousand men in the grand struggle with the Mexican Republic which resulted in bringing to us, I might say I think with justice, if not the larger the richer part of our present domain. The honorable Senator from Missouri, who ought not to be called a Senator when we think of his great military services, but rather a general, in the introduction of that amendment to this bill had no mercenary thought; no political question agitated his mind; no reflection upon the effect this movement might have upon the status of political parties ever for a moment agitated his thoughts; but it was an amendment moved for the pure and patriotic purpose of rewarding those men who of all others on this continent best deserve the regard of the American people, for they are the only men who have borne arms on behalf of this country who did not fight either in a political war or a war for the defense of their own homes and firesides.

The soldiers of the war of 1812, the soldiers of the numerous Indian wars we have had in this country, were men who stood between an enemy and their own hearth-stone and undertook to defend that sacred place against the invasion of an enemy, either domestic or foreign. The soldiers of the war of 1861 to 1865 fought in a political war, a civil war. The soldiers of the war with Mexico fought in a controversy between our country and a foreign government, a war which was justified in the then belief of the American people—and I believe history has not reversed that judgment—by long insults and outrages which had been inflicted on our country by the government of Mexico. They were called from their homes, they went abroad, that little but brilliant band of soldiery, the like of which we are told, and I believe fully, has no parallel in history. They went abroad, and not only did they maintain the honor of their names and the honor of the American character in a foreign land, establishing the banner of conquest in the halls of the Montezumas, but they returned, and in their return they brought with them a dowry the like of which no similar band of men has ever brought to any country in the world. They have gone from that day to this without recompense. Bills have been introduced in the two Houses of Congress to provide pensions for them. The Legislatures of the different States have instructed their representatives here to see that these men had some reward. If to-day you were to take one hundred miles square of the country they brought within the boundaries of our Government and donate it to them, you would do scanty and mean justice even to their deserts on that great occasion.

Now, this brave old soldier, [Mr. SHIELDS,] who has the misfortune to be a democrat, came upon this side of the Chamber instead of coming on the other side of the Chamber, and here he undertook to advocate the rights of his comrades in arms, and being, as I believe he has stated, the last surviving commander of that splendid host of men, he brought forward an amendment to a bill which provided for arrears of pension for those who had suffered in the civil war and undertook to attach it to that bill. The Senate by a decided majority sustained that amendment. Then the heart of the Senate was touched; then the baleful influences of supposed party advantages had not spread themselves over the heart and mind of the Senate, but men came up like men and voted pensions to those who deserved them, and assisted those who for years have been trying to have it fitly done. It was a simple act of justice on the part of this Government.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] has alluded to some features of this case. It has come now to be considered a question of party advantage, as I have observed. There are those on the other side of this Chamber who are now unwilling to vote pensions to the Mexican war soldiers, several thousand of them, who certainly ought to have them. Some secret power has brought its influence to bear upon the other side of this Chamber, and now with great alacrity members on that side have changed their position, and for the purpose of getting an excuse for breaking down this right of the Mexican war soldiery to pensions at the hands of the American people, as I understand it, this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is drawn. The effort is to load down this whole pension bill with the name of Jefferson Davis. The effort is to deprive the soldiers of the Mexican war and their representatives here on this floor of that right of recognition which almost every heart in this land feels in its deepest throbbings is an act of simple justice. Because it is within the desire of a Senator to deprive all the members of the army that served in Mexico of pensions, he brings forward one name that gentlemen think is still able to call up bitter memories on the part of the American people.

We have not got the personal authority of Mr. Davis to make any statements in reference to this subject; but the Senate has heard the letter read to-night to which I referred in the opening of my remarks. Every Senator on this side of the Chamber knows that it would be a high gratification to Mr. Davis that this bill should suffer no embarrassment by his name being included within its provisions. Having no right to withdraw it, having no right here to make the release or surrender of his right under the pension law or under this bill when it shall pass, I think it is the duty of Senators on this side of the Chamber to allow Senators on the other side to dispose of that branch of the subject as they please, and if they choose to vote down or vote up the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, let them do it.

I think, however, if I were on that side of the Chamber I would consult a little the Constitution of the United States, and I would ask myself the question whether or not you can put the name of one man into a law to be excluded from its benefits upon an assumption by the Senate of the United States that that man has been guilty of treason against his country, and whether in that way you can vote a bill of attainder against an individual in the United States. I think I should ask myself that question if I were to introduce a bill in the Senate for the purpose of excluding any citizen of a State from an equal participation in all that belonged to every other citizen upon a declaration of guilt by the Senate of the United States in the nature of a bill of attainder.

There have been bills of attainder in this country. Missouri had a bill of attainder against certain citizens, and that bill of attainder was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, and not only was it broken down but it was disgraced by the judgment of that court in the estimation of every man in this country who ever had a sense of justice or a knowledge of law.

If a bill should be introduced into the Senate to exclude Jefferson Davis from his right to a pension under the law as it stood before 1860, he being then a wounded Mexican war soldier, and it were put upon the ground that he was guilty of treason, those who might undertake to stand by Mr. Davis could well point to Richmond and to the record there and ask of the country why, if he were guilty of treason, he has never been tried; and it might be a question for the consideration of the Senate of the United States whether this body upon a bill like that would undertake to convict him of treason when in a judicial court an indictment was pending, which indictment has never been disposed of and upon which the right of trial had been denied him.

Though the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts cannot be considered strictly in the light of an attainder of an individual by the Senate of the United States, yet the principle upon which that amendment is founded includes the proposition; and when that amendment is voted for, it is a declaration by which the Senate of the United States will have solemnly committed itself to the proposition that it has the right to select out any American, and by name convict him of treason.

I have thrown out this suggestion not because I desire to evade any responsibility which may belong to my action as a Senator on this amendment, but for the purpose of drawing the attention of the country and especially of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to the question whether this legislation against men by name, legislation itself involving an accusation of treason, is the appropriate form in which the Senate of the United States ought to consider a measure of this character. I trust, therefore, Mr. President, that Senators on this side of the Chamber will allow Senators on the other side of the Chamber to dispose of this question as seems to them best. I am not willing to vote upon myself a censure; because I happened to have been a comrade of Mr. Davis and happened to have been in fact more advanced in my views in reference to secession than was he. We of the South well remember that at the time of the secession Mr. Davis was not in full accord with the front rank of the secessionists; but we chose him because we believed he was a man of high character, of great courage, of established abilities, a man whom we could trust even more because he had not been in the van of the movement that we were urging. For a like reason we chose that eminent statesman who is yet in this city and now an honored member of Congress in the other House, ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, as the vice-president of the Confederate States. Mr. STEPHENS doubtless got the votes of the Southern States because there was a large body of men there who believed that without a conflict of arms there would be an opportunity of securing through him a better basis of union than that which had existed at the time of our separation. There was a conservatism of feeling in the Southern States which led to the election of Mr. STEPHENS, and that same conservatism of feeling had a large influence in the election of Mr. Davis. Mr. STEPHENS is in the other branch of Congress to-day, and no man raises his voice against him; no utterance of hostile or unfriendly sentiment or feeling is ever heard in reference to ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS; and yet ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS in the South is regarded as being just as true to us to-day as Mr. Davis. He is regarded as being as much a representative man as Mr. Davis. The Congress of the United States welcomes that man not merely for his ability, but also for his past history. The censure that falls on Mr. Davis falls equally upon me, falls equally upon every man in the South, and indeed it falls more heavily on many gentlemen on this floor than it would either upon Mr. Davis or Mr. STEPHENS.

General Joseph E. Johnston is a member of the House of Representatives elected to the next Congress, and what censure have you got for him? He was a man who resigned his position in the United States Army, and a very high one it was, and took in a large degree the very leadership of the armies of the South. What censure have Senators to cast on Joseph E. Johnston?

Then the name of Jefferson Davis is separated in this amendment from all the other names, and that name is brought before the Senate of the United States to-night, not I believe for the purpose of inflicting pain on Mr. Davis, not for the purpose of inflicting any contemptuous or invidious treatment on this side, but for the mere purpose of handicapping this measure, so that it cannot go through the Senate and House of Representatives. I think Senators on this side will do themselves simple justice by retiring from the contest and allowing the other side to decide it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, twenty-two years ago to-morrow, in the old Hall of the Senate, now occupied by the Supreme Court of the United States, I, in company with Mr. Jefferson Davis, stood up and swore before Almighty God that I would support the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Jefferson Davis came from the Cabinet of Franklin Pierce into the Senate of the United States and took the oath with me to be faithful to this Government. During four years I sat in this body with Mr. Jefferson Davis and saw the preparations going on from day to day for the overthrow of this Government. With treason in his heart and perjury upon his lips he took the oath to sustain the Government that he meant to overthrow.

Sir, there was method in that madness. He, in co-operation with other men from his section and in the Cabinet of Mr. Buchanan, made careful preparation for the event that was to follow. Your armies were scattered all over this broad land where they could not be used in an emergency; your fleets were scattered wherever the winds blew and water was found to float them, where they could not be used to put down rebellion; your Treasury was depleted until your bonds bearing 6 per cent., principal and interest payable in coin, were sold for eighty-eight cents on the dollar for current expenses and no buyers. Preparations were carefully made. Your arms were sold under an apparently innocent clause in an Army bill providing that the Secretary of War might, at his discretion, sell such arms as he deemed it for the interest of the Government to sell.

Sir, eighteen years ago last month I sat in these Halls and listened to Jefferson Davis delivering his farewell address, informing us what our constitutional duties to this Government were, and then he left and entered into the rebellion to overthrow the Government that he had sworn to support! I remained here, sir, during the whole of that terrible rebellion. I saw our brave soldiers by thousands and hundreds of thousands, ay, I might say millions, pass through to the theater of war, and I saw their shattered ranks return; I saw steamboat after steamboat and railroad train after railroad train arrive with the maimed and the wounded; I was with my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] when he commanded the Army of the Potomac, and saw piles of legs and arms that made humanity shudder; I saw the widow and the orphan in their homes, and heard the weeping and wailing of those who had lost their dearest and their best. Mr. President, I little thought at that time that I should live to hear in the Senate of the United States eulogies upon Jefferson Davis, living—a living rebel enlogized on the floor of the Senate of the United States! Sir, I am amazed to hear it; and I can tell the gentlemen on the other side that they little know the spirit of the North when they come here at this day and with bravado on their lips utter eulogies upon a man whom every man, woman, and child in the North believes to have been a double-dyed traitor to his Government. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) Order must be preserved in the galleries.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator or any other man in the United States believed that, why did they not proceed to try him? And I ask who went on his bond when he was released from prison?

Mr. CHANDLER. The democratic candidate for the Presidency, I believe, went on his bond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say a word, not to go into any argument of this matter. The Senator from Georgia suggested that the southern Senators on this floor should not vote on this amendment, and if I understood the Senator from Alabama he expressed the same opinion. Let us see how that will work practically. If they decline to vote there will be no quorum in the Senate voting. That is very clear. I am inclined to think, on the other hand, if they do vote there will be enough Senators on the other side who are opposed to granting pensions to the Mexican war soldiers who will withhold their votes in order that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts may be defeated, and that then they can have an excuse for voting against the bill; that is, for voting against the Mexican war pensioners.

So we are between Scylla and Charybdis, we who are in favor of granting pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war. I think now under these circumstances the straightforward way is the better way, and let the responsibility fall on those to whom it belongs. I think the best way is for every Senator to vote, and if Senators do not vote on the other side in order that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts may be defeated, and they may have the excuse for voting against granting pensions to Mexican war soldiers because this terrible specter Jeff. Davis is in the category, let them avail themselves of it, let them defeat the pensions for the Mexican war soldiers, let them have the responsibility.

If the southern Senators do not vote on this amendment on the yeas and nays, there will be no quorum. It is very true the democratic Senators are not responsible for that, for the republican Senators are still in a majority, and if they were all here there would be a quorum. I do not say they are more bound to be here than the Senators who are in the minority; but they are not here and there will be no quorum if so large a body of the Senate as those who come from the South do not vote. Then what? Then are we to have a repetition of what we had the other night, four mortal hours spent in getting a quorum, and that, too, in such a night as this, in such a storm as this? Why, no, sir; it will result in an adjournment and that will be the whole of it.

My advice, therefore, is that every Senator shall vote, and vote his true sentiments and let the responsibility rest where it belongs.

Mr. BLAINE. It seems to me that the honorable Senator from Ohio is quite free in imputing motives as to what this side of the Chamber will do; that we will withhold our votes in a certain contingency. I should like to know why he is justified in saying that?

Let me say to the honorable Senator from Ohio that this bill came here to provide arrearages of pensions for the soldiers of the war of the Union who were disabled in it, and the rider put on here by his vote, among others, is that unless we pension not merely Jefferson Davis but ten thousand other men who fought in the ranks of the confederate army, the Union soldiers shall not have any relief. This bill came from the House a simple bill to provide for the payment of arrearages of pensions to soldiers who fought for the Union in the war of the rebellion and were disabled in the war. The Senator from Ohio and his political associates put a rider on that bill that before a dollar shall be paid to one of them the confederate soldiers who fought in the Mexican war shall also be put on the pension-roll.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Maine is nothing unless he is personal. If he wants personalities he shall have them to his heart's content when the proper occasion shall arise. It is not the time just now.

Mr. BLAINE. What have I said personal?

Mr. THURMAN. Sit down; don't interrupt me.

The Senator talks about a rider put on this bill. Who put it on? Did a minority in this Senate put it on? It was moved by a man whose record is glorious in this country, and will be remembered quite as long as that of the Senator from Maine and I think as much cherished by the American people as that of the Senator from Maine. He is the man who moved it, having at his back the instructions of twenty Legislatures and the petitions of thousands of people. He put it on as he had a right to do, at least he had a right to move it; and a majority of the Senate, including republicans, voted to put it on. That is how it came on. And ever since that there has been a struggle to get it off, and the struggle now is to get it off. Sir, there can be no mistake about it, and it will not be misunderstood. The struggle is here, under the pretense of denouncing Jefferson Davis, to deny pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Ohio speaks to me of being personal. He had gone on speculating as to how we would vote here, as to what we would do in the future. I called attention to what he had done in the past. Was it personal for me to allude to a vote that the honorable Senator had cast?

When he came to designating my personalities he said that I had called the amendment a rider. That is very personal. What was it but a rider? How was it put on? It was put on by every democratic vote in the Senate, with a few republican votes who did not quite understand it; and if it be personal, let me repeat the personality. It is thrust in here to-day, and it gives to ten thousand men in the South who were in the confederate army pensions as a rider on a pension bill for the Union soldiers, and if the Senator considers that personal, let him make the most of it.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator from Maine is so familiar with the record that he ought in common courtesy, and as it was put on by the yeas and nays, to state who voted against it.

Mr. BLAINE. I should like to hear one who did vote against it get up and deny it.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words. I propose, on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] to vote my honest convictions. I am here representing in part a State which, under the Constitution of the United States, stands equal to any State in this Union. As a Senator I hold that it is not only my right, but my duty, to vote as my judgment of the right dictates.

I hold, Mr. President, that Mr. Jefferson Davis is no worse man than myself; than other gentlemen upon this floor; than the mass of the southern people who selected him as their leader during the great civil war. I hold that he is not more guilty, no more criminal; that he is exactly the same man morally that the great mass of the men of the South are in this regard. I am neither ashamed nor afraid to record my vote on this amendment just as my heart and judgment dictate.

The South did not bring Mr. Davis before this body. The honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] introduced an amendment to the pension bill, placing upon that bill and giving to them the benefit of its provisions the surviving soldiers of the Mexican war. It happens that Mr. Davis is one of the most distinguished of these. Shall I discriminate against him? Why shall I discriminate against Mr. Davis? There may be reasons why other gentlemen may do it, but why shall I do so? Shall I do it because he was a rebel, when I was just as much a rebel as he? That would not be honest; it would not be candid; it would not be sincere. We both were rebels to the extent, I at least of my humble ability, and shall I condemn him because he was one? I will not do it. It might be politic for me to do so; but I prefer to be candid and sincere, and vote as I feel and as I believe to be right; and I propose to vote squarely against this amendment.

I have but a word or two more to say. I believe that I am as loyal to this Government as any man in it. I believe that I represent a people as true to the traditions of the fathers of this Republic as any people under the flag of this Union. I believe that I represent a people who would do battle for the liberties of this country with as much alacrity as any people in it. I believe that I represent a people whose history shows they are true wherever they bear allegiance. Gentlemen may talk about treason and about traitors. I and my people were true to the confederacy. We laid down our arms, or were made to lay them down, it is unnecessary to inquire exactly which, [laughter,] at any rate they were laid down, and we have given our allegiance to this Government, and we are as true to this Government and will be as true to it as we were to the confederate government. Yes, Mr. President, you may look to New York, you may look to Massachusetts, you may look to New Hampshire, you may look throughout the North, and you will find no man or men whose hearts beat truer to the Constitution, to the Union, to the flag of this country, and to the traditions of its fathers, than do those of the people of Texas. They have never deserted a cause to which they had given their allegiance. They achieved their own independence against a power tenfold their superior in numbers and resources. They came voluntarily into this Union. They cast their lot with the people of whom they formed a part and from whom they sprang in the States of the South when the civil war came on, and were true to the death to them, for their dead are to be found upon every battle-field of the civil war, and when the confederacy went down they gave back their allegiance to the Federal Union, and they are here to-day, and they mean as long as time lasts to stand by their country. They believe as their great leader, Sam Houston, believed, that when the country was riven in twain a man's section became his country, and they adhered to it.

Now that the breach has been healed and they are again under the old flag, under the old Constitution, they will stand by it to the last. Massachusetts and New York and New Hampshire have not men that will cling to this Union longer than will the people of Texas, nor have they men that will dare the chances of battle further in defense of American institutions and American honor than the men of Texas will. I say this because it is true, because I know it to be true, and I at the same time tell you, candidly and sincerely, that we love Jefferson Davis because he represented us in a struggle in which our young men and our old men went down to their graves and by which our women were made widows and our children were made orphans. He represents us and we love him, we respect and revere him. While we cling to this Government and to the institutions of this country, and to the glorious memories of our fathers, we at the same time tell you that we stand by our past as true and honest men will ever stand by what they believe to be right.

I will vote, Mr. President, against the amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, for I never will by word, or deed, or by silence even, consent to fix a stigma upon him who was the leader of my people—and a noble leader he was—in a struggle which will ever be memorable for heroism, fortitude, and devotion unequalled in the world's history.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I will not occupy the attention of the Senate more than five minutes probably. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] has attempted to place a responsibility upon this side of the Chamber which he thinks is somewhat burdensome to bear, and as a very large share of that responsibility, if there be any serious danger that arises from it, belongs to myself. I think I am justified in stating what I regard as the exact issue in this case.

Some time ago a bill was passed granting arrears of pensions to the soldiers of the late war. The appropriation bill to provide for these arrears came from the House of Representatives, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and reported back to the Senate, containing nothing but the money to pay those arrears of pensions, plain and simple. If that bill could have been permitted to pass without other conditions, which the other side of the Chamber have sought to place upon it, it would have been a law before this day. But it could not be permitted to pass, and why? It was desired that certain other persons who have been discussed here to-night should be made pensioners as a condition of complying with an existing law to pay to those who by our statutes are entitled to their pensions to-day.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator from Minnesota will allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. Who was it that moved the amendment covering the arrears of pensions?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. WALLACE. Who was it moved the amendment to the appropriation bill covering the arrears of pensions bill?

Mr. WINDOM. Where?

Mr. WALLACE. In this body.

Mr. WINDOM. The amendment to the pension bill?

Mr. WALLACE. To the appropriation bill.

Mr. WINDOM. For these arrears of pensions?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS.] If I understand the Senator's question it is this: who moved the amendment providing for pensions for the war of 1846 to the appropriation bill to pay the arrears of pension? If that be so, I answer the Senator from Missouri, who belongs to that side of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. Correct, certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. I am quite willing to meet my full share of that responsibility. I stand here ready to-night, and so does every Senator on this side of the Chamber, to vote at once to comply with the existing law in appropriating money to pay these arrears of pensions. We desire to do that; but the Senators on the other side of the Chamber say no, you shall not pay these arrears of pensions unless you do—what? Let us see. Unless, as my friend from Massachusetts and others have said, unless, to illustrate the strong point in this case perhaps, unless you pension Jeff. Davis. I do not care to go into that. There are a great many of the same kind; I will not single him out; but that is the exact position, that we shall not vote the money, although the bill has been passed, although it is at present a law upon your statute-book that these people are entitled to the arrears of pensions, they shall not be paid, but that this bill shall be permitted to die unless we agree to another law to pension somebody else.

Now, then, how do these people appear in the matter? Let us see. The arrears of pension go to men who were disabled, who were wounded or incurred disability in the defense of their country. You propose to say these men shall not be pensioned unless we make a new law pensioning everybody who served fourteen days in the war with Mexico or who was in any kind of an engagement, no matter how small, $3 a month for his natural life, and pension men who were never disabled at all, men who received land warrants for their services in that war, and will extend that pension to the widows of those men, no matter how great that number may be.

Mr. President, I am perfectly willing, as I said a while ago, to consider a bill for pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war, but it should certainly be a carefully considered bill. I do not believe that we should withhold the arrears of pensions which the law grants until we can compel the passage of a law granting pension to a man who has received a land warrant, and who was fourteen days in the Army of the United States in the war with Mexico, and that that shall be a condition which is made here to-night on the passage of this appropriation bill. Take off, as the Senator from Maine has said, the rider which has been placed upon it, let us consider it in a separate bill where we can have time to discuss it, to amend it, and I will vote for any proper law on that question. But I am perfectly willing to accept the responsibility of going home to the soldiers of my State and saying: "You will have to wait three or four months longer for your pay," rather than be compelled to pension the class of men who have been referred to here to-night. I meet that responsibility, and my full share of it, with the utmost composure.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I may misunderstand the legal effect of the amendment—let me read it—as offered by the Senator from Missouri. It provides "that the law granting pensions to the soldiers, and their widows, of the war of 1812, approved March 9, 1878, is hereby made applicable in all its provisions to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico of 1846."

I see no provision there for the widows of those soldiers or sailors. It is applicable to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico in 1846, and not to the widows of those soldiers and sailors, as I understand.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to answer him at this point?

Mr. BECK. I desire to know whether that interpretation is correct or not.

Mr. WINDOM. As I understand the amendment, it extends all the provisions of the law of March 9, 1878, to the soldiers of 1846. Now, what are those provisions? I will not read them, but only state them. The first section describes those who shall be pensioned all "who served for fourteen days in the war with Great Britain of 1812, or who were in any engagement, and were honorably discharged, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted and drafted men."

Mr. BECK. Read the title of that act.

Mr. WINDOM. It is—

An act amending the laws granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and their widows, and for other purposes, approved March 9, 1878.

Mr. BECK. That is the description of the act. The extension made by the proviso of the Senator from Missouri is not to the widows, but it is to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico in 1846. By no sort of construction can it reach the widows. Although the act of March 9, 1878, granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and their widows, is extended so as to be applicable to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1846, it does not apply to the widows of such soldiers and sailors. That is my construction of it, and I think you will find it is a correct construction. It seems to me to be the proper and correct one, as well as the legal construction. The act referred to only indicates what rights the soldiers and sailors of the war with Mexico shall have.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator from Kentucky the same amendment there?

Mr. BECK. I have the amendment printed in the RECORD as offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me to read the original, which I hold in my hand, which I got from the Clerk.

Mr. BECK. Certainly; but I have the RECORD here.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator of course would like to hear the genuine document. The amendment reads:

Provided further, That the law granting pensions to the soldiers, and their widows, of the war of 1812, approved March 9, 1878, is hereby made applicable in all its provisions to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico of 1846.

Mr. BECK. That is precisely what I read from the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe the honorable Senator from Missouri will say that he does not mean to include the widows of these soldiers.

Mr. SHIELDS. I meant to include them.

Mr. BECK. I do not know what the Senator from Missouri meant. The lawyers of this body will, I think, decide, and the language will be construed to mean, that the provisions of law which provided for the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and for their widows is extended and made applicable to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1846, and only to the soldiers and sailors of that war, and not to the widows of either of them. It is not extended by the proviso, no matter what the mover of it intended, so as to reach the widows of the soldiers of that war, but only to the men themselves. I may be wrong in that construction, but I think I am right.

Since I am up I desire to say that the Legislature of Kentucky has instructed me to vote pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war. I was not responsible for bringing the measure before the Senate in the form in which it came, but if I had refused to vote for it, having been so instructed, my people and my Legislature could very well have said that I had disobeyed their instructions. Therefore I voted for it when it was presented, although a better and more carefully guarded bill might have been presented. It passed by a vote of 36 to 22. Among that thirty-six I find the names of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNESIDE,] the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CONOVER,] the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY,] the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG,] the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL,] and the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.] Those eight republican Senators added to the twenty-two who voted against it would have made thirty, and thus have left the democrats who voted for it in a minority of two. I find among those voting against it the names of the democratic Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] and the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] Therefore I did not regard the vote when it was cast as a party vote in any strict sense. I supposed the fact to be that we were pensioning these men because of services rendered in 1846. They were regarded as meritorious soldiers, and these pensions were granted because of the services then rendered and the magnificent empire that was added to the United States by their services in the field during that war.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] the other day, in eloquent language, told us what power we gained, what wealth was acquired, what heroism was exhibited, what extent of territory was added, and because of the services then rendered by those soldiers and sailors my Legislature instructed me to vote pensions to them as men who deserved well of the Republic, and I did so most cheerfully. I care nothing about the subsequent conduct of any of them. No complaint is made as to their conduct in the war with Mexico, and it is for that, and that only, that it is proposed to reward them now.

As to how any of those men behaved afterward I care nothing. If they have done wrong since that time, they can be punished for it, but it is now proposed to reward them for acts done in 1846, and I will not look beyond that to make exceptions. The President of the United States, General Grant, himself a soldier, four years ago sent a message to Congress when disabilities were imposed upon such of the soldiers of the war of 1812 as might have taken part in or given aid to those engaged in the rebellion, in which he said to this body and to the other House that the pensions which were granted to those men who fought in the war of 1812 were granted for acts done and for services rendered in a great war with a foreign enemy, and that it was neither manly nor proper to exclude them from the benefits to which they were entitled by reason of the services then rendered for any subsequent acts that they had done. That was a manly message, and might well commend itself to those who were citizens in war and propose to revive animosities and become belligerents in time of peace.

That message is perhaps fresh in the minds of a good many gentlemen here; and I suppose that we are not going to punish men now for acts done in the late war by withdrawing from them rights which they had acquired as early as 1846, or as early as 1812. If Senators desire to punish Mr. Davis or any other Mexican soldier for any subsequent act, why not take them before a court that would punish them for those acts, and not deprive them of rights that they had acquired years before anything now complained of had happened. Are you afraid to attempt it? You had Mr. Davis in prison, in irons, in torture, and dared not give him the trial he demanded.

I do not propose to go into any discussion as to Mr. Davis, nor to make any discrimination among Mexican soldiers, picking him out and making an example of him. He was not in the mind of the Legislature of Kentucky when they instructed me to vote for this measure, nor was any individual man or soldier of 1846 considered by it. The men who risked their lives in the war of the United States against Mexico, whose service we received, they thought ought to be pensioned. If any of them have done wrong since then, their subsequent action or conduct cannot be considered. It is too small a matter for this Senate to pick out individuals and seek to revive animosities, make disturbance, or create political excitement because some man can be named, who was a good soldier in that war, but has since done something which will distract and divide a people who want to be friends and would be friends but for demagogues who seek to establish a spurious patriotism by reopening party strife, to defeat honest and generous legislation.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire a moment for a matter purely personal, and not in the line of discussion on the pending measure. When I rose to speak the last time I alluded to the vote of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] In his reply, with some warmth he said I was nothing if not personal. I rose and asked him what I had said that was personal, and he replied—I certainly think he must have forgotten himself—with a peremptory command for me to "sit down," in a tone which certainly was unusual in this Chamber, and he accompanied it, I think, with a certain menace, that if I desired a personal struggle I should have enough of it. I did not desire to struggle for the floor when the Senator had it and was entitled to it, and I accordingly sat down. I desire now to say that I have been in the Senate three years; I do not remember ever to have made a remark personal to a Senator; certainly if I have it was unintentional. I do not remember ever to have made an unkind allusion to a Senator; certainly if I have it was unintentional. I desire further to say that the Senator from Ohio is the only Senator in this body who ever made a personal, an unkind, an uncalled for, and unparliamentary allusion to myself, and he has done that three times. If he is satisfied with his bearing to-night, I have no objection to it. Once on a former occasion I sent private word to him that his language was offensive. The difference between us in years commands me not to resent as I might resent the same words from other and younger Senators; but I do not want the Senator from Ohio to imagine that I consider his conduct to-night on this floor such as becomes one Senator to another, such as becomes one gentleman to another.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Maine says that on three times I had been wanting in personal respect or personal consideration for him.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not say that. I said more than that. You had been forward in personal disrespect.

Mr. THURMAN. Upon my word I do not know what the occasions were, nor do I at all remember the message to which the Senator alludes. I have thought the Senator from Maine is disposed to have personal controversies. I have thought that the Senator from Maine was much more disposed to make some personal point with a Senator about his consistency or about his vote than he was to consider the merits of the questions that were under discussion. I have thought that the Senator sought that kind of personal controversy; and that is what I meant by saying that the Senator was personal. But the Senator has, in my humble judgment, and with due submission be it spoken, a habit of which he is perhaps not conscious. He has a habit of interrupting the Senator who is on the floor and endeavoring to carry on a dialogue with him without any leave whatever of that Senator to submit to the interruption. I have seen that, and other Senators have seen it, and have spoken about it again and again. I do not intend that it shall be carried on with me in that way. Therefore I said, and perhaps with some heat, to the Senator to take his seat, or to sit down, because I did not intend to have a dialogue of that sort on the floor with the Senator.

Mr. President, I have been here ten years, and I think I may appeal to my brother Senators that no one has been less disposed than I to have any personal controversy with Senators; and the fact that I have not, so far as I know, or never had, a personal enemy on this floor during the time I have sat here, is sufficient proof that they think I have treated them with courtesy and respect. But I do not admire these personal debates or dialogues to which the Senator from Maine, as it seemed to me, and if I am mistaken I should be very glad to be corrected, is somehow or another addicted. I prefer to discuss so far as I can the merits of a question that is before the Senate, and not make it a subject of personal controversy between me and another Senator as to our courses in respect either to that question or to other questions that have been before the Senate or before the country.

Having said that much upon this subject, and I hope I may never have occasion to allude to it again, I wish to say another thing before I take my seat. The Senator from Minnesota seems to be under the impression that Senators on this side have made the adoption of the proposition of the Senator from Missouri a condition upon which the appropriation for the arrears of pensions should be adopted. The Senator is entirely mistaken about that. If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri had never been offered, I think there would have been a unanimous vote on this side for that bill. If that amendment were rejected, I think we are a unanimous vote upon it. No objection came to it from this side of the Chamber, so far as I know. The only attempts to load it down—no, I do not say they were attempts to load it down, but to amend it—or at least the first attempt, came from the other side, in the shape of a proposition to provide means in order to pay those arrears of pensions.

Mr. RANSOM. May I say a word?

Mr. THURMAN. Let me finish. I will be done in a moment.

The Senator from Missouri saw fit to move his amendment. I believe I was out in the cloak-room at the time. I did not know it was to be offered. I heard the yeas and nays being called; I came in and found what the question was before the Senate. I knew that I was instructed to vote for pensions for the soldiers of the Mexican war; I knew that that met the concurrence of my own judgment, and I voted for the proposition. I could do no less. I never have made it a condition, and although I hope the Senate will not reject it but will keep it on the bill, yet it is not right to say that I (and I think when I speak for myself I speak for nearly everybody else in the same category) have made that a condition upon which the pension appropriation bill should pass.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the Senator from Ohio will agree with me that if this bill be defeated it will be done because a portion of the Senate insist that it shall contain this provision.

Mr. THURMAN. Would it not be quite as just for the Senator from Minnesota to say that it will be defeated because the other side of the Chamber will not grant a pension to the soldiers who served in the Mexican war?

Mr. RANSOM. May I ask the Senator one question?

Mr. WINDOM. I should prefer one at a time.

Mr. RANSOM. If I am not mistaken, the bill for the payment of arrears of pensions came from the other end of the Capitol, from the democratic House.

Mr. WINDOM. It did.

Mr. RANSOM. Of course a democratic minority could not think of putting what the Senator from Maine has called a rider upon it, in view of what had been done elsewhere, if that had been our purpose.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill came from the other end of the Capitol, and was reported back to the Senate containing nothing but the appropriation. If those who have attached to it this amendment should be content to withdraw it and consider such a proposition in a separate bill, the arrears of pensions could be passed to-night. If they insist upon maintaining this amendment, it will probably be discussed until the bill will fail, and the result will be that the crippled and disabled Union soldier will find that his arrears of pension will not be paid until after the next session of Congress, because his neighbor, if there be any, who never was crippled, who had a land warrant for his services, who served only fourteen days in the Mexican war, could not have a pension secured to him at the same time. Or perhaps he may find it even stronger, if the amendment of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] should be voted down, that he could not receive his arrears until the chief of the confederacy should be placed upon the pension-rolls also.

There is a strong impression in some parts of the country that the time is coming when the Union soldier will not be pensioned at all until all those who fought on the other side are pensioned; and I think I may say to the Senator from Ohio that this action will very much strengthen that impression if the arrearages of pensions bill is lost for that reason.

Mr. GORDON. Does the Senator from Minnesota think it is exactly just to the southern gentlemen who have never failed to vote every pension asked to pension the Union soldiers, to make that remark?

Mr. WINDOM. I said there was such an impression. I did not make it. I dislike to have that impression strengthened, and I do say if the bill is lost on this ground and after this discussion, I fear it will strengthen that impression. I did not give any impression of my own upon that subject.

Mr. RANSOM. I dislike very much to say that if there is such an impression it must be a very ignorant impression. I know no other term to apply to it. How the Senator could even re-echo that impression in the manner in which he does it, I must say is strange to me, when the fact could not have escaped his notice that ever since southern Senators have been on this floor, almost without exception, certainly in large numbers, they have invariably voted for every measure that could be considered to be a duty, even by their best friends at the North, to the Union soldiers.

Mr. WINDOM. I could not and would not have dared re-echo that impression until the votes were cast here to-night showing a determination that this bill shall not pass unless the chief of the confederacy shall be placed on the pension-roll with the others.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, within fifteen years I have felt no such depth and fervor of patriotic emotion, of genuine catholic Americanism, as when last week I came into this Chamber, after a brief absence, while the vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] was in progress and heard the amendment read, and I saw in it the declaration of a purpose to do justice to a class of patriotic citizens in every section of the country introduced (and the Senator must pardon me for speaking of him here) by a great Union general, a man distinguished in the Mexican war and further distinguished in the late civil war—a gentleman who has had the rare fortune, the rarest of all fortunes, to represent three States upon this floor. The proposition came from the Union Army; it came from our Army in Mexico. I should have difficulty in finding an adequate statement of my satisfaction when I heard the amendment read; and especially when the first vote given in favor of its noble declaration was cast by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNESIDE,] a Union general, the luster of whose stainless sword will long illuminate the military annals of his country. I said that the days of our disturbance and dissension were over, that here was a great peace offering, that the American soldiers had been together on the plains and on the mountains of Mexico, and that our action here would help to promote the recollections of that sentiment of a common safety and a common danger which had prompted their deeds of valor in a foreign land, and to renew their devotion to all sections of their common country. When I saw that amendment presented by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, and the first vote given for it by the Senator from Rhode Island, I said I had a right to vote for it. It was my duty to vote for it. It was a measure of great magnanimity and justice, and would do more to promote the cause of pacification and the sentiment of nationality in this country than any law that ever had been put upon the statute-book. When I saw the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] when I saw my friend from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] when I saw you, Mr. Chairman, [Mr. MITCHELL in the chair,] and other gentlemen, with your faces radiant with high and generous resolve, with your hearts beating with patriotic fervor, rise up like men and carry that amendment, I felt as a patriotic American citizen ought to feel upon such an occasion, I felt that we were about to enact a measure of broad beneficence and of patriotic justice toward the soldiers of both sections; and I rejoiced that upon every occasion we southern Senators had voted for every measure that did justice to the Union soldiers. I found increased satisfaction in the fact that this measure came from a democratic House containing so large a proportion of southern soldiers.

It is wrong, sir, and I use the word in no offensive sense, for gentlemen when they themselves within one short week, before the ink is dry upon their votes, before the dust has fallen upon their tracks, when we only do the same act to-day which they themselves by numbers committed here within the last week, to say that we seek to deny justice to Union soldiers and to deny them their rights because we will not vote to exclude soldiers of the Mexican war who have been confederates. Senators, I ask with a candor which I should commend in you, can you charge as a wrong upon us a vote which you yourselves gave within less than one short week since? Is it unpatriotic in us to retain the very law of justice and honor which you assisted us to make?

Mr. President, it will not do to say that these votes are inadvertent; it will not do for Senators to escape behind the plea that the votes were thoughtless or accidental. Senators are men of age; they are men of experience; they are men of deliberation; and votes in this Chamber are not given in a minute.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly I will.

Mr. WINDOM. I have made no plea, so far as I am concerned, that my vote was a mistake or that it was given under a misapprehension.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Minnesota said that it was inadvertent.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not said that it was inadvertent.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask pardon; I understood the Senator to say so. It was then the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] who said that his vote was a mistake.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator will allow me I desire to say that had I not voted as I did the Government would probably have been compelled to pay from thirty to fifty million dollars additional without any further consideration than was given to that amendment at that time. By voting as I did I hope to secure the passage of the arrearages of pensions bill and to give the Senate time to consider the Mexican pensions hereafter.

Mr. RANSOM. Then the Senator voted that he might move a reconsideration, do I understand?

Mr. WINDOM. I voted on that side of the question, and I did move a reconsideration.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask the Senator if he voted for the purpose of moving a reconsideration? I do not say the Senator from Minnesota did, because when gentlemen give a vote against their convictions for the purpose of moving a reconsideration they are always very prompt to announce the fact. In a long legislative experience I recall no instance of a vote given with that purpose without emphatic notice.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from North Carolina has made an allusion to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly I do.

Mr. FERRY. I made the remark that I cast an inadvertent vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. I now ask the Senator from North Carolina whether he questions the truth of my declaration that I did vote inadvertently on that amendment?

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the inquiry that the Senator makes of me. I should be very sorry, I should regret it very much, if I had said anything that could induce the Senator from Michigan or any other Senator to suppose that I would charge him with the purpose of untruth or equivocation.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will bear in mind that he said votes were not cast inadvertently here, that Senators are men of experience and cast their votes with the light before them.

Mr. RANSOM. May I explain?

Mr. FERRY. I will listen.

Mr. RANSOM. There are two or three kinds of inadvertence. If the Senator meant by inadvertence that he had not thought over the effect of that vote, if he meant to say that he had not considered well its influence upon the public mind of his people, or of his section, if he meant to say that he had not weighed that vote deliberately and correctly, I agree with all the Senator has said, although he is a better judge of his motives than I am, and perhaps I ought not to assume to construe his motives. As a gentleman and a Senator it is my duty to accept the Senator's statement of his motives.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator had listened to the words with which I accompanied my motion to reconsider he would have heard that I said I did not understand the scope of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. If the Senator from North Carolina desires a more explicit statement and wishes me to give him the ground why I desire to place myself upon record differently from what I did stand, I will say to him that I did not then understand that the amendment covered the case of Jefferson Davis. I have understood since that it does. That is proof to the Senator that I had not given reflection sufficiently to know exactly the import of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. Understanding it after I did cast the vote, I sought the first opportunity to intimate to the Senate and to the country that I would move to place myself correctly on the record, for I am not prepared now to vote to give a pension to Jefferson Davis.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I have no disposition to pursue this inquiry with reference to either the Senator from Minnesota or the Senator from Michigan. Nothing could have been further from me than to disturb those Senators for one second. Whether I am mistaken or not—I hope I am mistaken, but I have such an impression—I think the Senator from Michigan voted to-night for the amendment introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] now in the chair.

Mr. FERRY. I did.

Mr. RANSOM. I do not think the Senator from Michigan will say that he did not understand when this bill passed that its scope was to give pensions to men who had been in the confederate army.

Mr. FERRY. I did not state that, if the Senator will hear just exactly what I did state; and as it seems he has not heard it I will repeat what I said. I stated that I did not understand the amendment to include Jefferson Davis. The moment my attention was called to the fact that it did include him, I reiterate what I stated, that I sought the first opportunity to place myself right. I did so by giving notice to the Senate that if the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed should prevail I would move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Missouri prevailed. I stated then that I had not comprehended the scope of the amendment, and I have now stated more explicitly that, finding it covered Jefferson Davis, I was not disposed to vote for it.

Upon this statement, drawing the line as explicitly as I am able to do, thus giving the Senator from North Carolina the ground upon which I acted both then and now, I think I am entitled to the expression from the Senator from North Carolina that my votes then and now were cast with a like bent before me and I voted inadvertently the first time.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I certainly have no right and less disposition to question the motives of the Senator from Michigan. I certainly had neither desire nor purpose to impugn his motives, and with that I dismiss the subject. I only regret that these gentlemen who voted for the amendment last week should now condemn gentlemen on this side of the Chamber for doing the very thing they themselves did not six days since. I have no right in the world to dispute that it was done inadvertently. I leave that to the gentlemen themselves.

I have a very few additional suggestions to offer. The Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Georgia have proposed that southern Senators refrain from voting upon this amendment. I would listen to any suggestion coming from those gentlemen with all the consideration of which I am capable, and I know that they reciprocate my confidence. I hope that every one of us here will vote upon this amendment, and as a Senator, the Senator from Texas, [Mr. COKE,] has so well said, that we will now vote as we intend to vote and as we always should vote, our true sentiments.

But I desire to say a word to my friends upon the other side of the Chamber. I say it to the Senator from Massachusetts who introduced this amendment. I ask Senators there to put themselves in our places and let this cup pass to them as it has come to our lips to-night. Knowing that Mr. Davis was of us and with us and that we were with him, that not he but we and our people chose him to be our leader, our chief, as you say, in the late civil war, I ask you, Senators, if as men, as American Senators, bearing the image of God upon your faces, can you look up and say that you would have us place a stigma upon a man for whose position we are responsible? Could human debasement be more complete than in the spectacle of Senators here consenting to degrade a man for that which themselves demanded of him, and which he did in the name of ten millions of people?

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to permit me one question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly I do, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I have had occasion to believe that the Senator from North Carolina deals with great candor with this class of questions. Would you, if you were in our place, consent to a law which would put President Davis upon the muster-rolls, if you were satisfied that he was not now loyal in feeling and attachment to the Government?

Mr. RANSOM. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Let me say, in putting the question, that I have the most absolute confidence and belief in the sincerity and the absolute truth of what was said by the Senator from Texas in regard to his own attachment and that of many of his associates and colleagues. I may err. As we err in forming our judgment about men who are our cotemporaries, we sometimes err in forming a judgment about historical characters; but we have to act on that judgment. In my judgment, from the belief which I derive from what I hear and know of the man, I believe President Davis not to be attached to this country to-day as the Senator from North Carolina and as Postmaster-General Key and the Senator from Texas are. I believe that he desires to revive the rebellion. I do not suppose he expects to do it himself; but he tries to inculcate into the minds of the South attachment to "the lost cause," and he has no attachment to the Government. Now, whether I err or not, that is my belief. If the Senator entertained that belief, in my place, would he vote for a law which would put him on the pension-roll? That is the question.

Mr. RANSOM. I might give the Senator an answer that would not be as frank as that I intend to give him. I might say that if I were in his place I should not have that belief; but I will meet the issue presented to me by the Senator. I tell him that if I were in his place as I am now in my place, and I speak deliberately, and I believed Mr. Davis was an enemy of this country, I not only would not pension him, but I would have for him feelings of unutterable aversion. But, Mr. President, it is impossible that Mr. Davis can be an enemy of this country.

Mr. HOAR. I think he has been.

Mr. RANSOM. No, sir; in one sense, in the sense intended by the Senator, he never was an enemy of this country.

Mr. HOAR. In the manner in which he never was, perhaps he is not now.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I protest against this unfounded assumption that Mr. Davis is an enemy to this country—to his country. I shall pronounce no eulogy upon him, nor dwell upon his public service as an American soldier and statesman. He belongs to history as does that cause to which he gave all the ability and devotion of his great nature. There I trust both. He is like all of us, human, and doubtless has his resentments, his consciousness of undeserved abuse, of outraged sensibility, and of personal disappointment. But, sir, no one can follow his career as it is written in our history and doubt for one moment that he would unhesitatingly sink all of personal mortification and selfish aspiration rather than inflict injury upon his fellow-citizens. He and his family live under the protection of the flag. His trusted friends are here on this floor, and the Senator from Massachusetts has accorded to them his confidence in their patriotism. I repeat again and again it is impossible that he can be an enemy to this country. How can he separate himself from the great impulse of the whole South for a restored country. To do so would be a wrong to his fellow-countrymen of the South, and that would be more than a crime to himself. In the balance with his duty to them the sense of personal injury would not weigh a feather with him. I deny that he has uttered at any time since the reconstruction measure an indifference to the restored Union. The judgment of history will wither with fire the charge that he seeks to perpetuate the discords of his country. For years every utterance from him has been for its growth, its development, and its material and political unity. Sir, it is true that no groan, no complaint, no remonstrance, no protest, no plea has escaped his lips; but he can have no hope and no policy but for the peace, happiness, and honor of the American people. He still has his convictions, he still has his opinions. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he had sincere convictions, the convictions of a life-time, would he willingly surrender them in a moment or to any policy?

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator says he could not. Of course he could not. Devotion to conviction of right can never be a crime in the judgment of Massachusetts.

Mr. President, we do not understand each other. The people of the South and the people of the North unfortunately are ignorant one of the other. A democratic House sent the arrears of pensions bill here a clear bill, and the first vote given for the Mexican amendment was cast by a noble character upon the republican side of the Chamber, and the amendment was passed by the aid of Senators who are his political friends, for we on this side could not pass it unaided. The Senator from Minnesota charges us with trying to defeat the pensions to Union soldiers unless the chief of the confederacy is put on the pension-roll. The record annihilates the suspicion. That bill was passed here by the aid of the votes of southern democrats; and is it right to say that the Senators who passed the bill and who passed it without amendment now demand that the pensions shall fail unless you put on the roll the chief of the confederacy?

But, sir, the Senator from Massachusetts diverted me. I wish to say to my friend from Georgia and to my friend from Alabama that I hope we will all vote upon this amendment, and vote our sentiments. I do not believe there is an honorable man in the Northern States who would have me abandon my heart, be apostate to my history, and consent to put a curse upon a name that in my soul is honored. The noble State that sent me here would and ought to disown me if I could be guilty of such base perfidy to everything that is right. Senators, for what price would you be false under any circumstances to the name and the fame of Abraham Lincoln? What would you do before you would strike the reputation of General Grant or General Sherman? You are justly devoted to the reputations of your great leaders. I have the same sentiment toward mine, and with a right as high. Yet I know the wisdom, I know the duty, and I have the heart, thank God, to come here and bring all of my devotion to this whole country of ours. I have as much right, Senators, to love it as you have. Jefferson Davis has a right to love it. He bought that right with his own blood; he purchased it with patriotic wounds. You may feebly attempt to deprive him of it by this amendment, but it will be his in history indelibly.

Have not the southern people a right to love this country? Did we not help to make it what it is? Did we not cherish it and support it and maintain it for over eighty years, and but for four years were we ever alienated from it? Will you take up those four years and array them against four ages of patriotic devotion? Cease to distrust us. The soldiers stood together breast to breast in the Mexican war. Let their names go crowned to history together. The thunderbolts of battle never divided them. Let them still be united in the gratitude of their country. Among the survivors you cannot find one in all the land who would exclude Jefferson Davis or any other comrade from the just recognition of the country they served.

Mr. President, I love the South, and I love her great names. I have an extreme sensibility for her. I have sometimes almost mourned that after the war you did not call for five hundred of us, or five thousand of us, as King Edward did at the surrender of Calais, to come up as an atonement, as a sacrifice, for what you call our great crime, that we might have given our lives to make peace and end dissension forever. Humanity would not have suffered by the example of the alacrity with which we should have stepped to that duty.

But let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have still a higher and a better sentiment in reference to my vote upon this amendment. As an American Senator, I desire that the glory of this nation shall excel that of all others, and I do not wish the American Congress to blur its records and diminish the country's fame with an act of petty proscription toward an American citizen. I recall to-day no instance in human history of intolerance or persecution or wrong that has not brought its retribution. I recall no instance, let me say to my friend the Senator from Maine, of magnanimity in man, of magnanimity in a people, that has not brought its rewards of honor and of happiness.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, it is now five minutes after four o'clock on the 3d of March. We must adjourn at twelve o'clock to-morrow, Tuesday, March 4. This pension bill passed last Friday. The amendment now complained of was inserted in this bill by the votes of eight republicans. But for their votes it would not have been inserted. The bill was finally passed on Friday by the votes of fourteen republican members of this Senate acting in conjunction with democratic Senators, whose names are given in the RECORD of the proceedings of Friday. It would have been the law of the land on Saturday last but for the intervention of the republican Senators from Minnesota and Michigan. If republican Senators are going to tell the soldiers of this country that they have lost their pensions by reason of any improper interference on the part of democrats, I want them at the same time to be told the fact that on the 28th day of February this amendment was inserted by the aid of eight republican votes. The bill was passed with a full knowledge of the effect and scope of this amendment, for no man can misunderstand it, fourteen republicans voting for it, and it would have been the law before now but for the fact that they have interfered by reconsidering it and by throwing firebrands into this body until it is likely to be lost, and lost by their action, lost because they say they are afraid it will take too much money out of the Treasury, because Mr. Davis was a Mexican soldier, and because they now seek to make the country believe that the widows of all these men are to be pensioned, and because they say there would be ten thousand confederates pensioned, when I have no idea there are a thousand, or that anybody believes there are. I want that fact to be on the record also, and let the country know that the bill is lost, if it is lost at all, by the interference of the very men who profess so much sympathy for the soldier, and that the objection that Mr. Davis might be embraced in it was an afterthought and a subterfuge to delude and deceive the men who are deprived of their pensions by the action of the radical party, against the almost unanimous protest of the democrats of the Senate. These facts being understood, republican Senators are welcome to all the political capital they can make out of the fact that Mr. Davis may possibly be benefited by it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Taking advantage of the lull in this debate, and apprehensive that it may rise again to the turbulence and violence that distinguished it in the early part of the evening, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let us vote.

Mr. DORSEY. Let us adjourn.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us pass this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. We cannot pass this bill to-night.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, pending which the Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate now adjourn.

Mr. ANTHONY. We ought not to adjourn now, because the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] has given notice of his intention to move that when we adjourn it be in respect to the memory of a late member of the House, Mr. Hartridge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn, there being on a division—ayes 15, noes 26.

Mr. WINDOM. Can we not take the vote now upon the pending bill? There is ample time to vote. I want to say also that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has a report to present from a committee of conference which ought to be acted upon before a recess or adjournment.

Mr. FERRY. I wish also to remind the Senate that I yielded the floor to my friend on my left [Mr. WINDOM] to move a reconsideration of the arrears of pensions bill, having called up the post-route bill. We could take a vote on the question now pending, and then pass the post-route bill to-night. I hope the Senate will remain here until we pass that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] reserving the right to vote if necessary to make a quorum, which I should not exercise upon a question of this kind.

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] the decision of the question to be left to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] as umpire. If this is regarded as a political question, I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will wait until I see how the vote goes.

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] If he were here, I should vote "nay." I do not know how the Senator from Nevada would vote.

Mr. WALLACE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] on all questions arising upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.] My colleague would vote "nay" and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] on all political questions. I have scrutinized the vote and decide that this is a political question.

Mr. INGALLS. I had a suspicion of that before, Mr. President.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 22; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] as amended.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have already said that I am instructed to vote for pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war. I have also said that in my judgment it is right to do so. Inasmuch as I dislike the amendment which has been adopted, I cannot on that account vote against pensioning those soldiers. I am very sorry it is included in this category, but to carry out my instructions, and also because I think these soldiers ought to have pensions, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, even with this amendment attached to it, to which I have manifested my opposition already, and that is all I can do.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, invidious and unjust as I regard the amendment just adopted, I shall vote for the amendment as amended with the same good favor that I voted the other day to pay the arrears of pensions to the Union soldiers. I simply desire to say this much.

Mr. FERRY. The amendment now agreed to by the Senate relieves the bill of a very objectionable feature—such a one as I hardly think the country is disposed to approve of, and one which I could not knowingly indorse. The original amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS,] which on my motion has been reconsidered, covered a proposition so general, and certainly to my mind so questionable, that, even in its present amended form, I do not believe it will receive the indorsement of the Senate, much less the country.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, believing as I do that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was put upon the bill for a purpose, and if successful to drive the friends of the Mexican war pensions away from it, and believing that measure to be eminently just and proper, I do not propose to fall into that trap, and therefore shall vote for the amendment as amended, believing as I do that the amendment to the amendment is unjust and improper, and never should have been put on.

Mr. BECK. I desire simply to say that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] has made the speech I intended to make.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like some of the legal gentlemen among the Senators to inform me if this amendment is not capable of the construction of carrying arrears of pension only to soldiers of the Mexican war now surviving.

Mr. SHIELDS. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri answers the Senator from Rhode Island "no."

Mr. DAWES. If there were a disability clause relating to the soldiers of the Mexican war there would be a point in the case. The Senator from Rhode Island will take notice that there is not any disability about these Mexico pensioners.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, as the time seems at last to have come on this day and night of rest when we are about to vote on this amendment, and as I intend to vote against it, I will occupy a moment in stating one of my reasons. I would vote against this amendment at any time on any bill to pension any class of citizens, and I would so vote had I no reason except that no man in my belief can tell with absolute certainty what it means. It refers to and adopts all the provisions of a certain act which act embraces soldiers, sailors, and the widows and survivors of both, and declares that they shall become recipients of a certain bounty. The pending amendment declares that all the provisions of that act shall be extended to the soldiers and the sailors who fought in a war which we have been told was one of the most glorious wars in history. If that allegation were pertinent to any question now before the Senate, it is possible it might meet with some challenge, or dissent. The merits of the Mexican war, are however quite beside the present purpose. It is proposed to enact that all the provisions of a former act shall apply to all the sailors and all the soldiers now surviving who took part in the war against Mexico.

The language of the amendment is uncertain.

One Senator, the Senator from Kentucky, has affirmed his understanding that this amendment will institute a wholly unjust and invidious rule, namely to bestow the public money indiscriminately upon all the men, the soldiers, who actually survive and the sailors who actually survive, having taken part in the war with Mexico, however well to do in the world they may be, and to deny and exclude all the widows, all the orphans, all the destitute dependents of soldiers and sailors who are dead, however much their claims might appeal to humanity or justice.

One Senator has said that he thus confidently understands the effect of the amendment. Other Senators have said that they understand that when all the provisions of an act which does include survivors of the soldiers of one war are transferred and transplanted to another class of soldiers and sailors the transfer takes with it all the inclusions, all the incidents, and that it does bestow not only on the men who live but on the destitute dependents of those who have died the benefits conferred by the act.

It would be enough for me, Mr. President, to know that so hastily has an amendment been prepared, so sudden has been the occasion in which it appeared, that patent on its face is an ambiguity so great and so radical as this. I say stopping here I would vote against this amendment in its present words for this reason.

There are other reasons which I will not state at length; indeed I will not state them at all except one of them. One would suppose from recent proceedings here, that the American nation and the American Treasury must be rich, and rich in ready cash, beyond the dreams of avarice. One would think that no project of legislation, no assemblage of simultaneous projects, to take money from the Treasury could be so vast or extravagant as to be objectionable by reason of amount, or to encounter any just criticism whatever, so that we are able to find some laudable object for which the appropriation is to be made. We have just received from the Treasury Department a statement that now, stopping where we are, it is necessary to emit bonds to the extent of $18,000,000 to provide for appropriations already assured; and when a Senator rises and states that an amendment involves forty or fifty million dollars more, the Senate does not halt or shrink; it walks with intrepidity up to the mark, and votes apparently with little reference to the question whether we can afford or whether we can pay the amount proposed.

Mr. President, I hope I shall not be a laggard in any race run to manifest sympathy, respect, admiration, or consideration for men who in any war on the side of the country imperiled their lives, received injury, or rendered service. But these bills sentimental as they may be, and gratifying to one's admiration for valor, and distinguished services and heroic patriotism, splendid as they may be as illustrations of such laudable sentiments, must deal at least rather with Arabic than rhetorical figures. They have a great deal more to do with the multiplication table than they have with figures of speech; and I think it high time before any more money is voted away to recipients, however meritorious, during the disordered dying hours of the session, to make use of chart and compass to take soundings and ascertain somewhat where we stand—high time to pay, not a little, but a great deal of heed to the tax-ridden people of this country who are to pay millions piled on millions which in my judgment could have been and ought to have been saved, involved in the legislation which has been, or is pretty certain to be effected during this session.

Mr. President, I am moved to say two or three other things on this subject, but I will spare the Senate. It is enough for this moment to know as to this amendment that if it had appeared at the beginning and not at the end of the session, if it constituted a bill by itself, if it were relieved of every incumbrance and every impediment except the vagueness and uncertainty of its terms, it would be in my judgment unsafe and unsuitable for me, so far as my vote could do so, to make it one of the statutes of the nation.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. HOAR. I have about two sentences to utter. I will yield to the Senator from Missouri, or ask him to wait until I get through as he pleases.

Mr. SHIELDS. Go on.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to argue this question at this time of night. I wish just to state one point. The soldiers of the Mexican war were quite largely very young men when they went into the war.

Mr. INGALLS. The average was twenty-five years.

Mr. HOAR. A boy of eighteen in 1846 would now be fifty years old, and in the prime of a vigorous manhood in a large number of cases. A person who was then twenty-five, which was the average age, would not now be sixty years old; he would be fifty-seven years old. Now I do not believe that any nation on earth ever made a pension law which pensioned in the prime of life, without regard to poverty, and without regard to illness, the entire soldiers of a war. We did not do so for the soldiers of the Revolution. The most ardent lover of the soldiers who saved the life of the country would not think of proposing it for the benefit of the northern soldiers in the late war, that when they reached fifty or fifty-five they should be pensioned without regard to need and without regard to health.

Mr. President, I do not believe that one of the twenty Legislatures who are said to have proposed this measure ever meant a pension law like this. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Ohio, who has cited the instructions of his own Legislature, if he believes that the Ohio Legislature, or five men in it, ever meant that their Senators should vote for a bill like this amendment, which pensions, without regard to need and without regard to illness, men in the prime of life who served fourteen days in the war of 1812. Such provisions cannot be found in the pension bill or the pension policy of any nation on the face of the earth. For that reason, among others, I shall vote against this amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am taken a little by surprise by the remarks of the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] I did not expect an attack from that quarter, and I did not expect it would be a triple attack, first on the character of the amendment as being ambiguous and difficult of construction. The honorable Senator seemed to think that he could not construe it, that it might reach widows' orphans and descendants, and so on. The ambiguities, I apprehend, are in the Senator's own lucid imagination. Sir, a more simple amendment, in my humble judgment, never was presented to the Senate. First, the law can only take effect from its passage; secondly, the provisions that apply to the soldiers of 1812 apply to those affected by this clause. Look at the section. The pensions given to the soldiers of 1812 are given to these men. It is said that the soldiers of 1812 got pensions for fourteen days' service. No such service was rendered in the Mexican war. I have already stated that from the date of this amendment, if it becomes a law, the pension commences. None can have pensions except men who served in the war, and no men served in that war for a less time than twelve months. The honorable Senator ought to know this, and with the candor of a great Senator, he ought to admit it and not try to demolish a proposition that has come here in this way, by a covert sneer at the character of the amendment.

Sir, a man may have a giant's strength, but it does not become him to use it as a giant in this kind of way, and if he is a heroic man he will not do it. That is not the way that great minds act—

Several Senators rose.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am called to order by Senators. Why, sir, I was in this body before they were, and I understand myself very well.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator alludes to me, I did not call him to order. I thought he had concluded and I rose to address the Chair.

Mr. SHIELDS. I stated that on the passage of the law the pensions would take effect. That is for the Senator from Rhode Island, because he put that question to me. Then all the other provisions which apply to the soldiers of the war of 1812 will apply to these. Turn to those provisions. There can be no mistake about them. The Senator from New York I suppose is an able lawyer, much abler than I am, but I rendered my poor service in several capacities, so that I have not much followed any one thing, and therefore I cannot claim a superiority in anything. But who takes charge of the bill? Who has rallied his forces to demolish this poor little proposition? Do you think I have not been here before to see the way these things are managed? The forces have been rallied here to demolish a poor remnant of the Mexican war who stands before you.

Reference has been made to the few simple remarks I made the other day. I do not pretend to eloquence; I speak from my heart; I speak what I feel; I am no elocutionist; I am no transcendental eloquent gentleman who sets himself up with an air of superiority over others. No man has sat in this body who has behaved more quietly and modestly than I have since I came here. Who ever heard me even talk of myself in the war? I spoke of others, gallant men, most of them under the sod to-day. I spoke of men who have won for this country more than any army ever did except the Army of the Revolution. I asked you to give a little pittance to the survivors of that army. Can it not be afforded by a country that would be enriched if it had a great many such men as those who served in that war? I understand what was meant by the reference to my remarks. Then there was an attack on the amendment, and then came a sneer at the war itself. That is one of those peculiar kind of things that are really more provoking than if the gentleman had said the whole thing was a humbug. There was a calm, assumed, and I think self-possessed sneer at the war, that it was not a very big war. Perhaps not; but it was a rather successful one; and if that gentleman ever has the fortune or the misfortune to get into such a war, he will know more about it when he gets into the service.

Now, sir, I have been a little astonished and a little surprised. How can he blame me or any man who has the heart of a man for acting as I have done? I have come in here accidentally, as it were. I did not seek the position; it was given to me without solicitation. I happened to have an opportunity—the last I shall have, I dare say—to vote in the Senate of the United States, to do what? To do an act of justice, of manly justice, and which ought to be given by the manly hearts of the members of the Senate to the few brave men who are left now as a wreck of that war. War-worn, time-worn, these poor men as I see them upon the streets appeal to me. They beseech me, some of them in the poor-houses in the Senator's own State; and yet he comes, the representative of an imperial State, and with an imperial tone speaks to his friends what they are to do with this poor little amendment. Sir, I am not accustomed to that kind of imperious way. I never permit any man to assume superiority over me in any way, and I assure you I never assume superiority over any man on God's earth.

Now, so far as the widows are concerned, this law will give the widows pensions. The law of 1878 includes the soldiers of the war of 1812 and their widows, but not orphans; and this provision extends that law to the soldiers of the Mexican war. What Senator will rise here and vote against a law because it gives pensions to widows? Not even, I dare say, the Senator from New York himself.

And then I have represented three States! Why, sir, the distinguished Senator represents one State larger than all three! [Laughter.] I had the good fortune, and I am proud of it, sir, and I tell you more, it has made me as devoted a son of America, as true to America and the star-spangled banner as if I had been born under the shadow of Bunker Hill Monument. What act of my life has not shown that I have felt in that way, whether in civil or military life? That could not happen in any other country under heaven. Now that I am here, I say to my honorable friend that when the vote was given in relation to the Mexican war veterans and so many of the distinguished Senators on the other side cast their votes for these veterans, I felt then that they were doing a thing worthy of American Senators.

Oh, yes, he has said truly, we do not understand one another. I am an Irishman by birth; I am neither a northern man nor a southern man; and when I come in here I see men who are really great all around me, and I see that the South is the complement of the North. Take either one away, and this would be no longer a great country. I look here with astonishment. Twenty years ago I had the honor of representing one of these three little States. Afterward I came into the Senate to represent Minnesota, retiring in 1859; and just the same thing was going on here then as now, an "irrepressible conflict" between the North and the South. It obstructed legislation; it paralyzed the wheels of Government; it did then exactly what it is doing now. I come back in 1879, everything is changed; the Senate is changed, the country is changed; I am changed most of all perhaps; but that is the same. On it goes, the same thing confronts me to-day that did in 1859—North and South fighting like cats and dogs again. Then it was slavery. Slavery is out of the way now. There is not a slave can live under the star-spangled banner, and I thank God for that most glorious result. But I find the same thing going on, citizens of the same Republic, heirs of the same destiny, for the same destiny they will have and they cannot escape it, are quarreling over sectional disputes. There cannot be two destinies, one for the North and another for the South. They must go up or go down together.

The southern men understand that well enough now, and I am glad they do understand it and have come to their senses. They ought to have understood it before. As an Irishman would say, "they ought to have stopped before they began." [Laughter.] But they have stopped now, and I say for all parties, Oh, what a destiny is before this country! What a destiny and fortune is marked out for this great Republic if the people are only true to themselves, if instead of dividing, separating, and quarreling among themselves they unite to put this country at the head of the world! And they can do it.

I ask pardon, Mr. President, for trespassing so long on the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am not quite sure after listening to the honorable Senator from Missouri, whether he understood me to express or imply any disrespect to him.

Mr. SHIELDS. Oh, not the least. I would have understood that very quick.

Mr. CONKLING. I rose especially for the purpose of disavowing any such intention, if the Senator ascribed it; but being up, I will call attention to the fact that after the Senator from Kentucky had placed his interpretation upon the amendment which came from the Senator from Missouri and after that restrictive interpretation had been doubted, we hear now from the Senator from Missouri himself, who I infer from his remarks is the author of this amendment—I knew before that he offered it but I was not sure that he was its author, because constantly we take up and offer amendments which find their way to our tables—we hear from him that instead of agreeing with the Senator from Kentucky in his interpretation, he understands the provision to mean what the Senator from Kentucky denied.

The Senator from Kentucky was entirely clear; if I remember aright he said he had no doubt, and fortified his statement by saying that he thought the lawyers in the Senate would all agree, that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri did not include, but excluded, widows and children. Now comes the Senator from Missouri himself and says certainly it includes widows. If it includes widows it includes other survivors.

I bring this to notice to justify my assertion that here is a proposition so ambiguous that on the spot it is differently understood by Senators; and I submit with great respect to the Senator who offered it and to any Senator who may differ with me, it is thus proved an unsafe amendment to enact into law. The Senator from Missouri seemed to think that the fact that it includes, as I incline to believe it does, widows is an objection to it in my estimation. Had the Senator observed my remark at the time, he would have noticed that I said the interpretation given to it by the Senator from Kentucky made it an invidious, and as I thought an unjust amendment, because such an amendment ought to include the destitute dependents—I believe was my expression—of those who fell in the war. The Senator will see I think that I hardly deserve the criticism in this regard which he seemed to point at me.

Mr. President, the Senator also observed that I seemed to cast a slur upon the war with Mexico. I did say that some Senator had referred to it as one of the most honorable and glorious wars in history; and I did say that were that a material issue here, some difference of opinion might be found among Senators. It is not material because it does not add to or diminish the services of those who fought that war under the authority of their Government, or the claims they have for recompense whether that war in its inception was one of the just and glorious quarrels which have become historic. For myself I believe, and I have no disposition to conceal, that it was a war declared and begun in violation of the Constitution of the United States, based upon an untruth in the beginning, based upon the declaration of a President that "American blood had been shed upon the American soil." Chancellor Kent, and not Chancellor Kent alone, but Ambrose Spencer, who was distinguished as a chief-justice of my State, and other eminent men denounced the declaration of the Mexican war and its commencement as a flagitious violation of the Constitution of the United States and an outrage upon the public law so called, the law of nations.

It was a war set on foot to extend human slavery, and to perpetuate that monstrous wrong. This does not reflect at all upon the men who fought as soldiers or sailors; it does reflect some light, however, upon a part of my meaning. Whenever in the forum of conscience or in the forum of history it is in order to investigate and investigate truly the causes, the pretenses, and the purposes which incited war by this country with our neighbor, Mexico, a good many facts must be marshaled to stand I fear in painful impairment of the allegation that it was in its inception one of the just and glorious contests which the world has seen.

I say this, Mr. President, only to show to the Senator from Missouri that my allusion to a remark made by way of glorifying the Mexican war, related not in any sense to the merits or the service of the soldiers who contended, or to any claim which they may have upon the gratitude or the purse of the country.

Mr. SHIELDS. Should that have the slightest effect on what the country owes the poor soldier?

Mr. CONKLING. On the contrary, the Senator from Missouri begins to convince me that he must have been listening to the remarks of some other Senator, and he must have supposed that they fell from me; because the only reference I made to this subject included the remark that it was entirely beside the purpose; that it did not affect the merits of this bill; all I said was that were the question here touching the merits of the Mexican war, the remark made on the other side of the Chamber might not command the assent of all the members of the Senate. I said at the time, I am glad the honorable Senator from Missouri observes that I say it now, that the justness of the war is not, as I understand it, a factor in this case.

But, Mr. President, it is enough for me to know, as I began by saying, and as I will venture to repeat, that we are invited to adopt as a statute a provision which is understood now on the spot to have meanings diametrically opposite, understood to have effects repugnant to each other, and which, understood by the Senator from Missouri, is to the effect that not only the men who served in the war with Mexico, but the widows, and, as I think the amendment means, the children as well, of those who fought in that war are to be pensioned, and that although the soldiers in whose right a pension is to be granted were never wounded and never served for any prescribed length of time greater than fourteen days. The honorable Senator has told us that fourteen days was not the term of service in the Mexican war; and yet he having been a soldier knows, I take it other Senators know that the fact does not answer the objection. We know that in an army no more numerous than invaded Mexico, there probably were, necessarily there were, many cases of men discharged long before the term for which they had enlisted had elapsed; men who, for some passing accident may have been discharged within a month, within two months, within six months, men who may never have seen a field of battle, and who nevertheless were soldiers regularly enrolled and enlisted, and who went within the jurisdiction of Mexico. Now, speaking of all these men, the Senator understands his amendment to mean that not only they, if living, not only they, although they have received land warrants already, but their widows, if they are dead, and their children, if they are dead, are to be pensioned after the rate of pay lately accorded to the few surviving soldiers of 1812.

I agree with what has been said by others, that such a scale of pensioning was never heard of for any war that has been fought on this continent, and I will venture to say it was never heard of in the world ancient or modern, civilized or barbarous; and I will add that I do not believe that the Legislature of any State intended to instruct, or ever did instruct the Senators from that State to vote for a bill either as ambiguous as this or so all-embracing in its latitude.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to detain the Senate when it is nearly daylight as it is now; but I wish to make a remark to which I invite the attention of the Senator from New York.

The Senator opposes the amendment under consideration because it embraces too much. That is one ground, because it embraces too much; because, as he says, it is all-embracing. His objections to it, then, are twofold: first, that it is too comprehensive in its provisions, and second, that it is ambiguous. That implies that if its ambiguity were removed and if its comprehensiveness were reduced, the Senator might be disposed to vote for it; because, if under no circumstances the Senator would vote for pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war, if in no form or shape he would vote for a proposition of that kind, then it is a matter of no importance to him whether this is comprehensive or not, or whether it is ambiguous or not. Being opposed to the proposition in toto, he need not trouble himself with the particulars. Therefore, when he criticises it upon the ground that it is ambiguous or that it is too comprehensive, his remarks imply that if it were made clear and were reduced to proper proportions it would get his support. Now, Mr. President, this is the thing that I wish the Senator to consider: there is no man in the Senate so great a master of language as the Senator from New York. We all confess that. There is no man more capable of making this amendment perfectly clear. There is no man more capable by apt language to eliminate from it all its excesses. Why, if the Senator is in favor of pensioning anybody who was in that war, does he not apply his acknowledged talent to reducing the amendment to proper proportions and making it as perspicuous and clear as possible?

Mr. CONKLING. Praise undeserved is satire in disguise; but I beg to assure the honorable Senator from Ohio that I take no offense at the fun he makes of me. I am ready to say that when the time shall come that he who is a master of language, he who is a master of the science and the diction of law, and competent to do that which in satire and derision he proposes to me, when the time shall come that he prepares an amendment free from the objections found to this, I shall be certain to vote for it, provided two or three other things concur. I shall want it offered at some time when Senators have slept either the night before or on some recent night, and are by consequence clear-headed. I shall want it offered at a time when the Constitution does not say that the hammer must fall a few hours afterward; and at a time when we may enjoy, as the Senate so often does enjoy, the sonorous and elaborate non-partisan dissertations wherewithal the honorable Senator from Ohio embellishes, illuminates, and expands to transparency all his great conceptions. Then too I shall want also an opportunity to take a passing glance at the balance-sheet of the nation. It will not be necessary in my case, as it is said anxious and nervous political aspirants sometimes find it necessary, before voting upon a question to go out and not only consult the signs in the zodiac, but see how all the tin roosters on all the barns stand, so as to know exactly which way the wind blows. [Laughter.] I will not ask time to do that, because I have no continental prospects to be imperiled by any mistake I may make in voting here. I shall, however, want an opportunity to look at the balance-sheet. I shall want to see whether at that particular time there is or is likely to be any money in the Treasury with which to do such a magnificent thing as in exact, appropriate, and imposing language the honorable Senator from Ohio will be sure to propose.

Mr. President, if all these somewhat varied, and as a lawyer from the Senator's State once said "multifarious" circumstances [laughter] shall concur; and if there shall be a harmonious union of all things, showing that the nick of time, the longed-for and worked-for moment has come for the honorable Senator from Ohio to make his popularity absolutely universal by adding to the endless idolizing train which follows him the serried ranks of the soldiers of the Mexican war, the honorable Senator may be sure that I will vote to add all that resplendent length of tail to his political kite. [Laughter.]

I submit to the honorable Senator that nothing could be fairer than this. I do not believe that the Senator now is at his best for so great and critical an endeavor. The Senator has during Sunday and Sunday night delivered so many eloquent and fervid speeches, he has so taxed his brain and his imagination, particularly his imagination, and many of his higher faculties, that I do not believe it within the limits of mortal possibility that he can still have reserve force enough to expend himself, I might more appropriately say spread himself [laughter] as undoubtedly he would be glad to do when he takes up the question of the Mexican war, looks over the whole field, calculates all the chances, and arranges it so that all the lights and shadows will strike as they should strike in reference to 1880 and other great and interesting epochs. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Ohio is in a jesting mood to-night; I am in earnest; in grim earnest. I am for the men who carried the star-spangled banner and planted it on the tower of the city of the Aztecs. They are the men for whom the honorable Senator from Ohio should legislate. But with his anxieties he may need to go farther. I beg him to remember those who fought on the other side. A good many of them have come across the border to live or to steal cattle—they may be a factor in elections and results, and I beg him not to be thoughtless of them. He should go very sure-footed, and not march without scouts. In every view it is an important matter, and I warn the honorable Senator not to run any risk of turning his back upon a brilliant future by doing anything without the utmost forecast. The soldiers' ballot in this country is very large; it has great force in many States; it is numerous indeed in all the States, and there are political advantages and hazards which ought, I think, to relieve this subject from the levity with which the honorable Senator from Ohio seems inclined to treat it.

Let me say further to that honorable Senator that when he is as old as I am, when he has had as much experience as I have had in those grand and placid assemblages, each a plaza de tauro, called democratic national conventions, he will be satisfied, as I am, that not in the morning at five o'clock, when he is tired, when he is under the reaction of his many speeches which have produced much exhaustion, as all of us can testify, but at some other time when he has himself thoroughly in hand, when he is able to survey the whole table and study its angles and its pockets, to see exactly how to carom not only on the red ball but on the black, and on the Chinese, [laughter,] then and not till then he should take his cue and prance proudly to the fore as the champion political billiard player of all the hemispheres and all the ages. [Laughter.] That is his mission and destiny; and if he is true to it, his name will be "a light, a landmark on the cliffs of fame"—the name of one, prominent not only as a statesman, but as a politician and candidate, able to manage as many horses running as fast in as many different directions as one man ever attempted to drive or to ride. I assure the honorable Senator from Ohio that he entirely mismeasures his opportunity; he cruelly belittles his own powers and possibilities if he fails to appreciate that the farthestmost disk to be seen in the political firmament may be in some measure influenced or deflected in its bearing on Ohio by what may be done in the ultimate disposition of questions concerning the veterans who fought in the Mexican war.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I shall certainly not engage in any encounter of wit, and much less of words, with the Senator from New York. I only wish now to put in a claim to his eternal gratitude for having enabled him to make one of the happiest speeches of his life, and at the same time I wish to say that when he charged me with levity in what I said he was quite mistaken. The levity is all on the other side. The Senator must have discovered that I have a certain weakness for logic, a certain proneness to analysis, and when the Senator made his objection to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri that it was too ambiguous and that it was too comprehensive, this proneness of mine led me at once to think what then ought the Senator from New York to have done? Ought he not to have reduced the comprehensiveness of this amendment so as to bring it within proper proportions, and ought he not to have exercised that wonderful faculty of language he possesses so as to make it perfectly perspicuous? And remembering that this amendment was offered some days ago, and that there was ample time, (for it needed no excuse and the Senator does not require much time for any such work as this,) I could only understand that the Senator was not attacking this amendment upon its broad merits, but that he was finding fault with small matters, and which was not quite worthy of his ability. It did seem to me that if he were earnestly in favor of granting pensions to anybody engaged in the Mexican war he would have set to work to amend this proposition so as to make it conform to his ideas. Now, what does he say in reply to that suggestion of mine? Why, that I ought to do that work. I am content with the amendment as it is. I am not the man who thinks it is too comprehensive. I am not the man who thinks it is ambiguous. I am not the man who has made any such objection to this proposition. It is the Senator from New York who criticises the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. It is he who says it is ambiguous; it is he who says that it is too comprehensive; and, therefore, if it needs amendment, the amendment ought to come from him and not from me who am satisfied with the proposition of the Senator from Missouri as it now stands.

Further, as to what the Senator has said in respect to the elections and popularity and riding horses in different ways and all that, I can only say again that I enter into no controversy or complication with the Senator from New York in any matter of wit or dramatic power or graphic description. That I cannot do. I was quite serious in the suggestion I made that as the remarks of the Senator from New York seemed to imply that there might be a proposition for which he would vote, but he would not vote for this because it was too comprehensive and because it was too ambiguous, he should prepare a proposition that was not too comprehensive and that was perfectly clear and perspicuous, and then I would be willing to consider that and see whether it is more proper than that which is now before the Senate. The Senator declines to do that.

The Senator indulges in his humor and his great command of language to make this hour in the morning, five o'clock in the morning, very enjoyable indeed. I thank him for doing so. It has made half an hour pass very pleasantly to me, and it has to the Senate, and if there has been any laugh at my expense, I have enjoyed it as much as anybody.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I know the anxiety we must feel now in settling this question and getting out of here, but I want to state that I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, and I then voted for the passage of the bill. After reflection on the subject and remembering that the soldiers of the Winnebago and Black Hawk wars were left out in all these bills, I voted for the reconsideration that I might offer an amendment to include the soldiers of those wars. The Senate refused to adopt that amendment, and many of the Senators who were anxious for the other amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri seemed among the most anxious to vote it down. Having failed to get that amendment in the bill, so as to include all those soldiers who had served full twenty years before these others, men who are now at least seventy to eighty or ninety years old, I shall feel it my duty to vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. Unless he include them and has these soldiers cared for, I cannot now vote for the other.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I think we ought to take a little notice of the attitude in which we shall be looked at by the world at large. Here only a few years ago we were unable to hire money without paying 6 per cent.; but by a process of having our revenues exceed our expenditures for a considerable number of years we have brought the rate of interest down to 4 per cent. Among all the nations of the world we are perhaps almost the only one that has to-day a revenue over expenditures. It has been our pride that we were a debt-paying nation, and that we had a sinking fund by which 1 per cent. of the debt was to be paid every year, and if so paid it would lead to a very early extinction of the whole public debt.

Early in this session I was apprehensive that the amount of the appropriations at this session would be large. There was a bill before us to reduce the revenue, which I resisted to the extent of my ability. We have not only made our regular annual appropriations as large as usual, but some of them in excess, especially the bill we passed upon to-day. In addition to that, we have passed a pension bill that, according to the best information we can get, will place an unusual burden of $36,000,000 upon the Treasury, and this amendment which is now pending, I am satisfied from the investigation I have made on the subject, will surpass even any of the estimates that have been mentioned on the floor as to its actual and ultimate cost.

Mr. President, let me say that the world is not unaware of the transactions in the American Congress. During the past month the funding process has been going on at the rate of three or four million dollars a day. Our own people are looking at what is being done here; and since the day before yesterday they have allowed their subscriptions to fall down to no more than as many hundreds of thousands as we were taking in of millions before that time. Therefore, if Senators suppose that we can go on in what appears to me this very reckless manner of having our expenditures so far surpass and exceed the amount of revenue, I think they will find themselves very much mistaken when they go home and see their constituents.

Mr. WINDOM. I want myself but one minute, and I shall keep myself within the line of remark pursued by the Senator from Vermont. Within one year after the passage of the pension bill for soldiers of the war of 1812, we increase the appropriation $1,500,000 for a single year for that purpose. That war was sixty-six years ago. The average for that war will not be less than two and a half million, probably much more. We now propose to apply the same principles exactly to a war which happened only thirty-two years ago. I think it not unsafe to assume that the cost will be ten times greater per annum than that of the war of 1812, which would be $25,000,000 a year. Assuming that these pensioners live, on an average, fifteen years—which is certainly a very safe assumption when we remember that our young friend from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] was a soldier in the Mexican war—assuming that they live fifteen years, it will amount at least to $375,000,000 before we get through with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] though it is quite probable he would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER.] If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] I would vote "yea" if at liberty to do so.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. My colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.]

Mr. BOOTH. My colleague [Mr. SARGENT] is absent and paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] My colleague would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs, shall another amendment that was made to the bill be engrossed and shall the bill be read the third time?

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. GORDON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] Unless my vote should be necessary to make a quorum, I withhold it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, (when his name was called.) The pair under which I have abstained from voting with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] relates only to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. I am satisfied if the Senator from Indiana were here he would vote, as I take great pleasure in doing, on this question, "yea."

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON,] but I take it for granted that he would vote "yea;" and so I shall vote "yea" on this subject.

Mr. DENNIS, (when the name of Mr. SPENCER was called.) I was paired with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER,] I am informed he would have voted "yea," as I shall vote. I vote "yea." He would have voted "yea" also if he were here.

So the bill was passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the post-route bill, which will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan to give way till I make a report from a conference committee.

Mr. FERRY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House, No. 6240, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

WILLIAM WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. D. C. ATKINS,
M. J. DURHAM,
CHARLES FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have leave to sit during the recess, and the necessary expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 71) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives; which was read the first time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is a provision made in the general bill, I believe, for thirty days' extra pay. This will be sixty days additional, making ninety days. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. May I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that I think it is necessary that this resolution should pass if the Senate desires to accomplish the purpose indicated by the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am aware that if the Senate desires to pay ninety days' extra pay to all its employés it ought to pass, but I am opposed to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The debate proceeds by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to interrupt the Senator from West Virginia, or ask him to allow me to do so, in order to say that the provision of which he speaks is in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. The committee of conference have agreed to disagree upon that bill, and I desire to ask for the appointment of another committee; but I wish also to state that after a very full and careful consideration of this bill the committee can agree upon every question involved in it substantially except upon the political questions involved in the three hundred and tenth and three hundred and eleventh amendments; and I think now, when we are within a few hours of the closing hours of this session, we may as well understand that the question of an extra session depends upon our agreement or disagreement upon political questions in the nature of legislation involved in two or three bills now pending between the two Houses, and if it is the intention of the gentlemen in this Chamber to insist on this legislation of course there can be no agreement, but there must be an extra session. I move that a further conference be appointed on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; and I now desire to say to the Senator from West Virginia that if the proposed agreement should be made final, the resolution of the Senator from Delaware will be essential, that is if any additional pay is to be given to the employés.

Mr. CONKLING. You mean that there will be no provision except this?

Mr. ALLISON. If the bill fails or if a final agreement is reached I think this will still be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Iowa if the papers are in possession of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. They are on the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate again insist on its amendments to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill, so called, and ask a further conference.

Mr. ALLISON. No; the House have already asked for a further conference. I move to agree to that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

Mr. GARLAND. I understand the subject-matter of this resolution is in the deficiency bill and not the legislative bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Arkansas is right.

Mr. GARLAND. My motion was to amend the deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is right, but it does not change the statement I made.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well; I do not want any misunderstanding about it, for I am much attached to the proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. May I inquire whether there was any objection continued to the resolution which I offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was made, and it was not to the knowledge of the Chair withdrawn. The Chair will again ask for objection after the motion of the Senator from Iowa is disposed of, if the Senator desires. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate again insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Chair was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Delaware that he will again ask if there is objection to the second reading of the joint resolution offered by him. Is there objection?

Mr. BAYARD. I understand a resolution of precisely similar tenor has been introduced and probably passed the House of Representatives. There is no idea that there will be anything like either extended or double pay to these employés, and the time there given them is sixty days.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is a provision in one of the bills for thirty days' extra pay.

Mr. BAYARD. That has been stricken out, and I believe—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. RANSOM. My friend from West Virginia did not understand the Senator from Iowa. He said that if the resolution of the Senator from Delaware passed he would see that the provision referred to by the Senator from West Virginia should be stricken from the appropriation bill, so that there would be but one provision made on the subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In addition to that, if there shall be an extra session, of course everybody will be paid, so that there is to be double pay somewhere or somehow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the second reading of the joint resolution?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; I object. I have objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot be read the second time to-day.

HOURLY MEETING.

Mr. WINDOM. I am about to move that when the Senate adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at one o'clock on the 3d day of March; but, before making the motion, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour and the call of the Calendar under the Anthony rule may be dispensed with when the Senate meets.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Chair entertains the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, he will announce what was just ordered by the Senate, the new conference on the legislative bill. The Chair appoints Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK. The Chair will now entertain the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes to-morrow, at whatever hour, the morning hour and the call of the Calendar under the Anthony rule be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that when the Senate shall meet on its adjournment from to-day until to-morrow, the morning hour and the call of the Calendar under the Anthony rule be dispensed with so that whatever there is of unfinished business on the appropriation bills may be considered immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. I now move that when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet at one o'clock p. m. on Monday, the 3d day of March.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire if any Senator knows when we are likely to adjourn this morning, or how long we are to be asked to stay here. If much longer, an adjournment to one o'clock will give us no chance for sleep at all.

Mr. FERRY. I will answer the Senator from New York so far as I am concerned, conducting the pending bill, which consists of two sections, one covering all the post-routes, and the other is an extension of time for special service, that it has been intimated by the Senator from Iowa that he will move to strike out section 2, so that it will leave section 1 covering the post-routes simply. With that view I shall ask that the bill be passed without reading.

Mr. PADDOCK. I shall desire to renew the request for concurrence in the House amendment to the bill of the Senate to which the Senator from Ohio once objected, he having concluded to withdraw the objection thereto. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday, the 3d day of March, at one o'clock in the afternoon.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK. Now, I ask the Senator from Michigan to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. FERRY. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have recommended the striking out of all after the word "established," in line 4 of the House bill, and inserting the Senate bill, commencing with the word "Alabama."

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Michigan to yield to me to call up a resolution I introduced on last Thursday by order of the special committee. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the bill is read, may I ask the Senator from Michigan whether it is important that we stay here now to pass this bill; and before the Senator answers I wish he would hear an observation I wish to make. I understand there are to be this morning burial services, and if we are to stay here to read this bill through and act upon it and do the other things which seem to be waiting now, we shall be here two or three hours longer.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will allow me, it is necessary that this bill should be enrolled, and unless some objection is raised, I shall ask that by unanimous consent it be passed without reading, as it covers simply post-routes and has been examined very closely by the committee, and I think there is but one amendment. The Senator from Ohio desires to make one amendment, and the Senator from Kansas simply two amendments, and they will be sent to the Chair now that they may be considered.

Mr. CONKLING. Can you get unanimous consent?

Mr. FERRY. I ask if there is any objection to having the bill passed without reading, covering simply post-routes, and nothing else?

Mr. WINDOM. No legislation?

Mr. FERRY. No legislation whatever; nothing but post-routes.

Mr. COCKRELL. What becomes of the second section?

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Iowa moves to strike out the second section. I have no objection to that motion under the circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not insist upon the reading of anything, but I insist on action upon it. That is what I ask.

Mr. FERRY. That will follow, as a matter of course. I offer the following amendment—

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let me get that section stricken out first.

Mr. FERRY. I understand that the bill is to be acted on without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not so understood.

Mr. FERRY. Will the Chair take the sense of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair takes the sense of the Senate. The Senator from Vermont, who now occupies the chair, objects. He is unwilling to consent that any bill shall pass this body without reading, but he will endeavor to see that it is read pretty fast.

Mr. FERRY. Then proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to the bill (H. R. No. 6126) to establish post-routes in the several States herein named.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn—ayes 5, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. FERRY. There are other Senators who have not voted. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will count the Senate to save that time. [A pause.] Thirty-nine Senators are present. There is a quorum. The motion to adjourn is lost; and the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the substitute.

The Secretary read the amendment reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. FERRY. In line 956, I move to amend the amendment by inserting under "Kansas:"

From Council Grove to Cottonwood Falls.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. After line 1954, I move to insert under "Oregon:"

From Centre Village, via Harlem and Central College, to Westerville;

From Marysville, via Broadway, Bakers' Creek, York, and Mount Victory, to Kenton.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. In line 1964 I move to strike out "Sinslow" and insert "Siuslow."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. MITCHELL. After line 2006 I move to insert under "Oregon:"

From Hillsborough to Laurel.

That amendment was submitted to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads yesterday.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I move to strike out all of section 2, after the figure 2, down to and including the word "law" in the sixteenth line, being the whole of section 2 except the clause:

And any provision of statute in conflict with this provision is hereby repealed.

This is the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from section 2 the following words:

That in cases where special service has already been placed on routes named in this act the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, extend such service until the time when service can be obtained by advertisement. And whenever an accepted bidder shall fail to enter into contract, or a contractor on any mail-route shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, or when a new route shall be established or new service required, or when, from any other cause, there shall not be a contractor legally bound or required to perform such service, the Postmaster-General may make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route, without advertisement, for such period as may be necessary, not in any case exceeding one year, until the service shall have commenced under a contract made according to law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish post-routes."

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. ALLISON, from the select committee appointed by the Senate under the resolution of the 5th of June last to inquire into what connection, if any, Senator MATTHEWS had with any real or pretended frauds or other wrongs committed in the conduct and returns of the election in the State of Louisiana in 1876 and with any promises of protection or reward, if any, made by any one to one James E. Anderson, and others, &c., submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 1685) to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses, to be left as the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendments made by the House of Representatives, if the Chair correctly understands the question.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not like to have it passed without the assent of a larger number than there are present, and I do not push the bill to-night.

SALE OF INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senate to concur in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 373) to amend an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Ottos and Missouria and the Sac and Fox of the Missouri tribes of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to lay aside informally the pending bill, and to take up for concurrence the amendment of the House of Representatives, which will be reported for information.

The Secretary read the amendment of the House of Representatives, which was to add at the end of the bill the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That bona fide claimants at present occupying lands under the provision of the act of which this is amendatory may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be allowed additional time for making the deferred payments required by said act for the land so claimed and occupied by them in good faith not exceeding one year on each payment so required to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this amendment, returned by the House of Representatives, to the Senate bill? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendment, which the Chair understands the Senator from Nebraska to move.

The amendment was concurred in.

DEATH OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HARTRIDGE.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of Hon. JULIAN HARTRIDGE, of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be reported.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with profound regret of the death of Hon. JULIAN HARTRIDGE, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the House do now suspend the consideration of other business, in order to pay proper respect to the memory of the lamented deceased.

Resolved, That in token of regard for the memory of the lamented deceased the members of this House do wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House do communicate these resolutions to the Senate of the United States.

Resolved, That out of further respect to the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. JULIAN HARTRIDGE, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Georgia, and tenders to the family and kindred of the deceased the assurance of sympathy under their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the members and officers of the Senate will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, no higher tribute can be paid to our common humanity than to assert the truth that no man dies without leaving some mourner over his ashes. No life is so obscure, its light so dim, but that its going out leaves a shadow on some other life, and the length of that shadow, the extent of the sorrow felt at his death, is in some degree the measure of a man's usefulness while living.

Tested by this rule, the distinguished man to whose memory we now pay tribute had already filled, though scarcely in the prime of his manhood, a sphere of exalted and extended usefulness.

Born and reared amid the refinements of the most cultured society; accustomed to the companionship of the ablest and most distinguished men of his State and section; commanding the respect and even the admiration of the Representatives of the entire Union, with whom he had served, he nevertheless won and held to the last the confidence, esteem, and affection of the unlettered, the poor, and the friendless among his constituents. His generous philanthropy and noble sympathies touched the whole circle of humanity at its every point, and all classes and creeds among the people he served mourned his death as that of a champion and friend.

It was my fortune, sir, to be one of the committee who bore back to his home by the sea and to a confiding constituency all that was mortal of JULIAN HARTRIDGE. It was my fortune to observe the extent of the loss to his people and the demonstrations of popular affection, of gratitude, and of grief. Could you, sir, have witnessed, as I did, the spectacle of the entire population of his native city thronging its streets and following his remains to the grave, you would agree with me that it was a demonstration worthy the memory of any man. Such an exhibition of sorrow, felt alike by both races, at the death of a Representative from a Southern State, under the peculiar untoward circumstances which surround us, will be, when rightly understood, a revelation and a sermon to those who now misapprehend us. Like every true Representative of southern sentiment, JULIAN HARTRIDGE was a friend to the colored race, receiving its recognition and gratitude while he lived and its homage when dead. I ask permission in this connection to quote from a speech made by him during an exciting debate in the House of Representatives. He said, referring to the colored race:

There is some feeling on our part toward this race among whom we were born and reared, and with whom we daily live. There is scarcely one of us upon this floor from that section who can look back to the days of his infancy or childhood without seeing something to bring up pleasant and loved memories in connection with this race. For my part, were I to seek to outrage this colored race, there would rise up to rebuke me the memory of the nurse of my infant years—the memory of her whose bosom, although dark with the hue of slavery, yet tenderly and softly pillowed my infant head; whose hands, although hardened by toil, yet kindly ministered to my infant wants; whose voice, although untrained and untutored, sweetly sang the lullaby that soothed my infant slumbers. I tell you, gentlemen, there are ties of interest, there are ties of policy, there are ties of memory and the best emotions of the heart to bind the white people of the South to the colored race.

Sir, to the sincerity with which he spoke these eloquent words, let the scene I am about to describe bear witness. Around the hall in which his remains were laid, and along the streets and at his grave, were the congregated thousands of Savannah's colored inhabitants. In the formal and grand procession which escorted his body to the tomb, the splendidly equipped colored infantry and artillery marched, at their own solicitation, with solemn tread and reverent mien. His former slaves, freed from servitude for more than thirteen years, many of them with heads whitened by age, vied with each other for the honor of bearing his coffin.

But, sir, there was another incident connected with this demonstration which I think worthy of especial mention, because it not only bears witness to the character of Mr. HARTRIDGE and the sincerity of his professions, but is a silent, impressive tribute to that peculiar institution under which he was born and reared, now passed away forever. In advance of congressional committee, taking precedence over distinguished visitors and even of his kindred, accompanying the bereaved wife and children of our deceased friend, as members of his immediate household, were the family servants. First among these was that old colored nurse, her form bent with age and quivering with grief, whose bosom, in his own impressive language, had pillowed his head in infancy, whose hands had ministered to his wants, and who had so often sung her untutored but gentle "lullaby" over his "infant slumbers." Sir, I am tempted to say in this connection that there are myriads of such ties and memories which, undisturbed by adverse influences, would be the surest, safest, and most enduring guarantee of the progress and the political and personal rights of both races at the South.

Mr. President, I shall not attempt a biographical sketch of the life of Mr. HARTRIDGE, nor make specific references to his triumphs at the bar, on the hustings, or in deliberative assemblies. This has been done in a manner most satisfactory by his colleagues in the House. I prefer to attempt a brief analysis of those splendid endowments of mind, of heart, and of person which so distinguished him.

With a vigor of intellect and a magnetic presence that gave him command of men; with a rigid integrity and love of justice that gave him the confidence of men; with a nature the melody and harmony of whose sympathies gave him the love of men; with an eloquence and strength of utterance persuasive and convincing; with a love of his whole country that quickened into new life the dormant patriotism of others, it is not too much to say of him that there is no height of distinction nor breadth of usefulness to which he might not reasonably have aspired.

His chief mental defect seemed to have been an indisposition to great intellectual effort. That his mind was one of unusual brilliancy none who knew him well will deny; and yet while his influence in the House was great, he rarely spoke. There was in him a hidden or rather repressed power, which, when fully aroused under the guidance of a beautiful culture and of a heart devoted to truth, was almost irresistible before juries or the people, or in deliberative bodies.

brave to know fear, he shrank from an act of cruelty or injustice with the timidity of a child. Too proud to brook an insult or to give one, yet his spirit was as gentle as a woman's, and as tender in the depth and sweetness of its affections.

He was without hypocrisy or affectation, and so despised the least semblance of ostentation as to give him at times the manner of austere reserve. Behind this distant manner, however, there was a native courtesy, sincere and knightly, a generosity almost prodigal, a capacity for friendships devoted and true, and a geniality of temper uniform and perennial. How could he be otherwise? Men are molded, Mr. President, not only by the influences of home and its associations, but by the peculiar civilization under which they are reared, and even by the climate and the scenery of the country around them. JULIAN HARTRIDGE grew up under a civilization whose center was the home and the home affections, under a climate where the blue skies were rarely overcast but by a passing cloud, where the air was genial, soft, and balmy, and where the forests were clad in perpetual green.

His death, so sudden and unexpected to his friends, was not a surprise to him. He heard the muffled tread of the grim king, and spoke freely of his approach. He stood calmly on the verge of the undiscovered country, on the crest of that great water-shed from which flow in opposite directions the rivers of time and of eternity—the one backward to the ever lost, the other forward to the everlasting; and while we were yet hoping for his recovery he peacefully crossed that dark line we all must pass which separates this life from the vast and vague unknown. His career was short, his life closing at its noon, while the sun was still shining on higher eminences just before him. It closed on a career incomplete, yet pure, bright, and honorable, and before the shadows of age had darkened his intellectual vision or dimmed one ray of his genius.

In his beautiful southern home we have buried him, near those wild and weird and enchanting solitudes which he ardently loved and from which he drew so much inspiration in his boyhood and maturer years. Over his grave will grow the flowers that never fade, and the ceaseless music of the pines will fitly emblem the grief of his grateful people.

MR. BOOTH. Mr. President, when an observance like this occurs in the busy hours of a closing session it is apt to seem like an idle ceremony. The duties of public life are so varied and pressing, its calls so incessant, its avocations so absorbing, that there is little time left for sentiment or the indulgence of grief.

Our numbers are constantly changing by death and by the vicissitudes of political fortune; but the leave-taking is short, and the business of to-morrow will make the grief of to-day only a memory. "The strong hours conquer us." It will be so when we shall severally disappear—even those of you Senators who play the greatest parts on this great stage. The actor makes his exit; and however well he may have performed his part, whatever plaudits he may have won, the curtain does not fall, and the play goes on.

The time has gone by, if indeed it ever was, when the loss of any life will seriously influence the permanent direction of public affairs. It is true that no man's place can be filled by another; it is equally true that it is not essential it should be. In the vast aggregate value of the largest unit is scarcely appreciable. A heart has ceased to beat; it is one of millions. The struggle of a life has ended; the struggle of human life never ends. How insignificant is the individual life to the whole of humanity! Yet what an awful gift it is to each of its possessors, this strange personality of ours, which isolates us from all else and yet makes all that is a part of us. Nor sun, nor moon, nor stars, nor past nor present can be, save as they are a part of us.

Life with its possibilities is an awful gift, and when it is bereft the event is unspeakably solemn. Custom familiarizes us with the forms of death, fashion hides their significance with pageantry; only the "stricken heart of love" realizes with what dark eclipse they come. It is well that we should pause, even in the busiest hours, when a comrade falls, not more as a mark of respect for his memory than to receive for our own good the lesson of his life and death.

The memory of JULIAN HARTRIDGE cannot be other than a priceless possession, even in their sorrow, to those who loved him. It was not my pleasure to know him, but by order of the Senate I was one of the committee which attended his remains from this Capitol to the beautiful city where he was born, where he was married, where his children were born to him, where he had spent his whole life, and where he is buried with his fathers. In that community which had known him all the days of his life, all his outgoings and incomings, I felt that I knew him too. There was a tenderness in the mention of his name by all classes, which only a life filled with tender respect for the rights and feelings of others could have won. There was a warmth of expression that showed how he had grappled his friends with hooks of steel. There was that high respect which is only conquered by a life of probity and courage.

I think his life must have been a happy one. The lines seem to me to have fallen to him in pleasant places. No life is free from struggles, trials, temptations, and failures, of which the world little knows, and the deepest scars are within. His life was in a great epoch. It marks its great transition, that the slaves who had borne him on their backs and fondled him on their knees in his childhood, as free men tenderly carried his body to the grave; still loving the dear young master, panoplied in American citizenship, they walked beside his hearse. His lot was cast with a community cultivated, tasteful, generous, hospitable, and self-respectful. There he lived for fifty years, and dying left no enemy or reproachful friend. Who of us can desire or deserve a more fragrant memory?

Mr. LAMAR addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

Mr. GORDON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. WADLEIGH] was unavoidably detained from the Senate, and I ask, therefore, permission to have his remarks printed which he would have delivered if present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be entered.

Mr. GORDON. I ask that the Senate agree to the resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions presented by the Senator from Georgia.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. GORDON. I move as an additional mark of respect that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and forty-two minutes a. m. Monday, March 3) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 1, 1879.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that it has been a matter of physical impossibility to complete the Journal, and it will therefore be necessary to defer until Monday morning the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I understand that the objection made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to my resolution offered yesterday for the consideration of business on the Speaker's table is withdrawn. I ask that the resolution may be considered now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia offered yesterday a resolution in reference to proceeding with business on the Speaker's table at the session of the House this evening.

Mr. ATKINS. Is that to be the exclusive business?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. PAGE. And conference reports?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCALES. I am bound to object.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to report at this time from the Committee on War Claims and have passed the bill (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, and for other purposes. This is a bill of public importance, to which, I think, nobody will object; and if it be not passed this morning, it must inevitably fail. It provides merely for paying accounts allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury; and it can be passed in a few minutes.

Mr. SAPP. Is it a long or a short bill?

Mr. EDEN. The schedule of claims need not be read unless somebody insists upon it, and if that be not read the bill can be disposed of in two minutes. It is the bill which we usually pass every session.

Mr. HALE. How much money does it cover in the aggregate?

Mr. EDEN. It includes one thousand and thirty-four claims, all from the loyal States, except that the State of Tennessee is included.

Mr. HALE. These claims aggregate how much?

Mr. EDEN. Two hundred and forty-six thousand eight hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty-five cents. There is not an item in the bill that has not been approved by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. If this bill has passed the vigilant scrutiny of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] and meets his approval, I think we can safely pass it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so too.

Mr. EDEN. I ask that the bill be read, omitting the schedule of claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers, under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, since January 17, 1877, namely:

SEC. 2. That the agents appointed under the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of the act approved July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," and acts amendatory thereof, to investigate and report upon all claims filed under said act, are hereby authorized to administer oaths and affirmations, and to take depositions of witnesses.

SEC. 3. That all claims not presented and filed under said act, and the acts amendatory thereof, prior to the 1st day of January, A. D. 1880, shall be forever barred.

Mr. EDEN. I am instructed by the committee to offer the following amendments:

In line 1337, page 51, strike out "Halter" and insert "Hatter."

In line 1341, page 52, strike out "Kiener" and insert "Keener."

In line 1403, page 58, strike out "Syles" and insert "Syler."

In line 1569, page 65, strike out "Staliaker" and insert "Staliaker."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes, and move that they be non-concurred in.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am also requested by the Committee on Appropriations to ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the deficiency bill Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. SPARKS, and Mr. BAKER of Indiana.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. BAKER of Indiana.

EXPENSES OF JUDICIARY SUBCOMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, presented to the House vouchers of the sergeants-at-arms of expenses of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee at Chicago and New York; which were referred to the Committee of Accounts.

TRUSSES TO DISABLED SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER. There was a bill last night ruled out which the Chair promised he would call attention to this morning. He declined to allow it to come in under the order provided for the evening session, as he did not think it was a pension bill, and was unwilling, with due regard to his obligation to the House, to allow anything to come in except what the order provided should be considered.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask to take up Senate bill (S. No. 1285) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for furnishing trusses to disabled soldiers," approved May 28, 1872, and put it on its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for furnishing trusses to disabled soldiers," approved May 28, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that said section shall read as follows:

That every soldier of the Union Army, or petty officer, seaman, or marine in the naval service, who was ruptured while in the line of duty during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, or who shall be so ruptured thereafter in any war, shall be entitled to receive a single or double truss of such style as may be designated by the Surgeon-General of the United States Army as best suited for such disability; and whenever the said truss or trusses so furnished shall become useless from wear, destruction, or loss such soldier, petty officer, seaman, or marine shall be supplied with another truss on making a like application as provided for in section 2 of the original act of which this is an amendment: Provided, That such application shall not be made more than once in two years and six months. And provided further, That sections 2 and 3 of the said act of May 28, 1872, shall be construed so as to apply to petty officers, seamen, and marines of the naval service, as well as to soldiers of the Army.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCALES. Is there any means of testing the sense of the House as to whether or not we shall have a morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Yes, by moving to suspend the rules; or the House can vote down the bill now pending as the sugar bill, or dispose of it as it may see fit, and that will open the way to the gentleman's object.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call for the regular order of business.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the rules of the House be so amended that all communications and propositions in relation to appropriations shall be considered, and all bills making appropriations for the several branches of the public service hereinafter named shall be reported, as follows:

Bill for consular and diplomatic expenses, by the Committee on Foreign Affairs;
For the support of the Army, by the Committee on Military Affairs;
For the Navy, by the Committee on Naval Affairs;
For expenses of the Indians, by the Committee on Indian Affairs;
For payment of invalid and other pensions, by the Committee on Invalid Pensions;
For the service of the Post-Office Department and transportation of the mails, by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads;
For rivers and harbors, by the Committee on Commerce;
For public buildings, by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds;
Which said bills shall be reported with like conditions and restrictions as the same are now reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. CUTLER, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1878; 224,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 56,000 for the use of the Senate, and 20,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Many members called for the regular order.

THE SUGAR TARIFF.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill (H. R. No. 6134) to regulate the duties on sugar, which the House is considering under a suspension of the rules. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. BURCHARD. Although I am now entitled to an hour to discuss the pending bill relating to duties on sugar, yet I consider it very important for the Treasury that some action should be taken, and I want a vote of the House as soon as the pending propositions upon which the House is to vote are fully understood. It is important that either the proposition presented by the majority of the committee or that presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] shall be adopted; and therefore I propose to the House that a vote be taken on the bill and amendments after one hour's debate, in speeches of ten minutes each. Though I am entitled now to an hour, I am willing to confine myself to the ten minutes.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope that will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that at the termination of one hour from this time the vote shall be taken upon the pending bill.

Mr. WOOD. I object.

Mr. BURCHARD. If objection be made, then I will proceed and occupy my hour.

Mr. WOOD. I am chairman of the committee and have a right to be heard on this question.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Is it in order to move that the bill be laid upon the table?

The SPEAKER. At the end of the hour of the gentleman from Illinois there will be an opportunity to move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to be heard on this question before it is voted on, and I shall object to any proposition that debars me of my right.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am willing that the gentleman from New York shall occupy the same length of time that I do. I think I act very liberally in agreeing to give up the hour I am entitled to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If an agreement cannot be come to that this bill shall be taken out of the way of public business, I give notice that as soon as the floor can be obtained for that purpose a motion will be made to lay it on the table. We will not submit to its blocking up the public business in this way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Illinois that he allow the gentleman from New York thirty minutes.

Mr. WOOD. No unanimous consent can deprive me of my right to be heard for one hour.

Mr. ROBBINS. Can we not suspend the rules to make the order indicated by the gentleman from Illinois? If the gentleman will yield to me I will make the motion. I desire to move to suspend the rules so as to limit the debate to one hour, after which the vote shall be taken.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am willing myself to submit the motion that I have indicated, that the vote be taken on the bill and amendments after one hour's debate, in speeches of ten minutes.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I move to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the following to be read from the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is not in order to move to suspend the rules while the House is acting under a suspension of the rules unless connected with the business immediately before the House.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am entitled to the floor and the gentleman from Texas cannot take me from the floor to make that motion. I am willing, however, that a motion shall be made to suspend the rules, so that after one hour's debate, in speeches of ten minutes each, a vote shall be taken upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is the motion I desire to make if the gentleman will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman cannot make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The rule is very plain that the Chair can entertain a motion to suspend the rules if connected with the bill which is before the House under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HALE. That has been frequently done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion. This was done at the last session in reference to the internal-revenue bill.

Mr. WOOD. I can only say that the gentleman from Illinois is guilty of bad faith. The unanimous understanding of the Committee of Ways and Means was that five members of our committee and the chairman should be heard on that bill. But two members have been heard. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON,] the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] and the chairman of the committee are yet to be heard on the bill.

I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not close his long and honorable career in this House by doing that at this time which will impair, at least in my judgment, his character for fair dealing. He knows that it is impossible to discuss this bill with any intelligence in ten minutes. But be that as it may, I presented to him and the other members of the committee a list of members of the Committee of Ways and Means who desired to have their hour to which they were entitled for and against the bill. On this list the names stood as follows: ROBBINS, GARFIELD, BURCHARD, KELLEY, TUCKER, WOOD, and GIBSON. Now, I wish this arrangement carried out in full, and no member of the committee can, acting in good faith to the others, deprive them of it.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to make a remark in reply to the chairman of the committee. It was our understanding—

Mr. WOOD. And you have not carried out the understanding. In all my experience in this House I do not remember a similar exhibition of bad faith.

Mr. BURCHARD. It was my understanding that debate should be had by the members of the committee. There is nothing in the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] that warrants him in saying that a limitation of the time for which members of the committee, including myself, shall address the House is in bad faith. It deprives none of us of the right to speak. If, in view of the urgency of immediate action, the motion to limit myself and the other members of the committee to ten minutes, having the right to print our remarks in full, is in bad faith toward the committee or any member, I cannot myself see it. In consideration of the pressure of the business at this time I thought it proper to submit the proposition I did. If the chairman of the committee questions the good faith of my submitting that proposition I do not wish to press it, although I cannot see that there is any bad faith in it.

But the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] in charge of the bill believes that it is in perfect keeping with the understanding of the committee that the House should limit the length of the speeches, and I feel bound to recognize his right to test the sense of the House, if he desires to, upon a motion to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. HAYES. The unfairness consists in keeping the bill before us and blocking legislation.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Has the Chair recognized my motion to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not the power to recognize the gentleman from Texas at this time to make that motion, for the reason that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] is on the floor and is entitled to his hour. But at the end of the hour the Chair will feel bound to recognize the motion.

Mr. BURCHARD. I hope no objection will be made to the proposition I have submitted.

Mr. WOOD. I object.

Mr. BURCHARD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. WOOD. As much time as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] had.

Mr. BURCHARD. That was an hour and a half.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] to let me have some time.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. I understood the gentleman from New York charged the gentleman from Illinois with acting in bad faith. He said the Committee of Ways and Means had agreed that five of its members should be heard in the House upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. That agreement does not control the House.

Mr. STEELE. That was the point of my inquiry. I want to know what right the Committee of Ways and Means has to control the action of the House in regard to debate?

Mr. BURCHARD. I am willing to yield to the gentleman who has charge of the bill to make the motion to suspend the rules if he desires to do so. I do not desire to make it myself.

Mr. ROBBINS. I make the motion.

Mr. BURCHARD. I yield to him for that purpose, and no other.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move that the rules be suspended so as to order that at the close of one hour's debate, in ten-minute speeches, the bill and amendments shall be voted on.

Mr. HALE. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] should have an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am anxious that full time for debate be had, but evidently the House will not now allow it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Illinois to allow half an hour, which is half of his time, to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BURCHARD. My proposition would give me ten minutes, and the rest of the time would be at the disposal of the Speaker. I desire the debate should be limited to one hour, and I am quite willing that one-half should be given to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] moves to suspend the rules so that at the end of one hour the vote shall be taken on the bill and amendments, with the understanding that the gentleman from Illinois shall control thirty minutes and the gentleman from New York thirty minutes.

Mr. WOOD. I hope the House will not agree to that motion.

Mr. ROBBINS. I only make this motion because the press of business is such that the House is impatient, and, I perceive, will require either that the debate be shortened to about the time specified or that the bill be laid aside altogether. The bill has been equally debated on both sides, and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD], a friend of the bill, now having the floor, proposes to give up his hour in order to get to a vote. I am quite willing to hear the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD], and this proposition gives him half the time allowed for further debate.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ROBBINS; and on a division there were—ayes 100, noes 36.

Mr. WOOD. I call for tellers. This is a violation of the agreement made in the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The House has nothing to do with that. The Chair will appoint tellers, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] and the gentleman from North Carolina will act as tellers.

Mr. ROBBINS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] is mistaken about this being a violation of any agreement. The agreement was that the utmost latitude should be allowed for the debate so far as was consistent with getting a vote on the bill this session. But it was all the while accompanied by this reservation, that we must have a vote; the subject must be acted on. I remember saying this emphatically; and in taking charge of the bill and agreeing to allow gentlemen what time they wished, this condition was constantly mentioned by me: that a vote must be taken and debate must not be permitted to extend so far as to defeat the bill by non-action upon it. I think we have now reached a period where the House will insist on action at once or never.

Mr. BURCHARD. If the House prefers to allow two hours for debate, I have no objection.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I suggest a compromise by allowing half an hour additional.

Mr. WOOD. I must object to that, for there are four members of the Committee of Ways and Means who desire to be heard upon this very important question.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 61.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. BURCHARD. As the gentleman from New York desires a full hour I propose that the debate be limited to two hours, and at the end of two hours the vote be taken to give the gentleman the control of the full hour.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that by the terms of the resolution assigning this business for consideration now it was to be considered under the five-minute rule, and will not that allow five minutes' debate upon amendments offered?

Mr. BURCHARD. Is there any objection to the proposition that the vote should be taken at the end of two hours?

Mr. TUCKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman from Texas as soon as he can obtain the resolution from the journal clerk.

Mr. BURCHARD. If the House is not willing to close debate I will proceed with my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURCHARD. I should have been glad if the House would have agreed to close debate.

Mr. TUCKER. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois proceeds without any understanding whatever as to the time of closing debate.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. There was not a two-thirds vote in favor of closing debate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) authorizing the remission of duty on two articles of bronze presented to Hon. R. C. McCormick by American exhibitors at the Paris exhibition.

The message further announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to correct an error of spelling of a name in enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4392) for the relief of Lucinda C. Dillahenty.

DUTIES ON SUGAR.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill for the repeal of the duty on sugar.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I am more anxious to have legislation on the pending proposition than I am to have discussion. I should be willing that a vote should be taken now without any debate. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I have asked for a vote, but some of my associates on the committee have objected to my proposition and insist upon their right to discuss this bill. If there is to be further discussion, it becomes necessary for me to state some facts that have not yet been presented to the House, in order to aid, if I can, members in forming an intelligent opinion as to the merits of the various propositions—the bill and amendments.

The committee recommend three classifications for sugar, based upon natural distinctions as to whether they are refinery, cheap grocery, or refined sugars. The first are to be ascertained as now by the Dutch standard of color, being not above No. 13, the second, not above No. 16, and the third, all above No. 16, and the rates to be fixed at 2.40, 2.75, and 4 cents per pound respectively.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] proposes to adopt the polariscope and assess duties according to its test of saccharine strength on sugars not above No. 13, and would make the duty 3½ cents per pound on our second classification and 4 cents on the third.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] proposes to leave the rates and classifications as they are now, except to carry all sugars below No. 10 which test 92° of crystallizable sugar to the rate of duty now fixed by law on sugars above No. 10 and not above No. 13, and to give the Secretary authority to use the polariscope or other means that he may prescribe for ascertaining the crystallizable strength of the sugar.

In the first place, I wish to clear up a possible misunderstanding that may have arisen from an incomplete if not incorrect statement by my distinguished colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD], in regard to the position of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasury Department in respect to this measure. The proposition which he read to the House and which he has offered as an amendment to this bill, was submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, but it was not the proposition which the Secretary of the Treasury submitted when he called the attention of Congress to the subject of the duty on sugar.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not want that there shall be any misunderstanding as to a matter of fact. The gentleman of course does not mean to deny that the amendment was drawn in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and sent to me as his last views of the case, and I presented it before the Committee of Ways and Means as coming from him.

Mr. BURCHARD. I do not desire to do any injustice to my colleague, for there is no man in the House for whom I personally have more respect than for the gentleman from Ohio. I admit that this proposition to apply the polariscope was presented to the Committee of Ways and Means by the gentleman from Ohio, and I presume it was prepared at the Treasury Department. But the Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report which I hold in my hand, the report for 1877, stated that—

The Dutch standard is an unsatisfactory basis for the assessment of duty, founded as it is on color alone, which bears no definite relation to the value of the sugar. If, however, the Dutch standard is to be retained, it is recommended that the grades be reduced in number, so that there shall be but three rates of duty, one for sugars not above No. 13, one for sugars above 13 and not above 20, and another for all sugars above No. 20, including all refined sugars. Based upon the quantities of the various grades imported during the past two years, the following rates would yield about the same amount of revenue as was collected during that time: sugars not above No. 13, per pound, 2.38; above No. 13 and not above 20, 3.45; above 20, and all refined sugars, 5 cents. This is inclusive of the 25 per cent. additional duty imposed by the act of March 3, 1875.

The report clearly shows that the Secretary recommended that the grades should be reduced so that there should be but three rates of duties on sugars.

Just about that time two manufacturers or dealers in polariscopes came before the committee. They had with them what was called a German polariscope and also another called, I believe, the French polariscope. They exhibited them before the committee, and it was one of the most interesting exhibitions that I ever witnessed. Their experiments carried me back to my old college days. The committee were polariscope struck. It seemed to us that the polariscope was a beautiful and splendid thing; and notwithstanding the Treasury Department had recommended a consolidation of these rates of duty, we were for applying the polariscope, and for carrying out the application in all its details. Some of us came to the conclusion at that time that if the polariscope could be relied upon to test the saccharine strength of sugar, then every degree of strength should be made to pay a corresponding duty.

After these gentlemen had explained the matter to us they went before the National Academy of Sciences, or before Professor Henry, I do not know which it was, and obtained a letter, the one which has been read by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD], in which it was stated not only that the polariscope could be used for the purpose of ascertaining the saccharine strength of sugar, but that the German polariscope was the one they would recommend for adoption.

That reminds me of the experience of Congress in former sessions in regard to spirit-meters. Congress desired to ascertain if some way could not be devised by which the alcoholic strength of liquors could be ascertained as the spirit flowed from the still. They referred the matter to the same scientific gentlemen, who experimented upon it for a year. At the end of that time they not only recommended the adoption of a meter for the purpose, but they recommended the adoption of the Tice meter. And the distillers of the country were compelled by law and by Treasury regulations to purchase eight hundred Tice meters, at an average cost of $1,000, and attach them to their distilleries. At the end of one month the Treasury Department had to abandon all those meters as being utterly worthless, and a loss of $500,000 was entailed upon those who had been compelled to buy them.

The Secretary, on the 25th of January, 1878, addressed a note to the Committee of Ways and Means on the subject of sugar duties, and, referring to the recommendation in his annual report and the objections to the new classification urged by the refiners and their proposition to add polarization to the color test, in conclusion he said:

Unless the committee is satisfied that some sure test of sugar of No. 10 and below can be made, I still adhere to the recommendation made in my annual report; but upon that question I think the committee has better means of deciding than I.

The Committee of Ways and Means, during its preparation of the tariff bill, decided not to give hearings before the committee to the different interests to be affected, and necessarily was imperfectly informed as to the objections to the use of the polariscope as a basis for assessing tariff duties, and the bill which the House subsequently rejected contained a schedule of the duties on sugar not above No. 13, Dutch standard, graded and based on the polariscope test.

Upon the failure of the bill the Secretary of the Treasury urged separate action on sugar, and as the committee seemed to have agreed upon the adoption of the polariscope, suggested the draught of a bill based in part upon the use of that instrument. No action was taken; and in his last annual report, December, 1878, the Secretary of the Treasury again called attention to the sugar duties. He said:

It is deemed imperative that some change in the mode of collecting duties on sugar should be had, and it is preferred, as stated in the last report, that the duty should be at one rate on all sugars, up to a point which will exclude temptation either to color sugar for the purpose of reducing the duty, or to commit fraud by means of sampling and classification. The duties now are, to a large extent, dependent upon the fidelity of the sampler, one of the lowest-paid officers in the public service.

Again, at this session, the subject of the duties on sugar came up before the Committee of Ways and Means. There had been a previous hearing before a subcommittee at New York and the testimony was printed, and those interested in the duties, as well as the Secretary and some of the Treasury officials, were heard upon the subject, the latter on the 17th of December, when the Secretary submitted a memorandum in which the several previous recommendations were recapitulated, the reasons were given for the former qualified recommendation of the polariscope, and the Secretary added:

During the past summer the question of the reliability of the polariscope as an aid in the classification for duty of sugars has been the subject of very much discussion in the public press. Some have thought that the adoption of the polariscope would be but going from the serious difficulties attendant upon the color standard to another standard equally as unreliable. The testimony, however, of some of the best merchants is in favor of its use. The parties in the sugar trade did not agree upon any plan for a modification of the tariff, and the Secretary in his report for the present year practically renewed the recommendation which he made in his report of 1877, at least so far as concerns sugars not above No. 13, which, in the former report, he places at 2.38, and in the present at 2.40.

If Congress should consider the polariscope test a reliable one, this Department would have no objections to a retention of the present rates of duties on sugars by color, with the addition of the polariscope as a detective.

At the lengthy hearing during this session the attention of the committee was called to the unreliability of the polariscope in testing and the difficulties in sampling the lower grades of sugar. A majority of the committee came to the decided conclusion to adopt the Secretary's original recommendation to combine all sugars not above No. 13 in one grade and put them under one rate of duty. They fixed upon from No. 13 to No. 16 as the next grade, and above 16 as a third.

Now, that we have substantially adopted the last recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury cannot be questioned, because I have here a letter from him dated February 18, 1879, which I will ask the Clerk to read, in which he insists that it is imperative that some change should be made, that the duties on grades to a certain number should be at one rate, and stated that he prefers that the duties on sugar should be arranged by consolidating the grades so as to exclude the temptation of evading the duty.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1879.

Sir: I have received your letter of this date requesting me to inform you what evidence, if any, is in the possession of this Department of frauds upon the revenue through the under-classifying of sugars by means of improper sampling and how such frauds have been consummated.

In reply I have to state that while the Department has been unable as yet to secure such evidence of false sampling of sugars as would justify suits against importers or criminal prosecutions against officers, evidence has been obtained to induce the conviction that such frauds have been perpetrated to a great extent. From affidavits on file in the Department it appears that in some instances it was the practice of certain Government samplers to receive the samples of cargoes of sugar from the sampler employed by the importer, who drew the samples from the hogsheads and delivered them to the Government samplers when called for, these samples representing the lowest grade of sugar usually one or two grades below the true color; and that in some instances where light sugars were imported samples were furnished from the sugars of a dark color, which were not of the imported cargo.

In several instances of resampling and reclassification differences have been found against the Government. In this connection I refer to my last annual report, in which allusion is made to the subject of sampling and classification as follows:

It is deemed imperative that some change in the mode of collecting duties on sugar should be had, and it is preferred, as stated in the last report, that the duty should be at one rate on all sugars up to a point which will exclude temptation either to color sugar for the purpose of reducing the duty, or to commit fraud by means of sampling and classification. The duties now are to a large extent dependent upon the fidelity of the sampler, one of the lowest paid officers in the public service."

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

HON. HORATIO C. BURCHARD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BURCHARD. The position of the Secretary from these reports and communications seems to be:

First. Legislation is desired to relieve the Treasury from conflicts and embarrassments in attempting to collect the duties upon sugars under a tariff discriminating on the grades of color below No. 13.

Second. One rate of duty on all sugars not above No. 13, Dutch standard, is preferred.

Third. If Congress believes the polariscope test ought to be adopted, the Secretary would recommend that it be applied so that sugars not above No. 10, Dutch standard, containing more than 92 per cent. of crystallizable sugar tested by the polariscope or other means, shall pay duty the same as sugars above No. 10 and not above No. 13.

DIFFICULTIES IN SAMPLING.

The Secretary says that the samplers are the lowest paid class of Treasury officials. How is the sampling done? A hogshead of sugar comes here from which the molasses has been drained by the natural law of gravitation. When the hogshead has stood on end, the wet, dark sugar will be found at the bottom and the lighter sugar at the top. When it is placed in the hold of a vessel the hogshead lies on its side, the molasses that remains in the sugar sinks to the side or bilge, and the sugar near the foot end of the hogshead and in the lower side will be dark, while the sugar above will be of a lighter color when the cargo is unloaded and landed on the wharf.

The Government sampler ascertains the grade of the sugar by boring into the hogshead and taking out a sample. If it happens that the end of the hogshead containing the dark sugar is turned up and the sampler bores into that end, he will obtain a sample of dark sugar. If the other end is turned up another and higher grade of sugar will be obtained from the same hogshead. This applies mainly to raw muscovado sugar not above 13; for those are the sugars which are damp.

The testimony of the Treasury officials, of merchants and refiners, and of experts in scientific laboratories confirms the views of the Secretary in regard to the difficulties in the sampling of the lower grades of sugar not above No. 13.

Mr. James, of the Customs Bureau, informed the Committee of Ways and Means:

The test cannot be made to absolutely prevent false returns, because that is a matter of faithfulness and discretion in the administration of the law. Samples are taken, one from the top, one from the middle, and one from the bottom of the hogshead. Sometimes the wet foot, (as it is called,) where moisture has settled, are two inches in depth; sometimes four, and sometimes three; and it requires intelligence to know how much of the bottom sugar to take to mix with the remainder of the sugar, in order to get a fair test of the whole contents of the hogshead. Now, lack of skill or of fidelity on the part of the sampler would, of course, throw it one way or the other.

Mr. S. B. Dutcher, appraiser at the New York custom-house, stated:

Each sampler carries his auger and bores into the hogshead for samples. Take, for instance, what is called centrifugal sugar—sugar made after that style. There are not foots in it as there are in the muscovado sugar, and it requires a great deal of judgment on the part of the sampler and of whoever is supervising the sampling to get at the exact proportions of the dry and of the wet sugar in the hogshead where there is a foot. There must be very great judgment exercised, and it requires considerable experience in order to be a good sampler of sugar in that respect. If the foot is a deep one, of course a larger proportion of the samples that are drawn from that part of the hogshead should be put with the other portions in order to make it the general sample. If the foot is very small, then the proportion of samples taken from it should be very much less, of course. There considerable judgment has to be exercised.

If I were at liberty to give names I could tell what the Treasury agents, who investigated the matter in New York, have reported on this subject. They discharged several samplers there, and they say that others were not above suspicion—in fact that there are but one or two samplers who are entirely clear of any charge or suspicion of wrong-doing in the work of sampling.

Mr. Lawson N. Fuller, who stated to the committee—

I never imported a hogshead; I am, exclusively, a refiner. * * * I have spent twenty-five years in the sugar-refining business, and I expect to spend the rest of my life in it—and who disclaimed a particle of interest in the subject outside of his own business, said in regard to sampling sugars:

Certain gentlemen in the refining interest declared in Washington that if a uniform tariff was adopted it would ruin their business. I think not. I think it would elevate the business by doing away with all this cheating of the Government by fraudulent classification, and I do not believe it is in the power of any man or number of men to prevent or detect these frauds by samplers. I believe that Mr. Dutcher is a thoroughly competent man for his position, and that he is earnest and honest, but I do not think it is in his power to discover the frauds that may occur, simply because he has to rely upon the samplers for the sugars upon which he fixes the appraisement. Now, if those samplers take the sugars from the heads, centers, and foots of the hogsheads, as he declares, then his appraisement could be a fair one; but that is not the fact. This is not a matter which Mr. Dutcher can decide for himself. He has to rely upon these samplers, and I have in mind a case which came within my own knowledge, of sugars which were sampled for the house with which I am connected entirely out of the foots, and my knowledge that such a case has occurred under my own observation is the reason why I state that these samplers are not to be relied upon, because they can draw samples which will be liable to pay almost any duty that they choose. And this is particularly the case where the sugars go right to the refinery, and are melted up very soon afterward and lose their identity.

I hold in my hand a volume which belongs to the Congressional Library and contains the report of an International Sugar Convention held in Paris in July and August, 1876. Official representatives of the governments of Great Britain, France, Belgium, and the Netherlands took part in the proceedings.

The use of the polariscope as a basis for estimating the duties and drawbacks on sugar was proposed and rejected. In the discussion the errors in sampling were pointed out and considered insurmountable.

M. LeFeuvre remarked (page 43) that grave errors might result in sampling. When a large quantity of sugar is only represented by a single sample, any falsification of the sample and any substitution of an inferior quality of sugar would give such a gain to the refiner that the temptation to commit fraud would become too strong. There are certain cane sugars of which it is difficult to obtain an exact sample, and with every appearance of acting in good faith, it would be easy to take a sample inferior to the average quality.

The difficulties and liabilities to frauds and undervaluations in sampling different grades of sugars not above No. 13 would not be obviated by the use of the polariscope, even if that were a desirable and reliable test for ascertaining the saccharine strength and value of sugar, inasmuch as the wet foots or damp sugar always tests very much lower than the dry. This was admitted by all those who testified before the committee, and is also evidenced by the following testimony at that convention:

M. Toewater (page 50) insisted upon the danger which he thought the taking of samples presented under the system of saccharimetry. Under that system the analysis of an inferior sample was sufficient to exonerate the refiner from a considerable amount of duty. It appeared from this paper (M. Surier, chemist) that in some baskets of Java sugar the quantity of glucose varied from 1 per cent. to 10 per cent., according to whether the sample was taken from one part or the other. The Dutch delegate asked to what errors the analysis of samples and the assessment of duty by saccharimetry might not lead if applied to such sugar?

M. LeFeuvre (page 51) also shared the opinion of the Dutch delegates as to the special dangers attending the taking of samples with a system of saccharimetry. He pointed out the influence which the dark lumps of various qualities often found in muscovado sugar might exercise on the result of the analysis. When the assessment of sugar was made according to color these lumps did not affect the coloration, while when it was a question of employing a chemical process for determining the quantity of salts contained in the sugar it was of the greatest importance that the sample should exactly represent the sugar. He feared, therefore, that it would be very difficult to avoid grave errors.

The polariscope only complicates the means of ascertaining duties, and instead of simplifying it adds confusion to the tariff laws. The Secretary of the Treasury finds that his officials and the merchants are calling for a change, and he asked that some relief be given and at once. In accordance with that recommendation, I have offered to have the debate on this bill shortened so that a vote may be had.

How, then, can we avoid this difficulty? The Secretary of the Treasury says it can be done by abolishing these unnatural distinctions in color which are not founded upon any change in the character of the superior sugar. If a simple, sensible tariff is wanted we have only to adopt the plain business proposition of putting all sugars not above No. 13 at one rate of duty, those from 13 to 16 at another, and those above 16 at another.

What is there about this color standard that is so important? No natural distinction of color can be properly adopted so as to require sugar of one color to pay one rate of duty and of another color to pay another rate. The numbers of sugar do not begin at No. 7. I have reports here showing the analysis of sugar of No. 4 and of No. 3 standards, and even below that.

WHAT IS SUGAR?

It is simply cane juice or other sweet juice boiled down to the point of crystallization. When it is in a condition that it will crystallize it is called melada. You can then put it into a barrel or a hogshead and ship it; or you may take the hogshead and stand it up on end, bore a hole in the bottom, and put in a little stick or a piece of sugar-cane, and then the molasses will drain out. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] suggested in his pertinent inquiry, the foreign labor of gravitation on the soil of Cuba will make your melada into sugar. That is all the labor there is in it.

If you let a hogshead stand from three to four weeks the molasses will all drain out, and then you can take that same hogshead, turn it over, plug up the hole, and ship it to this country as a hogshead of sugar. It will come here as raw or muscovado sugar, and the color will not go above No. 16. As a rule the sugar produced by this natural conversion of melada into sugar is only fit for refining, and it is brought here for refining purposes. Sugar below No. 13 does not enter into consumption at all. The higher colors, not because of their saccharine strength but because of the color being more inviting to the eye, may enter into consumption.

I hold here in my left hand a specimen of sugar of No. 13, and in my right hand I hold a specimen of No. 16. There is necessarily no more saccharine strength in the one than in the other; yet because No. 16 is more pleasing to the eye and may enter directly into consumption we put a higher rate of duty upon it.

Now, when sugar is refined it is advanced at least beyond No. 16 and up to the grade of C sugar, as it is called; so that the second grade of sugar named in our bill, which is raw muscovado sugar, as a rule does not enter into competition with refined sugars.

CENTRIFUGAL MACHINES AND VACUUM PANS.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] made a statement (which probably he heard from these men who have been giving us information on the subject) that there have been since the tariff of 1870 new processes introduced which enable the manufacturers to color down sugar and bring it in at a lower grade. He spoke of the vacuum-pan process and the centrifugal machine. Why, sir, I have a Treasury report made in 1847 which describes the vacuum-pan process, and the patent for it was taken out in 1813. Sixty-five years ago the vacuum-pan process was invented, and sugar has been boiled by it ever since; and the centrifugal machine has been in use for more than twenty-five years. So that these processes are not new discoveries that have been brought into use since the tariff of 1870 was enacted. The centrifugal process is simply this: instead of letting the hogshead stand on end and the molasses drain out, the sugar is put into a machine which revolves horizontally at the rate of one thousand or fifteen hundred revolutions a minute. The centrifugal force throws out the water and molasses and leaves the sugar; so that in an hour you do by this machine what would require two or three or four weeks by leaving the hogshead to stand on end and drain. By rapid revolution the water and sirup, and with them the coloring matter, are thrown out, leaving the crystals nearly white, or by a slower motion the coloring matter is retained.

Why should we not follow these natural distinctions?

UNIFORM RATE ON RAW SUGARS NOT INJURIOUS TO REFINING INTEREST.

It is said that the tariff proposed in this bill would operate injuriously on the refining interests. Why, sir, I have here a statement, which I cannot stop to read at length, made to the Treasury Department by the men themselves who are trying to defeat our bill, showing that from 1865 to 1871 under the old tariff $9,000,000 of new capital went into the refining business. It is very surprising that with this increase of business under that tariff it was not sufficiently remunerative. A greater ratio of capital went into the refining business before 1871 than since. It is true that since the present rates were enacted there has also been an increase. But why? Because the consumption of sugar in this country and the world is largely increasing. In 1870 and 1871 we imported a little over eleven hundred million pounds of sugar; we now import fifteen hundred million pounds annually. Why? Because the demand for the purpose of consumption is increasing. In part this increased consumption was no doubt owing to the fact that we reduced the duty on raw sugar nearly one cent per pound in 1871, although since that time we have put it up again.

There is increased consumption of sugar throughout the world. I have here statistics showing that within the last six or seven years the increase of the consumption of sugar in Germany has been 40 per cent. The New York Shipping-List and Price-Current of a late date shows that there has been a similar increased consumption in all of Europe. At the time this law went into effect we took about 50 or 60 per cent. of the sugar of Cuba. But the increased demand since has been such that we now take nearly all of Cuba's sugar—90 per cent. or more—as will be seen by the following table. We take 99 per cent. of her molasses; and notwithstanding this the gentlemen say that Cuba is trying to get rid of the present tariff under which she is able to send us so large a percentage of her entire crop.

What we desire is to make a fair, reasonable tariff, and to avoid the difficulties which are insuperable when you undertake to grade your duties on sugar.

SUGAR FOR REFINING.

I have before described sugar in its manufacture, but as preliminary to a discussion of its value for refining it is necessary to know something more of its properties, and right here the House perhaps will pardon me if I consider for a moment what sugar is. We all think perhaps that we know; but I find that science employed a great many analyses in finding out the composition of sugar. I have here a German work giving the results of a thousand analyses in the laboratory at Amsterdam. Sugar, as imported, and as respects some grades that go into consumption, consists of cane sugar, which is a combination of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen in certain proportions, and fruit sugar or glucose, in which the proportions are somewhat different, containing somewhat more of the elements of water than cane sugar; so that fruit sugar by the processes of nature can be converted into cane sugar, and cane sugar by chemical processes can be converted into fruit sugar or glucose. Then we have alkalies and acids in combinations or otherwise with other substances called salts; and we have water and coloring matter—extractive matter as the chemists call it. This coloring matter can be bleached out by certain processes without affecting the saccharine strength of the sugar to any degree.

By the Scotch process of refining, as it is called, (and I have here a journal of the Chemical Society, of 1869, which describes it,) the color is simply bleached out. They take—as has also been testified to by Mr. Havemeyer before the Committee of Ways and Means—raw sugar containing any given per cent. of cane sugar, with glucose, water, coloring matter, and other substances found in the cane juice, and bleach out the color in the process of refining, making the sugar into different grades, and then sell the same sugar with all these ingredients left in it. It is fit for consumption, notwithstanding what has been said heretofore about the foreign substances in the sugar. Cane glucose is not injurious. It is 60 per cent. as sweet as other sugar.

Besides what I have spoken of, there is in raw and moist soft sugar what is called invert sugar—sugar in a liquid state that either has not been crystallized, or, having been crystallized, has become liquid again. Invert sugar cannot become crystallized. It is just as sweet as other sugar. Put a spoonful of invert sugar into a cup of coffee and it will make it just as sweet as the same weight of a solution of other sugar. By the polariscope test we find out how much crystallizable cane sugar there is, after looking through and seeing the deflection of light through the solution. They then neutralize this by the action of acids, making it invert sugar, and again note the deflection of light through the solution in the polariscope. The difference in degrees upon a graduated circle between the first and second test gives the percentage of crystallizable cane sugar in the sample. The invert sugar is just as sweet as it was before being rendered incapable of crystallization.

THE POLARISCOPE AS A TEST.

I now come to a difficulty which should be fatal to the proposition to use the polariscope as a basis for determining duties. It gives only the quantity of crystallizable cane sugar and not the real saccharine strength. It does not give the sugar in the condition of invert sugar, just as sweet as the crystallizable cane sugar. It does not give the salts, which are so much to be subtracted, and in addition neutralize a proportion of crystallizable sugar. I have brought these books here that if any gentleman controverted my position I could refer to the page and satisfy him; but of course I cannot stop my argument and read at any length.

In a paper on The Chemistry of Sugar Refining, read by Mr. Wallace, F. R. S., before the London Society, and published in 1869 in the Journal of the Chemical Society, the writer says:

The French mode of determining the value of raw sugar is based upon two assumptions: first, that each percentage of fruit or uncrystallizable sugar prevents the crystallization of an equal amount of cane sugar; and, second, that each part of soluble salts prevents the crystallization of five times its weight of crystallizable sugar. My own experiments bear out the general accuracy of these assumptions. To value a sugar or find out the amount of extractable cane sugar in it, we take the total amount of cane sugar determined by chemical analysis or the polariscope and deduct from it the fruit sugar and five times the soluble salts, and the remainder is the quantity required.

Here are the proceedings of the International Sugar Convention held in Paris in 1876, only three years ago, where you will find they rejected the polariscope entirely. They had scientific gentlemen there, and some of them said they agreed that analysis was the perfect test, but they discarded the polariscope because of its failure to give a true indication of saccharine strength. A sugar that by the polariscope tests 90, having 1 per cent. of salts, in order to ascertain its crystallizable strength, you must reduce the polariscope test by three or five, whichever is the proper coefficient to multiply the quantity of salts by. So that sugar testing 90 per cent. by the polariscope would give in refining from 3 to 5 per cent. less crystallizable sugar than sugar of the same polariscope test containing no salts. The conclusion is irresistible that the polariscope test does not measure the value of raw sugar as imported for refining. It is one of the indices or tests of value to this extent: the man who wants to make hard sugar desires to know how much crystallizable sugar he can make, and the polariscope will give him within a fraction of 1, 2, or 3 per cent. of the quantity of crystallizable sugar. Knowing the country or locality where the raw sugar was produced, the character and effect of the soil upon the sugars made upon that plantation or in that region, the purchaser can roughly guess at the limit of injurious salts, and will in some cases purchase without further examination or analysis. But not knowing these facts, or if wishing to obtain the true value of this sugar, chemical analysis must accompany the polariscope. He must analyze and find out what proportion of salts there is in color, and subtract from that 3 to 5 per cent., and then ascertain how much water and how much glucose there are in it, and then subtract this from 100 per cent., and that will give the percentage of hard sugar he can make.

Refiners make different grades of sugar—white, hard, granulated sugar and soft or moist sugar. They make some sugars where they only bleach out the color. Something was said by one of the sugar refiners about it, but we could not understand it for a while, and I had to go to the book in the sugar alcove of the Library in order to comprehend their processes and their statements. I do not know whether other gentlemen will understand it at once or not without similar examination and study. The proposition struck us as fair that if the polariscope is the index of the strength, 70 per cent. polariscope sugar ought to pay 70 per cent. as much duty as 100. "Oh, no; that will not do," we are told; "color is some indication of value; it will only do to apply the polariscope to a certain degree." There was another question concerning this other 30 per cent. between 70 per cent. and 100, which is called waste, (one refiner called it dirt.) We asked whether it was not lost. "Oh, no," they said. "What do you do with it?" "We refine it," said the gentlemen. How do they refine invert sugar and glucose? They say they sell them without taking them out. They do not, therefore, sell 70 per cent. and throw away 30 per cent., but they sell the whole. This Chemical Journal which I have here shows that, by the Scotch process, out of 100 per cent. of sugar imported they sell 95 per cent. with the color merely bleached out.

I throw out these points hurriedly, in order to show you that the polariscope is not a test of value, because it gives incompletely and imperfectly the crystallizable strength of sugar, and sugar contains other sweetening principles, as was stated here by the gentleman from Ohio, that have a market value, that are sold and consumed every day in the sugars commercially designated from A, B, and C, down.

THE POLARISCOPE TEST VARIABLE.

Another reason why we should not use the polariscope is found in the fact that the results differ, and that is what has convinced me that it would not do to depend upon this test. No two tests ever bring out exactly the same degree of strength. You apply the polariscope test, and let the strength of the same sugar be taken in New York and Boston on the same day, and the tests will not agree. Apply the test on a moist day, and the strength will be less; on a dry day, and it will be greater. It is not reliable, and for that reason the commercial world do not regard it as a safe, infallible test which can be relied upon in the purchase and sale of sugar. And the very men who are urging this, and the Government officials, admit its incompleteness by testifying that nothing short of chemical analysis is entirely reliable.

Mr. Lawrence Turnure, of the firm of Moses Taylor & Co., New York, who before the Committee of Ways and Means favored the partial use of the polariscope in the manner proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, admitted "the impracticability of working it fairly."

Mr. Candler, of Boston, also favoring the proposition, said:

If you propose to use the polariscope, it has got to be exactly and scientifically done. We importers of Boston do not propose to permit the importers of New York, or Philadelphia, or Baltimore to have sugar come into those ports, and to have a custom-house expert look at it and say, "I think that that is about so and so," and pass it in that way. We claim that if you are going to introduce the polariscope at all, it is not worth anything unless you are exact about it, and unless every parcel of sugar imported shall be tested by the polariscope, and by a scientific man who understands it. If you are going to use it you should have a system about it. If you are going to allow anything to the judgment of men, the same errors that are now complained of will creep in, and there will be the same talk about frauds.

Mr. John E. Searles, jr., of New York, in an argument against the introduction of the polariscope, presented to the committee a letter from Mr. Minturn, of the firm of Grinnell, Minturn & Co., one of the largest importers in New York, in which he writes as follows:

As to your questions about the use of the polariscope as a test of values in the London market, I would say that I find to my surprise that it seemed to be quite ignored, except as regards beet-root sugars, which form a comparatively small portion of the sugar supply. I frequently inquired the polariscope test of sugar offered for sale, and in only one instance was it known.

I may add that, in the experience of my firm, we have constantly found differences of two degrees or more between different samples of the same sugar drawn for ourselves in the effort to determine the true polarization for our own information; and there is a constant difference of one degree (and frequently more) between our polarization and that of refiners on the same sugars; frequently differences of one two to degrees on samples drawn by different refiners from the same sugars belonging to us.

It is the decided opinion of my firm that the polariscope is not a proper test to apply to the collection of duties. There would be no such checks on its indication as are found necessary in practice in buying and selling. A slight difference in sampling (say even turning the trier down instead of upward) will give a marked difference in the polariscope result of some kinds of sugar.

A petition numerously signed by sugar-refiners and merchants of the highest standing was also presented to the committee, which reads:

We the undersigned merchants, importers of sugars, in view of the statements made before your committee as to the use and reliability of the polariscope in determining the value of sugar, do hereby most respectfully submit the following statements, namely: that the polariscope is not universally, nor even generally, used in the purchase of sugars in the producing countries; on the contrary, that outside of portions of the island of Cuba it is comparatively unknown. That while it is generally used here, between buyer and seller, as one of the means of determining the value of sugar, the variations which occur in tests through differences in sampling, as well as in the use of the instrument itself, are frequently very important, and become necessarily a matter of compromise between the parties in interest; and for this, with other reasons, it is not suited to be a basis of duty, inasmuch as its use will unavoidably involve the merchant in great uncertainty and often subject him to serious loss.

Mr. W. T. Booth told the committee—

That, outside of the island of Cuba (and in that island perhaps outside of the cities of Matanzas and Havana) there was not a cargo of sugar sold in this wide, wide world that depended upon the polariscope for the decision as to its price. You had a letter read yesterday in regard to the English market. I venture to assert that there is not in the city of New York an intelligent refiner to-day who, in making his purchases, rests on the polariscope alone.

The certificate of two of the largest sugar brokers in London was read to the committee, which stated that—

First. Originally qualities of sugar were defined by their color and grain. The color was measured on the basis of Dutch standard Java sugar samples.

Second. Later on, and about the time that beet-root sugars came forward for sale in England, the polarization test was introduced; this latter test (polarization) soon gave way, owing to its unreliability, to chemical analysis test, and polariscope is no longer used.

These statements, so material and condemnatory of the use of the polariscope, challenge attention and examination. I asked for the production of actual analyses and business tests made with the polariscope by reliable chemists, which disclosed the discrepancies charged. Quite a number were promptly forwarded to me, and I hold them here for inspection if desired. I will print with my remarks a comparative statement showing the differences in polariscopic tests of the same samples of sugar by the same or other chemists at different times and places. The tests do not exactly agree on a single sample, while the variation on one sample is 3.40. (See table at end of speech.)

The polariscope has been repeatedly recommended in other countries by scientists to their governments, but there is not a government in the world that applies the polariscope test to regulate its duty on the sugars imported from foreign countries. The French government use it in the collection of internal revenue in reference to beet sugars, in order to ascertain the amount of drawback; and France is the only place where it has been used at all in connection with a government. I have here statements taken from this book from which it appears that at that international convention the conclusion of those gentlemen was that the polariscope was being discouraged and the scientific world had less faith in it as a safe and reliable test.

In Germany the result has been the same, as will be seen from the following extract from reports on the sugar industry in foreign countries, 1876, presented to Parliament by command of Her Majesty. Mr. Nicholson writes from Berlin:

The polarization test has of late not been so highly considered as it formerly was. Doubts have been thrown on its efficacy and accuracy.

Now, the sensible method of making a tariff would be to classify the sugars according to their natural divisions; and for fifty years and more in the history of this Government we had one duty on raw sugar, another on clayed, and another on refined. On raw muscovado sugars there was one duty. Then when they were taken and having been drained in the way I speak of and put into a cone, clay was put on and the water percolated through, taking out some of the color or extractive matter, as it is called, and some of the gummy substance; then the sugar was called clayed sugar, and there was an increased duty upon it. If it was refined into a hard sugar or crystallized sugar, called granulated or loaf sugar, it paid another duty.

These were the distinctions up to 1861. In 1861 we adopted the Dutch standard for the purpose of more accurately defining these low grades of muscovado sugar and the higher grades on which we put a higher duty. We made all not above No. 12 a class of sugars that were only fit for refining purposes; and from 12 to 15, a class of sugars that might be called grocery sugars; and we put a higher tariff on those, just as we propose here, taking the division we have, not below 13, as one grade, and from 13 to 16 as another, including what are called grocery sugars, putting them at another rate. That is what I call the natural distinction.

The sugar tariffs of nearly every country of the civilized globe are based upon these natural distinctions between the classes of sugar or upon colors that correspond with them. I have here in the Canadian Year Book the sugar tariffs of the different European countries at the present time. The French tariff has on raw sugar under No. 13 a duty of 6.05 cents per pound; from No. 13 to 20, inclusive, 6.33 cents; and on refined sugar 6.66 cents per pound. Italy, Belgium, and Germany make two classes of sugars for dutiable purposes. Our sugar tariffs for more than half a century were based upon these natural distinctions. There were then under that tariff no difficulties and no complaints of frauds in sampling, and nowhere in the country was there any desire for change in the classification. The surplus revenues, however, in 1870 permitted a reduction of duty, and the propriety and duty of lowering the rates imposed upon this necessary article of universal consumption induced legislators to propose and effect a reduction in the interests of consumers.

Few of us now in this House were here as members when the present sugar tariff was adopted. I remember when sitting away over in the back corner of the Hall the distinguished leaders of our party, leaders of the House then as now, were devising and recommending tariff legislation and a change of rates but not of the classification of sugars. Here is the tariff bill then before the House, which retained a uniform rate of duty on sugars not above No. 12, Dutch standard.

The Committee of Ways and Means, of which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was a member then as now, studied and sat on the tariff question for a year or a year and a half during that Congress. They traveled all over the country, I believe, in order to become familiar with the industries of this country. They came together in the committee-room under the lead of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Schenck, then the leader of the House. After a while they reported a bill to this House. Did they have in that bill the present grades of sugar? No; they had the old rates and classification. The result of their investigation was to retain sugar not above No. 12, just as it was before, and substantially as we recommend it now. They recommended that to the House, and the House passed it as they recommended it. It went to the Senate, and there, in their superior enlightenment, it was concluded to change it and make several grades and classifications and higher rates of duty than in the House bill. Members here in this House were in favor of reduction and the old divisions.

The bill came back here and all, or nearly all, of us voted not to concur with the Senate. We stood together. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.] All of them adhered to the No. 12 rate. But in some unexplained way in conference that was given up and the discriminating duty became the law as it is now.

The Secretary of the Treasury now says that we ought to go back to the old plan of a uniform duty on refining sugars. He was then a member of the Senate and chairman of the Committee on Finance, and agreed to the change that was made. But he now is compelled, in view of overwhelming evidence, to admit that the change does not work well, and says that the old one-rate classification as to sugars not above 13 is preferable. The present tariff has involved the Treasury and merchants and refiners in continued disputes growing out of an attempt to make an unnecessary and almost impossible classification between different grades of unrefined sugar. It demoralizes and will inevitably demoralize the employes of the custom-house, whose fidelity and experience can alone be relied upon to make the proper classification.

It has also been claimed that the ingenuity of man has discovered processes since the grading of sugars below and above No. 7 was established by which they bring high-testing sugars down to that. And it is claimed also that by this means these frauds on the Treasury, as they are called, have been perpetrated. But here I find in this scientific work to which I have referred containing the results of analyses in Amsterdam, that out of a thousand analyses of Java sugars (which have never been charged with artificial coloring) about one hundred of them were of sugars of the class below No. 10, and the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio to raise the classification of all sugars not above ten, but testing ninety-two, would carry half of them up into a higher grade.

That is what science shows in regard to the polariscope. But the remark may be made, You have a late work; these analyses were only made a few years ago; is not that something very late? This was printed in Berlin in 1875, and issued under the direction of the finance minister of the King of the Netherlands. It is a work by a distinguished chemist—Guning. But I have looked back to see what Congress had been doing about the matter. There is a great deal of truth in a remark made by my colleague [Mr. CANNON] yesterday that, going back, you will find that discussion on almost every question has been duplicated, and that we are making the same speeches over and over again on public questions that our fathers made before us in a former generation.

Mr. DENISON. But you make them a great deal better.

Mr. BURCHARD. In a report of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate, made in 1847, of a scientific investigation conducted by Professor R. S. McCulloh, under the direction of Professor Bache, to ascertain the crystallizable sugar in various quantities of muscovado sugar, the following results were obtained, the sugars being mainly from Cuba and Porto Rico:

Three samples of dark-brown sugar, (below our No. 10, Dutch standard,) tested respectively 90°, 92°-18, 93°-44.

Three samples of light-brown sugar, (No. 10 to 13, Dutch standard,) tested respectively 90°, 90°-03, 93°-48.

Two samples of dark-yellow sugar, (No. 10 to 13, Dutch standard,) tested respectively 90°-13, 92°-98.

Five samples of brown-yellow sugar, (No. 10 to 13, Dutch standard,) four samples are below 89° and one sample 92°-43.

Eleven samples of dull-yellow sugar, (No. 10 to 13, Dutch standard,) four samples from 85°-05 to 89°-75; two samples from 91° to 92°; five samples from 92°-09 to 93°-33.

Twenty-five samples of yellow and deep-yellow sugar, (No. 13 to 16, Dutch standard,) twelve samples from 85° to 89°; six samples from 89° to 92°; seven samples from 92° to 95°.

Seventy-five samples of light and gray-yellow and yellow-white sugar, (above No. 16, Dutch standard,) twenty-nine samples from 87° to 92°; forty-six samples from 92° to 96°.

Sixty-three out of one hundred and twenty-four samples of muscovado sugar tested above 92°, and a portion of these were of the darkest grades.

The question of drawbacks, a very troublesome question, which I desire to refer to before I am through, was then troubling the Department and Congress, and it was referred to the National Academy of Sciences or some other scientific body.

I have here the report that was made to Congress and here is the result of their analysis: it is, that out of one hundred and twenty-four analyses made of muscovado sugars, thirty-three years ago, before even the centrifugal process had been brought into use, over one-half of all these that were analyzed were then above 92°, and to-day under the application of the principle proposed here by the gentleman from Ohio these sugars would have been carried up to a higher grade, although only muscovado raw sugars.

The trouble is that we adopted an unnatural and impossible classification, involving the sugar trade and the Treasury in interminable disputes. The law will be continually avoided, so that every kind of sugar will be brought in as only No. 7. As I understand it that is the effect.

When sugar is boiled either in the open pan or the vacuum pan, by boiling it a little longer or a little less you can have just the color you want.

That is the process, and sugars that test 96° or 98° by simply allowing the coloring matter to remain in, when it runs through the centrifugal process a stream of water washes it out and you have a higher grade sugar, but if you allow the coloring matter to remain in you have a dark-colored sugar.

That is what is done and it cannot be avoided. If we should then apply the polariscope, they say that would avoid this test, and it appears to me that new difficulties will be created and we ought to go back to these natural distinctions. No refined sugars in this country are below No. 16, as I understand it, and it is a matter of fact that no sugars below No. 13 would enter into consumption to more than a very slight degree if you put the duty at a uniform rate.

I will now answer some arguments for the continuance of the present rates and objections to a uniform duty on sugar not above No. 13.

THE SUGAR-REFINING INDUSTRY.

The uniform duty upon numbers below 13 will not affect the refining industries. That is evident because of the sugars of that grade imported none will go into direct consumption. They are all simply refining sugars. No refined sugar will be imported between Nos. 13 and 16, because we put the duty at 35 cents on the hundred additional. Is not that sufficient protection?

I made some remarks before the House sat down in the last Congress on the bill that had the polariscope in it, in which I announced as my motto, "A tariff for revenue, with reasonable, moderate, and sufficient protection." Whoever wants more than that can get no aid from me in accomplishing that object.

I am willing to give sufficient protection, but when gentlemen ask for protection for this industry I protest that they should not ask more than the refiners say they need, and I protest that the House shall not give any more protection than the refiners say is necessary.

These refiners have been before our committee and insist they can refine sugar in this country cheaper than anywhere in the world. They say under "free trade" we can defy the world. These statements were made to the committee by several gentlemen, as follows:

Mr. Candler said:

We can manufacture sugars from No. 10, Dutch standard, up at less than they can be made in any other country.

Mr. Spaulding said:

We refine cheaper than in any other country. The refiners of the United States do not ask protection. If you repeal all duties on sugar we can supply the world.

Mr. Havemeyer said:

Refineries can give a cheaper refined article than it can be imported at.

Mr. Wells said:

Refined sugars can be sold here cheaper than anywhere else.

Mr. Perot said:

The producer abroad cannot manufacture high-grade sugars as cheaply as they can be manufactured here.

If they are not competent to judge whether they need protection or not, how much ought their guardians to demand for them? How much should we give them? I answer, only a reasonable advance of the duty on refined sugars above the duty on raw or refining sugars to compensate them for the higher price of labor here than abroad. According to their testimony, in refining raw sugars below No. 13 up to the higher grades of yellows, hard, and refined sugars, it costs from 45 to 90 cents per 100 pounds. Their statement is that the cost averages 70 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. Havemeyer's testimony before the committee was that No. 10 to 13 cost 70 cents per 100 pounds to refine; including interest on capital, No. 13 can be refined for from 45 to 50 cents; No. 7, 85 test, costs from 80 to 90 cents.

For the 70 cents additional labor, we give them on the lowest grade of refined sugars they can make 35 cents protection; that is, 50 per cent. protection on what they put in; and on the higher grades of sugar they manufacture over one cent a pound a protection of 50 per cent. on the added cost more than compensates for any difference in the price of labor or in the cost of manufacture.

Who desires for them, when confessedly not needed, anything beyond a reasonable and sufficient protection?

It is claimed that the present sugar tariff has had a wonderful effect to stimulate refining. It has been said that it has built up the business of refining in this country and encouraged that industry so that now we are not only producing enough refined sugar for the consumption of our own people, but are even exporting it to foreign countries. A glowing picture has been presented by gentlemen, not only in this House but outside of it, of the wonderful revivifying effect which this tariff has had upon commerce. It has been said that the raw sugar is packed on mules and transported in other ways in the distant islands of the seas and shipped and brought to this country to be refined in our refineries, and then the refined sugar is sent back to those distant countries, and that we are able to compete in all the markets of the world.

Now, what are the facts? I have here the reports of commerce and navigation, and this appears to be a remarkable statement when we come to ascertain the facts as to where the raw sugar comes from and where the refined goes to. Last year we exported seventy-four million pounds of refined sugars, and the year before last thirty-three million pounds of raw sugar came from England right here to this country, were refined, and more than thirty-three million pounds of refined sugar were exported back to England. Nearly all this refined sugar exported is sent to England, Scotland, and Canada, instead of going back to the poor aborigines who did not know how to refine it. They eat readily the sugar made by themselves and do not import the refined sugars from this country.

How is it our refiners are able to do this? It is because these complicated distinctions enable them to import the raw sugar at discriminating rates by which the drawback gives them a bounty on every pound they export. The Secretary of the Treasury has stated to us that at one time they had a drawback that amounted to a bounty of nearly one half a cent a pound more than they now have; that he had the matter investigated and the drawback reduced, but he believes they now get a bounty of one-quarter of a cent per pound through the drawback.

He had a commission, called the Jay commission, which sat in New York and investigated this question of drawbacks and cut them down. I do not believe that with all their boasts and claims our refiners could defy the world in refining unless they had this drawback. I do not see how they can bring sugar here to this country and refine it and send it back to England, paying the freight on two ocean voyages, and compete with England in the production of sugar without the benefit of this bounty.

THE AD VALOREM PRINCIPLE.

It is urged that the present tariff rates on sugar are based upon an ad valorem principle that will be disturbed and be inequitable if raw refining sugars are put in one class. But the duties on ores and other raw products imported for manufacturing purposes are put at specific rates without regard to the varying prices of the different qualities. The foreign prices will be affected by the distance of the country of export, the cost of shipment, &c.; and hence the foreign invoice value of the same quantity of sugars would be less in the East Indies than in the islands adjacent to our own shores. Yet, applying the ad valorem principle, in some years the uniform tariff of 2.40 cents per pound on raw sugar for refining is nearer ad valorem than the present discriminating duties.

I submit a table, compiled from the figures of the Bureau of Statistics, showing the number of pounds, foreign value, rates of duty, and ad valorem rates, on the importations of the three grades of sugar up to No. 13 for the years 1877 and 1878, and what the ad valorem would have been on the same importations at a uniform tariff of 20.40 cents per pound. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is objectionable, as I have shown, because it introduces for a basis upon which to estimate duties a test obtained by the use of an instrument which is inconstant and inaccurate in the hands of the most experienced chemists and experts; which varies in its results with the time, temperature, and conditions under which the experiments are made; a test which does not give the saccharine strength of the sugar examined; a test whose findings do not determine or correspond with the commercial value; and a test which has not been approved or adopted by the commercial world as indicating with any certainty the real values of refining sugars. But a greater objection is that by charging sugars testing 92° at the rate charged on No. 13 sugars alone it carries up the duties on nearly one-half of raw unrefined sugars to a higher grade than they were required or intended to pay when the present law was passed, for it is not true that muscovado sugar then or previously only tested 92°.

The proposition to give the Treasury Department not only the polariscope, but any other device or means the Secretary may desire, is substantially a provision to make the tariff laws depend upon the will, caprice, or whim of the custom-house officials who administer the law. Certainty as to the means of assessing, as well as to the rates of duties, is of primary importance to those concerned in commercial transactions.

The Jay commission, in their fifth report to the Secretary of the Treasury, calling attention to the charges of frequent changes in the decisions of the officials of the Treasury, state one of the complaints to be that merchants who have contracted for large sales, the prices being based upon certain rates of duty, find themselves obliged to pay an increased rate of duty, owing to a sudden and unexpected change of decision. If changes of decisions on fixed rates of duty entail, as was complained, enormous losses on merchants, what disasters may fall upon refiners and importers whose sugars are to be assessed by the color standard and polariscope, or such other means as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe? The effect of such uncertainty in legislation was portrayed by the Judiciary Committee of the House in 1875 in a report upon the effect of frequent changes in the interpretation of the tariff. The committee well said:

We believe that importing merchants who pay into the Treasury so large a part of the money which constitutes the pecuniary resources of the nation are entitled to be clearly and distinctly told what rates of duty will be exacted from them, that no undue disturbance of their business transactions should be made by unexpected Treasury exactions.

Résumé.

The percentage ad valorem in 1877, under rates as now existing, showed a variation of 12.73 per cent.

Under proposed rate, only 0.30 per cent.

In 1878, under old rates, variation 4.15 per cent.

Under proposed rates 7.51 per cent.

Taking two years together under proposed tariff variation only 3.90 per cent. from ad valorem.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to lay the bill on the table. I take the liberty of saying that if this motion be not adopted I will claim the floor to discuss the bill.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a question of order. I submit that we are now considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole, and that a motion to lay on the table is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio.] The Chair will have read Rule 42.

The Clerk read as follows:

42. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lie on the table, for the previous question, to postpone to a day certain, to commit or amend, to postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they are arranged, and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to commit, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day and at the same stage of the bill or proposition.

Mr. MILLS. That rule does not apply in this case, because the House is proceeding as in Committee of the Whole. It is impossible for the House to transact business at the same time under the rules of the House and the rules of the Committee of the Whole, for there is a positive collision between the two sets of rules. In Committee of the Whole no such motion is recognized as a motion to lay on the table. When we are proceeding in Committee of the Whole the bill is discussed under the five-minute rule and is subject to amendment; and that power of amendment cannot be restricted. If I had not understood that in considering this bill the same latitude of debate and amendment would be allowed as if it were actually in Committee of the Whole, I never would have consented to the order for considering it as in Committee of the Whole. I supposed that we would retain unimpaired the right to offer amendments and have them voted upon. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay the bill on the table is in order.

Mr. KELLEY. I will modify my motion to meet the gentleman's views, and will move to strike out the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would hold that motion not to be in order.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I insist upon my original motion.

Mr. MILLS. What was meant by the order that the bill should be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SAYLER. I hope the House will understand that it is not the intention to occupy further time in discussing this question. I trust that members who are disposed to lay the bill on the table simply because they dislike the consumption of time will understand that the previous question is at once to be demanded. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is in order; that the motion to lay the bill on the table when the House is proceeding as in Committee of the Whole is equivalent to the motion in Committee of the Whole to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BURCHARD. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think it is hardly fair—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BURCHARD. I know it is not, but—

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] has had his full time. This motion is not debatable. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] be allowed to withdraw the bill. There are gentlemen here who want to proceed to other business, although they are in favor of this bill; and the friends of this bill do not desire that it shall receive an adverse vote from those who are in favor of it.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw the bill I do not insist on my motion.

Mr. BURCHARD. The bill cannot pass both Houses at this session.

Mr. ROBBINS. If I may be permitted one moment, I will say that I am willing to waive the further consideration of this bill, because we are now so crippled by want of time; and I discover that the House is impatient and indisposed to allow sufficient time for the further debate which gentlemen wish. The chance of getting the bill through the Senate at this stage of the session is very small, and many friends of the bill would vote to table it, to save the time for other matters. I do not wish to see the bill receive an unfriendly vote, which would not express the true sentiments of the House on its merits; for previous incidental votes have indicated that the House would pass the bill. With the permission of the House, I therefore propose to withdraw the bill from further consideration at this session.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let that be done.

Mr. KELLEY. Let it be understood it is not to be presented again during this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. I shall certainly object.

Mr. CLYMER. Is it understood that the bill is not to be renewed this session?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURCHARD. It cannot be necessary to make that condition. The gentleman can withdraw the bill or not, as he chooses, without making any condition. He has a right to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not except by unanimous consent. The House is now acting under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BURCHARD. I do not understand there is any agreement.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will have unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

Mr. BANKS. Not to be renewed during the session.

Mr. ROBBINS. I shall certainly not ask that the bill be again considered this session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLYMER. Not to be renewed by him nor by anybody else during the session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is withdrawn. The Chair will now recognize gentlemen who have the right to move to suspend the rules by direction of their committees. He will first recognize the gentleman from Tennessee.

NAVAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of this House be suspended so as to fix the hour of twelve o'clock m. of Monday, March 3, for the consideration of the following resolution agreed upon by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to wit:

Resolved, That the acts and conduct of the late Secretary of the Navy, George M. Robeson, and of the late chiefs of Bureaus of Steam Engineering, Construction, and Repair, and Provisions and Clothing, and who were such since May, 1872, and referred to in their report, as well as others aiding and abetting therein in the sale and disposition of public property in their method of making contracts and in involving the Government in indebtedness over and beyond the appropriations made by Congress for the support of the Navy, deserve and should receive the severest censure and condemnation.

Resolved further, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives to deliver certified copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Naval Affairs and Naval Expenditures of this House, together with the reports of said committees, and the views of the minority, to the President of the United States, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Navy.

Resolved further, That at the end of one hour the vote on the same shall be taken.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 127, nays 113, not voting 50; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. WALLACE to be conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; disagreed to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate, number 20; agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. DORSEY, Mr. BLAINE, and Mr. WALLACE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PATENTS.

Mr. VANCE. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. No. 300) to amend the statutes in relation to patents and for other purposes, as amended by the House Committee on Patents.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That from and after the passage of this act no profits or damages in any suit at law or in equity hereafter commenced for the infringement of a patent shall be recovered which shall have accrued more than four years next preceding the commencement of such suit: Provided, That where a party, in order to preserve his right of recovery, finds it necessary to institute a number of suits involving the same issues, and he is proceeding with good faith and with reasonable diligence to bring one of them to final judgment, any court in which any of them are pending may, in its discretion, grant a stay of proceedings from time to time in any such other cases pending before it: Provided, however, That if in any suit instituted in one circuit court of the United States the validity of a patent shall be determined upon final hearing, any other circuit court may recognize said decision, and, in its discretion, grant injunctions based thereon, to continue pending an appeal to the Supreme Court in the first suit. And if the validity of any such patent has been decreed against in a suit instituted in any one circuit court, any other circuit court may, in its discretion, grant a stay of proceedings in any other suit brought under said patent pending an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in said first suit: Provided also, That the limitation herein provided for shall not apply to rights of action existing at the passage of this act on which suits shall be brought within two years thereafter, if not previously barred by laws already existing; but nothing in this section contained shall revive any right of action already barred, nor prolong the right to sue on any cause of action already existing.

SEC. 2. In all suits for the infringement of a patent, in which at the date of the passage of this act no final verdict has been rendered, or no decree for an account or assessment of damages has been pronounced, as well as in all such suits hereafter instituted, the measure of the plaintiff's recovery shall be the same, both in law and equity. If a license fee has already been established by reasonable number of transactions applicable to the case at bar, such license fee, or a portion thereof, according to the extent and duration of the infringement proved, shall be the measure of the plaintiff's recovery in all cases, except in cases where the defendant has made an actual profit from making for sale, or selling the thing patented, or the product thereof; and in such cases the proportion of the actual profit of such making for sale or selling, due to said infringement, shall be determined, and that proportion of such actual profit shall be the measure of the plaintiff's recovery; and in an action at law the court may appoint an auditor to ascertain the same, and his report shall be prima facie evidence; but if such proportion shall not be equal to the amount of a license fee established, or to be determined in the manner herein-after provided, the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover such amount, or so much thereof as shall be in excess of the profits so awarded.

If a license fee has not already been established by a reasonable number of transactions applicable to the case at bar, a license fee for the use actually made shall be determined from all the evidence in the case; and if the case shall not fall within the exception aforesaid, the same shall be adopted as the measure of the plaintiff's recovery.

And whenever the court shall be of opinion that the suit of the plaintiff, or the defense of the defendant, was vexatious or malicious, or the infringement was willful, the court may award against the party guilty of such vexatious or malicious conduct, or of such infringement, such sum, by way of counsel fees and expenses of suit, as it shall deem just and reasonable.

No account of savings shall in any case be allowed; and no evidence or account of the defendant's profits shall in any case be admitted, except as to actual profits resulting from making for sale or selling the thing patented, or the product thereof as aforesaid: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall exclude other evidence as to the utility and advantage of the invention as one element to aid in determining a license fee where none has been established. Nothing contained in this section shall affect the right of a plaintiff to an injunction.

SEC. 3. In any suit brought in any court now having jurisdiction in patent cases for an alleged infringement of any patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, where it shall appear that the defendant purchased the same in good faith from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use, and not for sale, nor for making a product for sale, if the plaintiff shall recover a judgment for merely nominal damages, the court shall adjudge that he pay all the costs of the suit; and if the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over, the court shall adjudge him to pay his own costs, unless it shall also appear that the defendant, at the time of such purchase, manufacture, or practical application, had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall apply to articles manufactured outside the United States.

SEC. 4. In all patent causes, after a decree has been made upon the merits of the case, in favor of the complainant, establishing the validity of a patent, finding an infringement thereof by the defendant, and ordering an account or an assessment of damages, the court in which the cause is pending may, if it shall see fit, authorize the defendant to appeal forthwith from such decree; and thereupon, if such an appeal shall be taken and perfected within such time as the court shall prescribe, it shall be competent for the said court to stay proceedings in whole or in part during the pendency of such appeal, and to require from the defendant a bond, with sureties, to answer the final decree in the cause, or to dispense with such bond, as it shall see fit: Provided, however, Where an appeal is allowed from an interlocutory decree establishing the validity of a patent or its infringement, the complainant may be permitted, in the discretion of the court, to go on and take his account, subject to payment of costs and counsel fees if the decree is reversed, and on giving security therefor.

SEC. 5. The several courts vested with jurisdiction of cases arising under the patent laws may, at any time during the pendency of any patent cause, grant or suspend the issuing or operation of an injunction upon such terms as the court may impose, and, subject to such rules and regulations as the Supreme Court may establish, shall have like power after an appeal of said cause, and while the same is pending in the Supreme Court.

SEC. 6. Section 4916 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows: Whenever any patent is inoperative or invalid, by reason of a defective or insufficient specification, or by reason of the patentee claiming as his own invention or discovery more or less than he had a right to claim as new, if the error has arisen by inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and without any fraudulent or deceptive intention, the Commissioner shall, on the surrender of such patent and the payment of the duty required by law, cause a new patent for the same invention, and in accordance with the corrected specification, to be issued to the patentee, or in the case of his death, or of an assignment of the whole or any undivided part of the original patent, then to his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the unexpired part of the term of the original patent. Such surrender shall take effect upon the issue of the amended patent. The Commissioner may, in his discretion, cause several patents to be issued for distinct and separate parts of the thing patented upon demand of the applicant, and upon payment of the required fee for a reissue for each of such reissued letters-patent. The specifications and claim in every such case shall be subject to revision, restriction, and rejection, in the same manner as original applications are. Every patent so reissued, together with the corrected specification, shall have the same effect and operation in law, on the trial of all actions for causes thereafter arising, as if the same had been originally filed in such corrected form, except as otherwise provided in this act; but no new matter shall be introduced into the specification not shown, contained, or substantially indicated in the specification or drawings of the original application or its amendments, and which the patentee would have been entitled to include as a part of his invention in the patent originally granted. But no reissue shall be allowed, unless applied for within seven years from the date of the original patent, or within four years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That it shall not be lawful to grant any reissue of any patent for any invention, except the invention which was embraced in the original patent.

SEC. 7. No machine or other article made prior to the surrender of a patent, and the issue thereupon of a new patent, which, or the use of which, did not infringe such surrendered patent, shall be held to be an infringement of any of the claims of the new patent not existing when such machine or other article was made. All rights of action accruing to a patentee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for profits and damages on account of any infringement of a patent, prior to its surrender for a reissue, shall remain unaffected by such surrender, and no suit shall be barred or abated by such surrender; and all suits at law or in equity may be maintained for the recovery of such damages or profits in the same manner as if said surrendered patent had expired by its own limitation: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall apply to letters-patent reissued prior to the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 8. Whenever a patent has been issued to one person as sole inventor for an invention actually made by him jointly with another or others, or a patent has been issued to several persons as joint inventors for an invention not made by all of said persons jointly, and such error has arisen through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, the Commissioner, upon the application and oath of the true inventor or inventors, and with the written consent of all the owners of said patent entered of record, may correct the mistake. No new patent shall be issued in such case, but the correction shall be entered upon the old patent, and the record thereof, and said patent shall thereafter, for all purposes, be regarded as having been properly issued, in its corrected form, at the date of its original issue. Upon such correction, a fee of $20 shall be paid, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Patents may, from time to time, prescribe. And whenever a patent has been issued to two or more persons jointly, describing or representing matter which was of the invention of only one of them, and for which the inventor thereof might lawfully have taken a separate patent to himself, said invention may be secured to the first inventor thereof by reissue of the patent so jointly issued, upon proceedings had as in other cases of reissue, and with the consent in writing of the assignees, if any, of such original patent, such reissue to inure to the benefit of all persons claiming under the original patent as if their claim had arisen under the patent so reissued, except as provided in the seventh section.

SEC. 9. Any person who may wish to perpetuate testimony to be used in any patent suit then pending, or which may thereafter be brought, may do so subject to the following rules and conditions: He may file a bill or petition in the circuit court of any district in which the parties having a right to sue for infringement of said patent, or against whom he shall desire to use testimony to be taken hereunder, or any of them, reside, setting forth the date, number, and subject of the patent, and the name of the patentee, the names and residences of the several parties interested in said patent, so far as known to him, the names and residences of witnesses proposed to be examined, the facts proposed to be proved by each, as the same would have to be stated in an answer in equity, and his desire to perpetuate testimony, as aforesaid.

On the said parties being brought into court in the usual way, the court, if it deems it just and reasonable so to do, may enter an order or orders in the case, directing before whom and when and where, either within or without the district, the evidence shall be taken. Both parties may attend at the time and place or times and places so designated by the court, or at such times and places as they may agree, and the petitioners may then and there introduce such legal testimony of such of said witnesses as they may see fit, relating to the facts set forth in the petition; and thereupon, in relation to or in rebuttal or avoidance of the matters put in evidence by the petitioners, the respondents may introduce the legal testimony of such witnesses as they, or any of them, may see fit to call, and as the court, upon application in the same proceeding, may permit. The examinations shall be by interrogatories; and all objections of mere form to such interrogatories shall be raised at the time, or deemed to have been waived. The evidence, when so taken, shall be certified by the person or persons taking the same, and by him or them, respectively, returned to the court and filed among the records of the court; and the same, or duly certified copies thereof, shall thereafter be received, so far as competent, in all suits on said patent to which the said petitioners or the said defendants, or any of them, or those claiming by, through, or under them, shall be parties; but the witnesses, if living, may be recalled in said suits, and re-examined or cross-examined, as the case may be, by any party. And the complainant or petitioner in any such proceeding shall, within twenty days after the filing in court of any such petition, file in the Patent Office a certificate of the clerk of the court, setting forth when and where such petition was filed, together with the date and number of the patent, and the name of the patentee, which certificate shall be entered of record by the Commissioner of Patents in the assignment records of the Patent Office. And within thirty days after said testimony is returned into said court, the clerk thereof shall make a copy of the petition and testimony, at the complainant's or petitioner's costs, and file the same in the Patent Office. Any number of persons, whether jointly interested or not, may join in said petition; and, if necessary, several petitions may be filed, at the election of the petitioners, in different districts where any other parties interested in said patent reside. Each party to said petition shall pay the costs of taking his own testimony, but all the costs of court shall be paid by the petitioners; but the court may, in its discretion, assess upon the complainant or petitioner any part or all of the legal costs, and also a reasonable allowance for travel and attendance: Provided, That no depositions taken under this section shall be used, except as against persons who were parties to such proceeding and actually served with personal notice, or those claiming under them by interest acquired subsequent to filing said certificate in the Patent Office: And provided, That no such depositions shall be used in any action at law when the witness is alive, competent to testify, and within the jurisdiction of the court during any time when his testimony could be regularly taken in the cause, except that if the party producing it in such case shows any sufficient cause then existing for using the same, it may be admitted; but whenever testimony taken hereunder by the petitioners shall be used, testimony taken in the same proceeding by the respondents, in relation to or in rebuttal or avoidance of the matters referred to by said evidence of the petitioners, may be used by the party against whom said evidence of the petitioners is used.

SEC. 10. Upon the petition of any person interested adversely to any original, issued, or extended patent, and upon proof that the owners thereof, or persons entitled to bring suits thereon against the petitioner where the owners are not so entitled, have knowledge of infringement thereof, and unreasonably delay or neglect to bring suit in which the validity of said patent may be tried, to the injury of the petitioner, any court of the United States having jurisdiction of patent causes, upon notice as hereinafter provided and due hearing, may authorize such petitioner to bring a bill in equity to declare void said patent, or any claim thereof, for any of the causes which by law may render the same invalid, whether relating to the original patent or any reissue or extension. And a decree rendered in said suit, declaring void said patent, or any claim thereof, shall be conclusive in favor of all persons against all the parties defendant in said suit who may have been duly served or appeared therein. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the court where such suit was pending, within twenty days from the rendition of a final decree therein, to make and send to the Commissioner of Patents a certified copy of the decree; which copy shall be recorded by the Commissioner of Patents with the records of assignments, and notice of such decree shall be given in connection with such publications and notices as the Commissioner may make of the expiration of patents; and the costs thereof shall be taxed as costs of the cause. Such petition and bill shall name as defendants all persons who appear by the records of the Patent Office to be owners of said patent, or to have an interest therein, except that licensees holding by licenses not exclusive in their character as to territory or purpose need not be made parties. Said petition and bill shall be brought in the district where a plurality in interest of the owners of the legal title to the patent reside; but if equal interests are held by owners in different districts, each of which is greater than the interests of owners in any other district, then said petition and bill may be brought in either of said districts. Upon the filing of the petition, an order of notice shall issue to those defendants who are found within the said district, and also to those not to be found therein, directing them, on a day therein to be designated, to appear and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petition should not be granted, and to appear, plead, answer, or demur to such bill as the court shall permit to be filed thereupon. And if the court shall allow such petition and such bill to be filed, no additional service shall be necessary upon those defendants who were served under the petition. Such order shall be served in the same manner that subpoenas in equity are now served, or in such other manner as the court may order. If any defendant does not appear, show cause, plead, answer, or demur within such time as the court, by special order or general rules, may prescribe, it shall be lawful for the court, upon proof of said notice and of the performance of the directions contained therein, to entertain jurisdiction, and to proceed upon said petition and bill in the same manner as if such defendant had been served with process within the district, and had made default.

From a final decree in such suit an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court in the same manner provided by law for appeals in other patent causes in equity.

SEC. 11. Whenever any person shall be injured by a claim by the owners of any patent, or the parties entitled to sue thereon, or their agents, that he is infringing the same, made publicly or by notice to customers or consumers, and no suit shall, within a reasonable time, be brought and prosecuted to enforce such claim, he may file a petition in equity, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction, to compel the person making such claim, or on whose behalf it is made, to bring, or cause to be brought, a suit on said patent, to test its validity and the question of its infringement by those acts which are so claimed to constitute an infringement. The petitioner shall file affidavits in support of the allegations of his petition, and the court, upon sufficient cause shown, shall order the defendant to appear at a day named, to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted. On the return day of said order of notice, the defendant shall file his answer, with affidavits in defense; and the petitioner may file affidavits in reply within such time as the court may fix. If, upon a hearing on the petition, answer, and affidavits, the court shall deem it just and reasonable, it shall pass an order requiring the respondent to bring, or cause to be brought, a suit as aforesaid, within a time named, and in default thereof to be enjoined from thereafter making or prosecuting in any manner, against the petitioner, or those claiming under him as purchasers of any specific article, machine, or composition of matter, the claim which is found and adjudged by the court to be the basis of the petition; and upon such default, the court may issue an injunction accordingly.

SEC. 12. On each and every patent for an invention issued after the passage of this act, there shall be paid to the Commissioner a fee, as follows, namely: $20, to be paid on or before the 1st day of January occurring next after the expiration of four years from the date of the original patent, and $50 on or before the 1st day of January occurring next after the expiration of nine years from the date of the original patent; and in default of any such payment, the patent shall expire on the 1st day of April next thereafter. But the Commissioner, for good cause shown, may allow the payment to be made at any time before such 1st day of April, in which case the patent shall not become void. The Commissioner shall annually, in the month of April, publish a list of the patents which have expired for non-payment of fees. Patents issued under this law shall contain a notification of the fees to be paid, and the time of such payments. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner to keep a record of said payments; and a receipt therefor, or a certificate that the payment has been made, sealed, and executed in the manner provided by law for certified copies, shall be conclusive evidence of the payment; and, upon request, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner to cause such a certificate to be indorsed upon or annexed to the letters-patent.

SEC. 13. Section 4908 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows: Every patent, or any interest therein, shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing; and the patentee, or his assigns or legal representatives, may, in like manner, grant and convey an exclusive right under his patent to the whole or any specified part of the United States. An assignment, grant, or conveyance, or a license exclusive as to purpose or territory, shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of said patent or license thereunder for a valuable consideration, without notice, unless it is recorded in the Patent Office within two months from the execution thereof, or before the execution of such subsequent grant, conveyance, or license. And all licenses and all powers of attorney and agreements made under or relating to any letters-patent, may, if desired, be recorded in the Patent Office, and any duly certified copy of the record of the same may be used in evidence in all cases where the copy of the record of any assignment so certified may now by law be used.

SEC. 14. When there are two or more joint owners or owners in common of any patent, a license from any one of said owners shall be good and valid in law, and shall vest in the licensee a right to use the said invention, but not exclusively, according to the terms of said license, unless the conveyance or other instrument creating such joint ownership, or ownership in common, recorded at the Patent Office before the execution of said license, shall provide that no license shall be valid unless executed by all of such owners, or a specified portion thereof in number or interest, or unless an agreement to that effect shall be made by said owners and filed for record before the execution of said license.

SEC. 15. Whoever, with intent to defraud, conveys any interest in any patent or grants any license thereunder, knowing that the interest or right so purporting to be granted or conveyed has been previously granted in whole or in part to another, without, before the payment, either by note or otherwise, of the consideration, or any part thereof, informing the grantee or grantees of the existence and nature of such incumbrance or prior right, so far as he has actual knowledge thereof, shall, for every such offense, be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 16. Section 479 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended, so as to read as follows: The Commissioner of Patents, assistant commissioner, and the chief clerk, before entering upon their duties, shall severally give bond, with sureties, to the Treasurer of the United States, the first two in the sum of $10,000 each, and the last in the sum of $5,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their respective duties, and that they shall render to the proper officers of the Treasury a true account of all money received by virtue of their offices.

SEC. 17. Section 493 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: The price to be paid for uncertified printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents shall be determined by the Commissioner of Patents, within the limits of actual cost as the minimum, and fifty cents as the maximum price, and for uncertified manuscript copies the reasonable cost of making the same; and the price to be charged for certified copies shall be the same as for uncertified copies, with the addition of twenty-five cents for the certificate and seal.

SEC. 18. Section 892 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: Copies of any records, books, papers, drawings, or models, belonging to the Patent Office, and of letters-patent authenticated by the seal and certified by the Commissioner, assistant commissioner, or acting commissioner of Patents, shall be evidence in all cases wherein the originals could be evidence; and any person making application therefor, and paying the fee required by law, shall have certified copies thereof.

SEC. 19. Section 4885 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: The final fee due upon the allowance of a patent shall be paid within six months after the sending of the notice of such allowance to the applicant or his agent, and if the fee be not paid within such time the patent shall not be issued. Every patent shall issue, bear date, and take effect as of a day certain, to be fixed by the Commissioner of Patents, not later than the second calendar week after the payment of the final fee; and until the day of issue the application shall be within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner: Provided, That no application on which the final fee has been paid, after notice of allowance, shall be withheld from issue because of interference with any application filed subsequent to the payment of the final fee as aforesaid.

SEC. 20. Section 4887 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent issued subsequent to March 2, 1861, be declared invalid, by reason of its having been first patented in a foreign country upon the invention of the same person, unless the same has been introduced into public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application; but all applications hereafter to be made for patents for inventions which shall have been patented in a foreign country upon the invention of the same person shall be made within two years after the date of such foreign patent; but this section shall not apply to any patent which has heretofore expired by operation of existing law.

SEC. 21. Section 4895 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: Patents may be granted and issued to the assignee of the inventor or discoverer, and they may be reissued to the owner or owners of the entire interest in the patent; but the assignment must first be entered of record in the Patent Office. And in all cases of an application by an assignee for the issue of a patent, the specification shall be signed and sworn to by the inventor or discoverer; and in all cases of an application for a reissue of any patent, the application may be made and the corrected specification sworn to and signed by the owner or owners, or in case of death or disability, his or her legal representative, of the entire interest in the patent.

SEC. 22. Any person who has an interest in an invention or discovery, whether as inventor, discoverer, or assignee, for which a patent was ordered to issue upon the payment of the final fee, but who fails to make payment thereof within six months from the time at which it was passed and allowed, and notice thereof was sent to the applicant or his agent, shall have a right to make an application for a patent for such invention or discovery the same as in the case of an original appli cation. But such second application, in order to be a continuation of the original application, must be made within two years after the allowance thereof. But no person shall be held responsible in damages for the manufacture or use of any article or thing for which a patent was ordered to issue under such renewed application prior to the issue of the patent. And upon the hearing of renewed applications preferred under this section, abandonment shall be considered as a question of fact.

SEC. 23. Section 4900 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: It shall be the duty of all patentees, and their assigns and legal representatives, and of all persons making or vending any patented article for or under them, to give sufficient notice to the public that the same is patented, either by fixing thereon the word "patented," together with the year the patent was granted, and number of the patent, or when, from the character of the article, this cannot be done, by fixing to it, or to the package wherein one or more of them is inclosed, a label containing the like notice; and in any suit for infringement, by the party failing so to mark, no profits or damages shall be recovered by the plaintiff, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement, and continued, after such notice, to make, use, or vend the article so patented: Provided, That profits or damages shall not be forfeited for failure to mark the number of the patent on a patented article or its label, unless such failure shall occur at a period later than six months after the passage of this act: And provided further, That this section shall only be applicable to patents hereafter granted.

SEC. 24. Section 4904 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: Whenever an application is made for a patent, or for the reissue of a patent, which, in the opinion of the Commissioner, would interfere with any pending application, or with any unexpired patent, he shall give notice to the parties in interest, and shall direct the examiner of interferences to proceed to determine the question of priority of invention; and the Commissioner may issue a patent to the party who is adjudged the prior inventor, unless the adverse party appeals from the decision of the examiner of interferences, or of the board of examiners-in-chief, within such time, not less than twenty days, as the Commissioner shall prescribe: Provided, That after the final decision between the parties to an interference, the application of the successful party shall not be put into interference with any application filed subsequent to the closing of the testimony taken on behalf of the successful party in the interference so decided; but the patent shall issue to the successful contestant, and then, if desired by the subsequent applicant or applicants, an interference may be had with said patent: And provided further, That in the case of reissues no interference shall be declared with any patent of later date than that sought to be reissued, except when the original application for such subsequent patent is shown by the office records to have been of prior date to the patent sought to be reissued, nor with any application for a patent filed subsequent to the date of the patent sought to be reissued; but, if desired by such subsequent applicant or patentee, on an application for a reissue, an interference may be had with the reissued patent after the same shall have been issued.

SEC. 25. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing provisions are hereby repealed.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it proposed to pass the whole of this bill without the House having any opportunity to debate and consider it?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Does the bill not change our whole patent system?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I desire to ask whether this is the report of the Committee on Patents, and whether the bill as it has been read has the sanction of the committee?

Mr. VANCE. It has.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is only recognizing gentlemen who have the authority of their committees to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina not allow me to offer a single amendment to provide that the bill shall not be applicable to pending causes of action?

Mr. VANCE. I have not that authority.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, there were—ayes 67, noes 79.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 26; not a sufficient number.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only twenty-six members voting therefor. So the yeas and nays were not ordered, and two-thirds not voting in favor thereof, the rules were not suspended.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Senate bill No. 238, entitled "A bill extending the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad," be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration and amendments by the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that all debate on said bill and amendments be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. This same bill has been voted on once by the House and defeated, and I make the point of order that it is not therefore in order to take it up and act on it again. I understand that this is the same bill that the House defeated at the last session.

Mr. BANKS. The motion of my colleague is to suspend the rules of the House.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I desire to add that the gentleman is mistaken as to the matter of fact that this is the same bill that was defeated at the last session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not fully informed of the facts as to that, but if the rules be as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] suggests, this is a proposition to suspend all the rules, that rule as well as all others.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the gentleman who makes this motion will have leave to state the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear him.

Mr. EDEN. I understand that under general parliamentary rules after a bill has had final action in the House during a Congress it is not in order to bring the same bill up during that Congress, and that we have no right to suspend the rules so as to go back and take up again a measure that has already been defeated by the House. It occurs to me that that would be a very strange proceeding.

The SPEAKER. The House is governed by certain rules which provide for a certain order of business. This proposition is a motion to suspend all the rules and consequently the Chair is unable to see how, even if the rule existed as the gentleman from Illinois states it, it would prevent the entertainment of this motion or give the opportunity to the House to suspend, even if such a rule existed.

Mr. EDEN. If the rules are suspended for the purpose of considering this bill I would ask if it can then be passed by a majority vote?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. EDEN. Would it be in order to offer this amendment?

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to revive any grant of land to said company which has lapsed, nor to extend the time within which any grant of land to said company would lapse under existing law.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order now, for the bill is not now before the House. The Chair will not say whether that amendment would be in order or not until the bill comes up for consideration.

The question was taken on suspending the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 99, noes 57.

Mr. CONGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Is the motion to suspend the rules so as to consider the bill in the House?

The SPEAKER. To consider it in the House.

Mr. BANNING. For the space of one hour?

The SPEAKER. For ten minutes.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 104, not voting 53; as follows:

CONTAGIOUS OR INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to suspend the rules so that the bill (S. No. 1784) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States and to establish a bureau of public health be brought before the House for consideration, and that twenty minutes be allowed for debate.

The motion was agreed to; there being ayes 105, noes not counted.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established in the Treasury Department a bureau of health, with a chief executive officer to be called the director-general of health, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $4,500 per annum. And there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury in said bureau of health, in addition to the clerks and assistants necessary to perform duties in connection with the Marine Hospital Service, and whose salaries are payable out of the marine-hospital fund, one chief clerk at a salary of $2,200, and such other clerks in number and grade as may be found necessary, not to exceed three.

SEC. 2. That in connection with said bureau of health there shall be established a board of health, to consist of seven members to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose compensation during the time when actually engaged in the performance of their duties under this act shall be $10 per diem and reasonable expenses. The Surgeon-General of the Army and the Surgeon-General of the Navy shall be ex officio additional members of said board, but without additional pay. Said board shall meet in Washington in thirty days after the passage of this act, and in Washington or elsewhere from time to time, upon notice from the director-general of health, or upon its own adjournments, and shall frame all rules and regulations authorized or required by this act, and shall make or cause to be made by members of their own body such special examinations and investigations at any place or places within the United States as they may order to aid in the execution of this act and the promotion of its objects, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The director-general of health shall be ex officio a member and president of said board of health. All rules and regulations framed under this act by said board of health shall be uniform and subject to the approval of the President, and shall be enforced by the director-general of health.

SEC. 3. That the bureau of health shall be charged with the supervision of all matters connected with the Marine Hospital Service, and the director-general of health shall perform all the duties and exercise all the powers now devolving upon the supervising surgeon of the Marine Hospital Service, which office is hereby abolished, and all the records, papers, and other matters belonging thereto transferred to the bureau of health. And said bureau is charged with the execution of the provisions of this and all other laws to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States and the enforcement of all quarantine regulations established by law under the authority of the United States in respect to all vessels and vehicles engaged in commerce with foreign nations and among the States, whether by land or water. The bureau of health shall also be charged with the duty of obtaining information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious or infectious diseases are or may be imported into the United States; and to this end the consular officers of the United States at all ports and places who may be required to do so, shall make to the director-general of health weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such forms as he may prescribe. And the bureau of health shall also obtain through the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service, collectors of customs, and such other sources as are accessible, including State and municipal health officers and authorities throughout the United States, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States; and the director-general of health shall prepare and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to State and municipal health officers and authorities, weekly abstracts of consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by him; and said bureau of health shall also, as far as it may be able, by means of the voluntary co-operation of State and municipal authorities, of public associations and private persons, procure information in relation to the climatic and other conditions affecting the public health. And the director-general of health shall make an annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury of the operations of the bureau of health for transmission to Congress, with such recommendation as he may deem important to the public interest.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any vessel engaged in the transportation of goods or persons from any foreign port where any contagious or infectious disease exists epidemically to and into the United States, to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act, and all rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof. And any such vessel which shall enter or attempt to enter a port of the United States in violation thereof, shall forfeit to the United States a sum to be awarded in the discretion of the court not exceeding $5,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the proper district court of the United States.

SEC. 5. All such vessels shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure a certificate in duplicate setting forth that said vessel has in all respects complied with the rules and regulations in such cases prescribed and herein authorized for the disinfection of the said vessel, its cargo, passengers, and crew. And said consular officer is required, before granting such certificate, to be satisfied that the matters and things therein stated are true; and for his services in this behalf shall be entitled to demand and receive such fees as shall by lawful regulations be allowed to be accounted for as required in other cases.

And all vessels sailing from the port of Havana, in the island of Cuba, and bound for any port in the United States, shall be required to obtain from a medical officer serving in the office of the consul of the United States at that port, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for that purpose, and who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, his certificate setting forth that he has personally inspected said vessel, her cargo, crew, and passengers; that the rules and regulations prescribed by the bureau of health in respect thereto have been fully complied with, and that in his opinion the said vessel may be allowed to enter any port of the United States and land its cargo and passengers without injury to the health thereof on account of any contagious or infectious disease. And any vessel sailing from said port without such certificate of said medical officer, entering any port of the United States, shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500, which shall be a lien on the same, to be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the proper district court of the United States.

SEC. 6. The director-general of health shall, from time to time, issue to the consular officers of the United States, and to the medical officer serving at the port of Havana, and otherwise make publicly known, in such manner as shall be therein prescribed, the rules and regulations framed by the board of health and approved by the President, to be used and complied with by vessels in foreign ports, for disinfecting such vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crew, before their departure for any port in the United States, and in the course of the voyage; and also such other rules and regulations which shall be observed in the inspection of the same, on the arrival thereof at any quarantine station at the port of destination, and for the disinfection and isolation of the same, and the treatment of cargo and persons on board, so as to prevent the spread of cholera, yellow fever, or other contagious or infectious disease; and it shall not be lawful for any vessel to enter said port, to discharge its cargo, or land its passengers, except upon a permit from the health officer at such quarantine station, certifying that said rules and regulations have in all respects been observed and complied with, as well on his part as on the part of the said vessel and its master, in respect to the same, and to its cargo, passengers, and crew. And the master of every such vessel shall produce and deliver to the collector of customs at said port of entry, together with the other papers of the vessel, the said certificates required to be obtained at the port of departure, and the permit and certificate herein required to be obtained from the health officer at the port of entry. In case the health officer at any such port appointed by local authority shall refuse to adopt and observe the rules and regulations prescribed by the bureau of health for the inspection, disinfection, and treatment of vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crews, or, in the opinion of the board of health, shall neglect or fail so to do, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a health officer of the United States for said port, who shall perform the duties thereof, as prescribed by said bureau of health, according to the rules and regulations as prescribed by the board of health, as provided by the second section of this act; and to provide for the salary of such health officer and the necessary expenses of his office, the collector of customs at said port shall demand and collect from every such vessel a fee of $6.50.

But it shall be the duty of the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service and of customs officers to aid in the enforcement of the rules and regulations authorized by this act without additional compensation, except for actual and necessary traveling expenses incurred in the performance of such duties.

SEC. 7. The rules and regulations framed and approved as hereinbefore authorized shall be promulgated, so that when cholera, yellow fever, or other similar contagious or infectious disease shall be ascertained by the director-general of health to exist in any port or place within any one of the United States, in such form as threatens its spread, as to prevent, as far as practicable, the communication of the same to other ports and places within other States, by means of vessels and vehicles engaged in the transportation of goods or passengers between two or more States, whether by land or water; and in that case the director-general of health shall select suitable localities for establishing stations on the rivers and other lines of interstate commerce and travel by railroads, and may cause to be erected necessary temporary buildings for the disinfection of passengers, baggage, cargoes, vessels, and vehicles, and may enforce such rules and regulations relating thereto as may have been prescribed therefor.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the director-general of health of the board of health, so far as they lawfully may in the execution of their powers conferred upon them by law, to correspond and co-operate with similar local officers, boards, and authorities, acting under laws of the States in sanitary measures to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases from foreign countries into the United States, and from one State into any other State by means of commercial intercourse, or upon and along the lines of interstate trade and travel. And to that end it shall be lawful for said board of health and director-general of health to confer upon any such local officer or board within or near the locality where his or its authority is exercised power also to enforce the provisions of this act and any rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to supersede or impair any sanitary or quarantine law of any State.

SEC. 9. This act shall continue in force no longer than the period of four years from and after its approval.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. On behalf of the House committee on this subject, I move to amend the Senate bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there shall be established in the Treasury Department a board of health, to consist of seven members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than one of whom shall be appointed from any one State, whose compensation, during the time when actually engaged in the performance of their duties under this act, shall be $10 per diem and reasonable expenses. The Surgeon-General of the Army and the Surgeon-General of the Navy shall be ex officio additional members of said board, but without additional pay. Said board shall meet in Washington within thirty days after the passage of this act, and in Washington or elsewhere from time to time upon notice from the president of the board, who is to be chosen by the members thereof, or upon its own adjournments, and shall frame all rules and regulations authorized or required by this act, and shall make or cause to be made by members of their own body such special examinations and investigations at any place or places within the United States as they may order, to aid in the execution of this act and the promotion of its objects, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. All rules and regulations framed under this act by said board of health shall be uniform: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to supersede or to interfere with any State or municipal quarantines, or precautionary measures of the States or municipalities now in operation, or which may hereafter be inaugurated, to prevent the introduction or spread of infectious or epidemic diseases.

SEC. 2. The board of health shall be charged with the execution of all laws and orders, rules and regulations, made in pursuance of law for the improvement of the sanitary condition of the District of Columbia. It shall also be charged with the duty of obtaining information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious or infectious diseases are or may be imported into the United States; and to this end the consular officers of the United States at all ports and places, who may be required to do so, shall make to the board of health weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such form as may be prescribed. The board of health shall also obtain through the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service, collectors of customs, and such other sources as are accessible, including State and municipal health officers and authorities throughout the United States, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places within the United States; and the board of health shall prepare and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to State and municipal health officers and authorities, weekly abstracts of the consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by them; and said board of health shall also, as far as it may be able, by means of voluntary co-operation of State and municipal authorities, of public associations and private persons, procure information relating to the climatic and other conditions affecting the public health; and the board of health shall make an annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury of its operations for transmission to Congress, with such recommendations as they may deem important to the public interests.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any vessel engaged in the transportation of goods or persons from any foreign port where any contagious or infectious disease exists, to and into the United States, to enter any port of the United States, except in accordance with the provisions of this act, and all rules and regulations made in pursuance and applicable thereto; and any such vessel which shall enter, or attempt to enter, a port of the United States in violation thereof shall forfeit to the United States a sum, to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $5,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the proper district court of the United States.

SEC. 4. All such vessels shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure, a certificate in duplicate, setting forth that said vessel has in all respects complied with the rules and regulations in such cases prescribed, and herein authorized, for the disinfection of said vessel, its cargo, passengers, and crew; and said consular officer is required, before granting such certificate, to be satisfied that the matters and things therein stated are true, and for his services in that behalf shall be entitled to demand and receive such fees as shall by lawful regulations be allowed, to be accounted for as is required in other cases.

And all vessels sailing from the port of Havana, in the island of Cuba, and bound for any port in the United States, shall be required to obtain from the medical officer serving in the office of consul of the United States at the port, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for that purpose, and who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, his certificate, setting forth that he has personally inspected said vessel, her cargo, crew, and passengers; that the rules and regulations prescribed by the board of health in respect thereto have been fully complied with; and that in his opinion the said vessel may be allowed to enter any port in the United States, and land its cargo and passengers, without danger to the health thereof on account of any contagious or infectious disease; and any vessel sailing from said port without such certificate of said medical officer entering any port of the United States shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500, which shall be a lien on the same, to be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the proper district court of the United States. And any vessel sailing from any other infected port, and bound for any port in the United States, shall be required to obtain a like certificate from the consular officer of the United States at said port. And the Secretary of State is hereby directed to give information to the consular officers of the United States of the duties imposed upon them by this act.

SEC. 5. The board of health shall from time to time issue to the consular officers of the United States and to the medical officer serving at the port of Havana, and otherwise make publicly known in such manner as shall be therein prescribed, the rules and regulations framed by the said board of health and approved by the President, to be used and complied with by vessels in foreign ports for disinfecting such vessels, their cargo, passengers, and crew, before their departure for any port in the United States and in the course of the voyage; and also such other rules and regulations which shall be observed in the inspection of the same on the arrival thereof at any quarantine station at the port of destination, and for the disinfection and isolation of the same and the treatment of cargo and persons on board, so as to prevent the spread of cholera and yellow fever or other contagious and infectious diseases; and it shall not be lawful for any vessel to enter said port to discharge its cargo or land its passengers except upon a permit of the health officer at such quarantine station, certifying that said rules and regulations have in all respects been observed and complied with, as well on his part as on the part of the said vessel and its master, in respect to the same and to its cargo, passengers, and crew; and the master of every such vessel shall produce and deliver to the collector of customs of said port of entry, together with the other papers of the vessel, the said certificates required to be obtained at the port of departure, and the permit and certificate herein required to be obtained from the health officer at the port of entry. It shall be the duty of the medical officer of the Marine Hospital Service and of customs officers to aid in the enforcement of the rules and regulations authorized by this act, without additional compensation except for actual and necessary traveling expenses incurred in the performance of such duties.

SEC. 6. That rules and regulations framed and approved as hereinbefore authorized shall be promulgated so that when cholera, yellow fever, or other similar contagious or infectious disease shall be ascertained by the board of health to exist in any port or place within any one of the United States, in such form as threatens its spread, as to prevent, as far as practicable, the communication of the same to other ports and places within other States, by means of vessels and vehicles engaged in the transportation of goods or passengers between two or more States, whether by land or water; and when the executive of any State in which any infectious disease may exist, or whether they are likely to spread, shall inform the board of health that the State or municipal authorities are unable to control said disease, or prevent the spread of the same, then, in that case, the board of health shall select suitable localities for establishing quarantine stations on the rivers and other lines of interstate commerce, and may enforce such rules and regulations relating thereto as may have been prescribed therefor.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the board of health, so far as they lawfully may in the execution of the powers conferred upon them by law, to correspond and co-operate with similar local officers, boards, and authorities acting under laws of the States in sanitary measures, to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases from foreign countries into the United States, and from one State into any other State, by means of commercial intercourse, or upon and along the lines of interstate trade and travel; and to that end it shall be lawful for said board of health to confer upon any such local officer or board within or near the locality where his or its authority is exercised, power also to enforce the provisions of this act, and any rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof.

SEC. 8. That the board of health, with the assistance of the Academy of Science, which is hereby requested and directed to co-operate with them for that purpose, shall report to Congress at its next session a plan for a national public health organization, which plan shall be prepared after consultation with the principal sanitary organizations and the sanitarians of the several States of the United States, special attention being given to the subject of quarantine, both maritime and inland, and especially as to regulations which should be established between State or local systems of quarantine and a national quarantine system.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to reserve all points of order on this bill. It is now brought up for consideration and is subject to points of order like any other bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BUTLER. That it takes money out of the Treasury.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. It takes no money out of the Treasury directly.

Mr. BUTLER. The motion was, Mr. Speaker, to suspend the rules, not for the purpose of passing the bill, but for the purpose of considering it.

The SPEAKER. That waives of course any point of order, for if any point of order was sustained against the bill it could not be considered.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course in the little time allowed under the order of the House it will not be possible to discuss this bill in all its features. There is, I apprehend, but little difference of opinion among members of this body in regard to the importance and necessity of the measure. The only difference that is likely to arise relates to the details—the mode and manner of executing the law. The committees of the Senate and of the House, after a very careful examination of all the facts connected with the subject, have agreed substantially upon the same bill. They have endeavored to obviate as far as possible all objections that have been suggested from any quarter. There was doubt in the minds of many members of the committee—probably that doubt is now entertained by many members of the House—in respect to the power of the Federal Government to legislate upon the subject of the public health. We have endeavored in all the provisions of this bill to preserve intact all State regulations upon this subject. We have been very careful not to invade any just and legitimate powers of the States; and I believe it will be conceded by most lawyers when they examine the details of the measure that but little if any objection can be urged to the bill upon that ground. One of the provisions of the bill is that none of its requirements shall in any way interfere with existing State regulations upon the subject. It even goes further than I should have been willing to go myself: it not only declares that existing laws and regulations of States and cities shall not be disturbed, but that any regulations which may be hereafter enacted by them upon this subject shall have full effect.

There is very much I should be glad to say upon this bill; but the time is so brief that I must conclude. I yield seven minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE.]

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] on behalf of the House committee will be adopted. There are, in my judgment, grave objections to the bill as passed by the Senate. It provides for establishing a bureau of health in the Treasury Department, with an executive officer to be called the director-general of health. This director-general of health is to be paid a large salary, and be provided with a considerable corps of clerks and other employés. He is to be made ex officio president of the board of health and clothed with power to enforce their rules and regulations. It is true there is a provision in the bill to the effect that State quarantine rules and regulations shall not be impaired or interfered with. But if gentlemen will examine the bill carefully they will find a provision to this effect: that whenever the quarantine officer appointed by the local authority shall refuse to observe or to adopt the regulations provided for by the central authority, or who, in the opinion of the central authority, shall fail or omit so to do, then and in that case it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a quarantine officer of the United States at that port with power to enforce the rules and regulations prescribed by the central board here at Washington.

Now, I am opposed to the creation of any such office; there is no necessity for it. We need no director-general of health, with such large and extraordinary powers. Surely a man intrusted with such powers ought to be a man of almost infinite wisdom as well as of infinite purity and patriotism. If he should chance to be one of the wrong-headed sort, ill-tempered and tyrannical, it is easy for gentlemen to foresee what trouble and difficulty and complication might arise from his unwise administration of affairs.

It is safer and wiser, in the opinion of the House committee, to follow the example of the States which have adopted State boards of health, and to provide that the executive officer of the board shall be chosen by the members of the boards themselves, and be subject to their direction and control. Our bill proceeds upon that theory.

No man upon this floor is more anxious than I am to do whatever we can properly do to prevent a recurrence of yellow fever and to save our people from its ravages. Representing a people who have to-day a lively recollection of the manifold and accumulated horrors that we suffered in 1855, I should feel that I was recreant to my duty if I failed to advocate any measure that would be calculated to afford relief.

But, Mr. Speaker, the public mind in certain sections is feverish and deeply agitated with regard to this matter. My fear is that in our great anxiety to do something to afford relief we do mischief by completely upsetting that equilibrium of powers which has been heretofore recognized as existing between our Federal and State systems of Government. There are some powers which belong to the National Government. There are certain other powers which belong to the State governments. The power to regulate commerce is Federal, international, and interstate. The power to guard and protect the lives and health of its citizens belongs to the States. This doctrine was clearly enunciated by Chief-Justice Marshall in the leading case of Gibbon vs. Ogden, and has been uniformly followed in the decisions of the Supreme Court from that day to this.

Mr. Webster, the great expounder of the Constitution, who was never suspected of any sympathy with strict constructionists, in the argument of the case of Gibbon vs. Ogden declared that quarantine and health laws belong to the States. The great Chief-Justice himself speaks of quarantine laws and health laws of every description as component parts of that immense mass of legislation not surrendered to the General Government, all of which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves.

In the case of The Steamboat Company vs. Port Wardens, 6 Wallace, 33, Chief-Justice Chase says:

The power to enact inspection laws is expressly recognized as not affected by the grant of power to regulate commerce. And some other powers the exercise of which may in various degrees affect commerce have always been held not to be within the grant to Congress. To this class, it is settled, belong quarantine and other health laws, laws concerning the domestic police, and laws regulating the internal trade of a State.

The question very naturally arises in considering this subject, what power has the Federal Government in the premises? In the opinion of a majority of the House committee, Congress can adapt its legislation to that of the States and constitutionally enact provisions in aid of those of the States. In the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, already referred to, Chief-Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the court, uses the following language:

The acts of Congress passed in 1796 and 1799, empowering and directing the officers of the General Government to conform to and assist in the execution of the quarantine and health laws of a State, proceed, it is said, upon the idea that these laws are constitutional. It is undoubtedly true that they do proceed upon that idea, and the constitutionality of such laws has never, so far as we are informed, been denied. But they do not imply an acknowledgment that a State may rightfully regulate commerce with foreign nations or among the States; for they do not imply that such laws are an exercise of that power, or enacted with a view to it. On the contrary, they are treated as quarantine and health laws, are so denominated in the acts of Congress, and are considered as flowing from the acknowledged power of a State to provide for the health of its citizens. But, as it was apparent that some of the provisions made for this purpose, and in virtue of this power, might interfere with and be affected by the laws of the United States made for the regulation of commerce, Congress, in that spirit of harmony and conciliation which ought always to characterize the conduct of governments standing in the relation which that of the Union and those of the States bear to each other, has directed its officers to aid in the execution of these laws, and has in some measure adapted its own legislation to this object by making provisions in aid of those of the States. But in making these provisions the opinion is unequivocally manifested that Congress may control the State laws, so far as it may be necessary to control them, for the regulation of commerce.

Our bill proceeds on the theory, in accordance with that opinion, that it is competent for the Federal Government to supplement the legislation of the States, to afford auxiliary legislation to aid the State governments in enacting provisions to take care of the health of their people, but not to supersede and set aside State legislation. Now, sir, that is briefly the difference between these two bills. I do not myself like altogether the House bill. I think it might be improved in many respects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GOODE. A word further: this is an experiment to last until the next session of Congress. We call to our aid the National Academy of Sciences and ask them to confer with local and State quarantine officers and report at the next session of Congress a detailed plan for a health organization in this country. I hope the substitute will be adopted.

Mr. TUCKER. Let me ask my colleague a question.

Mr. GOODE. Yes, if there be no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. Is there any provision in the bill by which this health board is to have control over the quarantine regulations of the States?

Mr. GOODE. On the contrary, the regulations adopted here are subordinated to the State regulations throughout.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, nobody can surpass me in anxiety to give all possible aid to those who may suffer from yellow fever, and to prevent the coming again of that terrible scourge upon our country. I am willing to go to the utmost of our powers to meet its dangers; but I will not consent that the United States Government shall be degraded in its proper functions while endeavoring to serve a distressed people.

Now, the Senate bill creates a board of health with a head to be known as the director-general of health. It abolishes the Supervising Surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service in its present form and transfers the duties of that service to the director-general of health.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] seems to be alarmed at that name as though there were danger in a word. I have no doubt at all that the United States is empowered by the Constitution to make general quarantine regulations for all the ports of the nation, and to declare that one inch outside of the boundary line of the State proper is a line of national control, and that no ship shall cross it to enter any port. When we say no more than fifteen Chinese shall come to our shores in any ship, I think we may say no more than fifteen yellow-fever germs or fifteen yellow-fever cases shall come.

The Senate bill, without disturbing any of the local quarantine regulations of the States, (for it expressly says it shall not interfere with any of them,) gives the power to the national board to establish national quarantine regulations wherever none exist, and to apply the outer circle, the quarantine power of the United States superimposed upon or rather outside of the quarantine regulations of the States. When a vessel passes our line of pickets, if the State authorities wish to keep it out, very well; we do not interfere with them; we only say we will establish a skirmish line a little farther out toward the enemy's camp. On the contrary, in the House bill everything is made "By your leave, sovereign State." The nation is allowed to co-operate with the States if they graciously permit it to do so. If the government of a State informs us there is a yellow-fever invasion too great in extent for the State to resist, and calls upon the General Government, then we may meekly and humbly go and assist and spend the money of the United States under the direction and at the call of the States. But it shall not be by my consent. When the United States proposes to protect our coasts against infectious vessels from abroad, I propose it shall do it in its own name and by its own authority and at its own expense. But while I would not have it interfere with the States, I do not propose it shall be subordinated to the will and authority and direction of the States.

I believe we ought to pass substantially the Senate bill. And that bill I may say was drawn by a gentleman from one of the Southern States as deeply interested in the subject as we are, and I think as properly jealous of the true, genuine rights of the States as anybody ought to be.

A MEMBER. Who was it?

Mr. GARFIELD. Senator HARRIS, of Tennessee. I have said in general all I want to say on the bill. I think it will be a great calamity if we do not pass the Senate bill substantially as it lies upon our table. It is carefully drawn. It was considered in joint committee. It had almost if not the unanimous consent of the Senate wing of the committee and a large minority of our committee, but their views of State sovereignty and State authority and State superiority finally prevailed in the House committee, and we have this modified, emasculated, and almost powerless bill except to spend the money in the States when they ask it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. I think the substitute which has just been read in the hearing of the House, offered by the majority of the House committee for the Senate bill, is not obnoxious to the criticism passed on it by the gentleman from Ohio. There is in this substitute no conflict between the authority of the United States and the powers to be exercised under it and the authority of the State. When we were taking this testimony in New Orleans, of the medical experts who spoke advisedly and intelligently on the origin and cause of the fever the great bulk of them concurred in the opinion that this disease whenever it visited our country was imported. And when we took the testimony of commercial men on the question as to how the absolute shutting up of ports like New Orleans would affect their commerce, those engaged in the trade that would be especially affected by it, with South America, all concurred in the opinion that the question of interference with commerce was not to be considered, even in a money point of view, in comparison with the terrible losses which the prevalence of the epidemic always caused.

This evidence went to show that we could establish a national quarantine running all along the Atlantic coast against the ports from which this disease is usually brought; that we could establish a national quarantine, to be maintained by the Navy of the United States in a great degree, that should guard the outer lines of approach of these infectious diseases, while we would not interfere with the State or city regulations which were designed to protect the States or cities on the Atlantic coast. Would you establish a national quarantine, in the language of the gentleman from Ohio, which would do away with the local quarantine? Would you establish under the bill as it comes from the Senate a national quarantine that would destroy the quarantine of New York and Boston and Charleston and Savannah and New Orleans? The very office and function of the House bill is that while we guard the national quarantine, at the same time we preserve the quarantine which the States and cities on the Atlantic coast have provided for themselves.

Mr. MCGOWAN. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on this bill.

There was no objection, and leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not know that I ought to oppose the present bill; but I think we ought to oppose all measures that look toward the aggrandizement and increase of our Federal power here over matters which belong peculiarly to the States and to local authorities. Two years ago, when our lamented friend, Mr. Hartridge, brought in his measure here, similar to this, I drew as an amendment the proviso which is now on this bill that there should be no superseding or interfering with any State or municipal quarantine. I want to guard that at all times.

But I tell you, although that language may be in the bill, these bills are entering-wedges, and they grow by what they feed on. Power aggrandizes itself from year to year until from a few seeds we have a great agricultural bureau; from a few statistics about education we have thirty or forty or fifty thousand dollars a year for education expended by the bureau here. I do not want this health bureau here.

I tell this House that there is only one way to stop the yellow fever, and it is one requiring the courage and the sacrifice of the southern people. They must cut off intercourse with the tropical islands and the tropical countries; they must cut off their commerce; and until they do that all these regulations are in vain. In Mobile, in Boston, in New York, quarantine has been all-sufficient to prevent the spread of these infectious diseases. And I do trust before the House passes any bill, especially a bill so ill-advised as this, they will hesitate—as the Speaker now does with his gavel. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. PHILLIPS.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no time remaining.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then I cannot yield it.

THOMAS P. CHENEY.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, asked leave to present, and have printed and recommitment, the report of the majority of said committee in the matter of certain charges against Thomas P. Cheney, superintendent of first division of railway mail service; and also that the report of the minority be printed whenever presented.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered; not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the Postmaster-General:

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the Attorney-General has advised this Department that members of Congress are entitled to exercise the franking privilege from the commencement of the term for which they are elected, although no session of Congress has actually been called, and they have therefore not been able to take the oath of office.

Very respectfully,

D. M. KEY,
Postmaster-General.

HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives.

INFECTIOUS OR CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. This is a very important question, and I dislike to trespass longer upon the time and patience of the House, but I trust they will bear with me for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. That may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like a minute or two myself.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the objection.

Mr. BUTLER. If we can have ten minutes upon each side I will have no objection.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then submit the question again, whether the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] shall have ten minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. I would like to occupy a little time of the House myself.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks upon this question.

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL's remarks are as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the interest I feel in this subject prompts me to ask the indulgence of the House a few moments while I say a few words. I am pleased to see the House manifest a decided disposition to pass some measure upon the subject and hope that no differences of opinion arising upon the merits of the two rival propositions will imperil legislation so much needed. While my preference is very decided for the Senate bill I shall accept the House bill, but do not believe it will prove as efficient in operation as the Senate proposition. The adoption of measures calculated to prevent a recurrence of the horrors of the last summer will be hailed with satisfaction by the people I represent, who were the victims of the scourge and suffered all its horrors. Anxiety is felt among them even now, to a painful degree, lest the coming summer may bring a repetition of the scenes of the last, and legislation like that proposed will tend to relieve that anxiety and give them some comforting assurance for the future. I trust that one or the other of the propositions will be adopted and become the law without delay.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I do not concur in many of the views expressed by my colleague of the committee from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE.] I spent four years of my life in an effort to make the States greater than the Federal Government. During that time the people of the South fought more than a thousand battles to maintain that doctrine, and in the effort more than a million of lives were sacrificed. I am very much afraid that the effort made here to-day to establish the superiority of the States to the Federal Government may result in the loss of a million more lives in this Quixotic effort to maintain some imaginary right of the States that is threatened with no danger. Arguments of this character are only calculated to defeat the measure by bringing into the discussion questions that it is in no way important to investigate or determine. It is not proposed by either the substitute or the Senate bill to disturb any right or power that can be rightfully claimed either by States or municipalities, and I regret that my friend from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] has excited any such apprehension.

I am aware of the fact that the gentleman from Virginia entertains some extreme ideas about the rights of the States, for we discussed those questions while considering this bill in committee, and I dissented from them then as widely as I do now. I am prepared to go as far as any gentleman on this floor in the protection of all the powers that ought to belong to any State of this Union, but these powers should not extend beyond the protection and welfare of our whole people. It is true that the Constitution does not declare that we may legislate specially upon the subject of yellow fever, and that the resolutions of '98 omitted to mention that subject. But the world moves; this country grows; accumulated evils have come upon us in the last few years which, as well as this one, require new and perhaps extraordinary legislation.

I am aware that this question has been discussed to some extent heretofore in the courts of the country, and that Chief-Justice Marshall delivered an opinion more than fifty years ago in which he held that States had the exclusive right to legislate upon the subject of public health within their own borders, but he never pretended to hold that the Federal Government did not have equal power outside of State jurisdiction.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the celebrated Missouri cattle case, decided in 1857, held expressly that the Federal Government had the right to legislate upon this important subject without regard to State regulations, and if Chief-Justice Marshall ever held the doctrine stated by the gentleman from Virginia, he was entirely overruled by this later decision.

If any principle was ever established by judicial decision and upheld by inexorable necessity it is the power of Congress to legislate upon all subjects which affect the welfare of the people of every part of the country. I wish I had time to read the decision to which I have referred and many others of similar character, but I have not.

Now, sir, I say to gentlemen who adhere to these extreme ideas of the rights of the States that it is sheer folly to tell me that the States will ever adopt such regulation as will protect the public health of the country. The experience of the past has taught us that no sea-port town having any commerce will ever adopt and adhere to any quarantine regulation which will interfere to any great extent with their commercial interest, and especially is this so of southern ports of entry, for the reason that the people of southern sea-port towns are not so liable to the fever as those who live farther north and are therefore not driven by their fears to exclude it.

Why, sir, look at the cities of New Orleans, Mobile, Pensacola, and every southern sea-port. For more than a quarter of a century we of the Mississippi Valley living above the Gulf, who have been the unfortunate victims of this pestilence, have been endeavoring to get those cities to adopt some precautionary measures to keep it from us. The commercial interests of those cities bring to bear a power upon the municipal authorities that will break down any State or municipal laws on the subject, and, as the gentleman from Ohio remarked, we might as well hold up a bullrush between us and the plague as to declare that the Government has no power on the subject and rely alone upon State legislation to protect us.

If we do not adopt this law, or something similar to it, you open up the whole Mississippi Valley to the plague during the coming season. The indications now are that in less than four months from to-day the yellow fever will ravage every town in the southwestern portion of the country as it did last summer.

I wish I could bring before this House the scenes that fell under my observation only a short time ago. If I could bring before you the fifty thousand graves, the twenty thousand sorrowing, desolated households, the hundred thousand widows and orphans that were produced by the ravages of this fell disease during the last season, they would speak to this House in more eloquent terms than I can; and I think there would be but few gentlemen who would not yield a ready assent to the passage of this measure.

I think a careful examination of all its provisions will convince any gentleman, however jealous he may be of the rights of the States, however confident he may be of their willingness and power to legislate upon this subject, that this bill ought to pass, and pass at once, and that no harm can result to any State, city, or locality by its passage; but that, on the contrary, it will furnish us the only protection which we can have against another visitation of the plague; and should it again make its appearance in this country, and especially in the locality of gentlemen who think it unconstitutional to undertake to keep it off, they will only be too glad to invoke the aid of the Government to stay its ravages, without stopping to inquire whether or not it was mentioned in the resolutions of '95 or embraced in any of the delegated powers of the General Government.

It is true that heretofore our friends residing in the Northern and Eastern States have been spared the ravages of the plagues that have desolated the South. How long will you remain so? Can you tell how long it will be before the black-death, now desolating large portions of the Empire of Russia, and to stamp out which eighty thousand men have been kept busy and the government itself has destroyed whole towns and villages, will reach our shores. Can you tell me how long it will be before some ship navigating the waters between the northern sea-ports and the infected regions of Russia will bring in that fell disease? I have here a letter upon that subject from a most intelligent merchant of Saint Louis which I will print with my remarks.*

We of the South are not alone interested in this measure. Every section and locality in the country is subjected to the same danger that menaces us. The next visitation of this fever may not stop at Cincinnati and Gallipolis, in Ohio, or at Saint Louis. It reached those places during the last season, and the history of the disease is that on every return it proceeds farther and farther toward the lakes of the North. Its next visitation may not only destroy all the cities in the Mississippi Valley, but it may reach even the Atlantic seaboard cities, including the great commercial marts of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. I tell you, gentlemen, that in view of the great calamity that overwhelmed the people of my section of the country only a short time ago, in view of the great danger that menaces you in the future, this is no time for gentlemen to discuss abstract propositions of constitutional law. If this Government has not now the power to take measures to protect the lives of its people, it is time that we understood it and that we take the necessary steps to invest it with power not only to protect the rights, liberty, and property of its citizens, but, more than all, to protect their lives.

Without some measure of this sort there, an uneasy apprehension in the public mind of the South that the fever will come again will tend to destroy all its industries, and every interest will suffer an almost fatal shock. I wish I had time to discuss the measure at greater length, for I deem it one of greater importance than usually engages the labors of this House, and especially would I be glad to say something of the grateful appreciation which the stricken people of the South have of the generous sympathy and kindness shown them by those of the North in the hour of their affliction, but I must forego the discharge of this grateful duty until some future time.

I beg members of this House not to stickle about these nice distinctions which have been discussed here. We have been assured by gentlemen who entertain much more extreme ideas on this subject than I do, that there is nothing in this bill which invades the rights and the sovereignty of the State. But if perchance it should be discovered that we have gone beyond the legitimate powers of Congress we can easily correct the evil at a future session. We must not stand still while the plague on the one hand and yellow fever on the other may be every hour approaching our shores. It is a duty we owe to the people of this country to act promptly in this matter and discuss abstract questions of State rights and State sovereignty when we can do so more at leisure and when there is no such pressing demand as the present one for the exercise of a little practical judgment and every-day common sense.

If I have any time left, I will yield it to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. STONE.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes left.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I will hear it.

Mr. HOOKER. Does this substitute of the House committee give the remedy which is demanded?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I doubt it; I prefer myself the Senate bill.

Mr. GOODE. Since the gentleman from Tennessee has made that declaration, the House ought to know that he is not the organ of the committee unless he represents the bill which the committee have prepared. The House committee have determined on the substitute.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. And I have moved the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. GOODE. Are you for the substitute now?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Certainly; I was instructed by the committee to report it, and I shall vote for it, though certain of its provisions do not meet my approval and I notified you in committee of my purpose to oppose them in the House. I give this bill my support, not that I approve it, but because I think it the best we can do.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the adoption of this substitute would be fatal to the object aimed at by the passage of this bill. In the first place, the substitute provides for the organization of a board; a shot-gun arrangement that in my judgment can never effect anything. In the organization of a great enterprise such as this it is absolutely necessary to have a head who shall be an able and responsible man, one whom God created a man before some institution dubbed him a doctor. Without such a provision it would be utterly useless to go before the country and attempt to stay the plague, the yellow fever and the cholera.

The ordinary laws established by States for this purpose are not uniform, as is well known in this House. New Orleans might establish regulations which would restrict commerce entirely in property and in passengers, while New York might refuse to do so. Then if infected ships should come to the port of New York, its passengers might, by State authority, be sent out all over the country introducing a disease which might destroy thousands in the other States. So it might be through ports of Charleston, Savannah, and Mobile.

Sir, let me tell you that unless the strong arm of the Government

This is a subject worthy the attention of the congressional committee on epidemic diseases.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, February 24, 1879.

MY DEAR FRIEND: On reading the inclosed slip to-day I thought I would at once send it to you, as it might have escaped your notice. It shows the terrible risk this country runs in permitting rags to be brought in from the countries named. The French government has already acted promptly in forbidding the import of rags from any of the ports in Turkey or Russia. It is certainly to be hoped that after the awful visitation of last summer Congress will pass a stringent quarantine law and prohibit the importation of any article that may contain the germs of disease. I am sorry Congress passed the pension bill, as the people had a good right to hope that the public debt would not be increased for "buncombe" purposes. Wishing you Heaven's choicest blessings, health, and contentment,

Your old friend,

JAS. REILLEY.

HOB. NATHAN COLE, Member of Congress, Washington City, D. C.

* The following is the letter referred to:

The New York Herald prints an interesting statement showing the somewhat remarkable fact that ten million dollars' worth of foreign rags are brought into his country every year. The most startling suggestion connected with this statement, however, is that Russia and Asia Minor send us the bulk of this enormous supply of worn-out undergarments. The fact is recalled that rags once carried the plague into Marseilles, and it thereupon became at once evident that this country is in danger from the same source of contamination. The Cossack who took the handsome shawl from the dead Turk and presented it to his lady love killed her and twenty-five of her friends in two hours. The shawl carried the plague. It may be that the dilapidated shirt of a Russian beggar, when the beggar himself had died of the plague, is packed in a bale, sent down to Odessa, shipped through the Black Sea and the Mediterranean to Smyrna or Trieste, and thence out of the straits, and so across the Atlantic to become an article of commerce in this country.

seizes this question and stays the spread of disease, there can be no safety to this people. In the first clause of the substitute is a provision which renders this bill inoperative and powerless. That provision declares that the national authority shall not interfere with State regulations. In my judgment that provision alone will render this whole bill entirely inoperative so far as the control of contagious diseases is concerned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. I would like to have a minute or two more.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the causes of disease know no State lines; they are not stayed by the voice of a city council; they are not stopped on the border of individual States. Nothing can stay them save the national power exercised by a single will and a single head. All boards are fatal because they engender disagreement; and in this view more than any other the provision of a board would render the bill ineffective and inoperative. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] says that this board will have authority to request the aid of scientific societies. Sir, you may request it; but you cannot command it. Scientific societies have not been idle during all these long years. They have been devoting themselves to the investigation of sanitary laws, developing plan after plan; and they finally come and ask Congress to enact a law that may be effective, that will not be stopped by any gentleman on the border of Virginia holding up in his hand the Constitution, while commerce is stayed, while death is in every household, and the people of the land lie prostrate with fear.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. As a member of the committee on this subject, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed five minutes to answer the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, admitting the power of the National Government to legislate upon this subject, I tell the gentleman from Iowa, whether he be a doctor or no doctor, that New York does not intend to be interfered with in respect to this matter.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, that demonstrates my proposition.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, the provision of the House bill to which the gentleman objects is the only saving clause in this hasty legislation. Sir, I belong to a class of business men who succeed in this world, if they succeed at all, without consulting the written Constitution daily when they have to decide great questions; and I say in reference to this question that for the Congress of the United States to meddle with State or municipal authority, to overrule organized quarantine regulations, which are the result of a hundred years of experience, more or less, is not only vicious, but it is outrageous, and it will not be tolerated by the American people.

Why, sir, what is it we propose to do here? If you owned a hundred warehouses in New York City, would you establish a fire brigade in Washington to protect them? If you had in Utah a family of a hundred children, [laughter,] would you undertake to provide a board of health in Washington for their protection? Substantially that is what it is proposed to do here.

Now, I have the greatest respect for Congress. I do not belong to that class of men who denounce Congressmen as ignorant, stupid, and vicious; but I say that the legislation of this Forty-fifth Congress is a dishonor to the intelligence of the American people. What is our position at this moment. With nearly every important bill which has been before Congress for three months pressing upon us, members are compelled to do that which human endurance cannot do. We must work night and day from this time till next Tuesday noon, or we cannot complete the legislation which might have been completed before Christmas. If we had gone on as we did for the first week after this Congress assembled, every appropriation bill now lagging in either House might have been passed before Christmas; and the people of this country would have shouted "Glory to God!" if we had passed them and gone home for the remainder of the session. [Laughter.]

Any man who, like the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. STONE,] prefers the Senate bill fails to realize its drift if he does not know that the Senate bill would be a usurpation disgraceful to Congress. I do not care for the bill, any way. [Laughter.] I do not believe there is much good in it. My sympathies with southern gentlemen on this question are earnest and deep. I am willing the National Government should spend money for their benefit freely; but New York asks no protection from a national board of health, and more especially none from a director of health in Washington.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to say a word on this bill, and then I propose to yield the remainder of my time to my friend from Kansas.

I am glad this bill has come before the House as a matter of enlightenment. There are many of the provisions of the Senate bill that I do not favor, nor do I think it ought to pass, although I agree with the theory that the National Government, not the State governments, must deal with this question. I am utterly opposed to any idea of an efficient quarantine by State regulation. While I would agree to any bill rather than that the awful calamity of last year should be reinflicted upon any portion of our people, yet I do not believe that either of these bills will accomplish the end designed. We have sent a commission to examine into the yellow fever. They have returned and reported that they know nothing about it. Suppose you get three more men who do not know anything about it, and make them a board or directory, how much will the country be benefited? I say this with great respect for the gentleman at the head of the Marine-Hospital Service, and I do not mean to refer to him unkindly.

Nothing but the strong arm of military power can make a quarantine which will be effective. It has done it once—twice—in the cases of New Orleans and Norfolk; and no yellow fever crept up the Mississippi in the year 1862, although ships were fever-stricken and crews were decimated at the quarantine station at the mouth of the Mississippi. But it required the strongest possible military arm to do it. Therefore I say that if anything effectual is to be done, we must do it through the Federal power.

I said I was glad this bill had come to Congress for its enlightenment, because it shows, my friends, there are some things protecting the life, the liberty, the rights, the privileges of the citizen which must come from the Federal power, the Federal Government, and that we must depend more upon that for protection. You cannot bound wrong by State lines; you cannot bind disease by State lines; for all the country is interested whenever any portion of it is struck. We are all interested, because when the yellow fever strikes the South or any portion of the country we are called upon, and how well we respond you all appreciate with gratitude. We all respond and are glad to respond in aiding to alleviate the sorrows. If we are to respond in that way with aid year by year, for Heaven's sake, will you not let us take a hand in preventing it? If you limit us to the State line and will not ask us out of the State to help you, then you must take care of the disease in your own way. But you ought not to do it and expect we are to help you. Let us understand, in other words, that this whole expanse, from Maine to Texas, from Florida to Alaska, is our country, in which our Government, paternal at the same time that it is disciplinary where necessary, ought to protect every citizen in all his rights, personal, political, and religious, and protect him in his health from all contagious diseases; for that stands upon the same principle of constitutional law.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I think the country expects, and it has a right to expect, that this Congress will pass some such measure as that which is now pending before it adjourns. During the past season a large portion of our country was scourged by yellow fever more virulent in its visitation than ever before in our experience, and it is not too much to say that to prevent the spread of the disorder we possessed no safeguard and to check its approaches no adequate remedy was provided by this intelligent nation with all its boasted acquisitions in science or knowledge of disease and its remedies. To-day, while we are speaking on this subject, the cholera which came to us on two or three former occasions and swept over our country is slowly approaching from those great regions of Central Asia at once the cradle of the race and the source of the most terrible of human diseases. Still more, the plague, the most dreadful disease ever known to the world, is at this very moment creeping up the Danube, entering Europe from Asia, and will before the season closes in all probability visit our country. I ask you here to-day whether you will not before you close the labors of this session provide all the means that science, experience, and the wisdom of the civilized world can give us, in this enlightened nineteenth century, to try at least to check these terrible diseases. It may be, sir, that medical science, and philosophy, and all human experience, are impotent before these terrible calamities, but, sir, such is not the general impression of other nations, and we will not stand justified until we adopt the best remedy we can agree upon and make an honest unpartisan effort to protect our people.

In this connection I wish to say that if we desire to pass any bill this session we must pass the Senate bill now before us. We have not time to send a bill back from the House to the Senate. We have no time to wrangle over conflicting bills or different schemes. If you pass the Senate bill to-day it is the only chance this House has by any possibility of making any bill a law. Those at all familiar with the legislation of this House know what I stated to be true. I desire to say, before I close, that the disposition to wrangle over this measure, to drag partisan politics into the debate, to discuss the constitutional question as to whether States or the General Government shall manage quarantine, are puerile and can reflect but little credit upon us. They must be far gone in constitutional law who take the ground that we have no constitutional right to check yellow fever, cholera, or the plague. The General Government has certainly entire control of our relations with foreign nations, and that power includes much involved in this subject; and if we erect weather signals along our coasts to warn our people of approaching storms, surely it is not beneath the dignity nor outside of the duties of the General Government to protect the people of the States against these more fearful storms of disease which so insidiously approach us.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, rose.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I have charge of this bill.

Mr. GOODE. The chairman does not represent the committee. He has made a speech in opposition to the report of the committee.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. In opposition to yours, not to the bill. I have charge of the bill, and I decline to let the gentleman take it from me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. There is an amendment.
The SPEAKER. The previous question does not cut off a vote on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. TUCKER. I wish to offer an amendment to the substitute.
Mr. GOODE. There is no objection, so far as I am concerned, to an amendment being offered.

The SPEAKER. Amendments are not in order if the previous question is seconded.

Mr. TUCKER. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. There was an amendment offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will come to that; that is pending.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is that an amendment to the substitute?

Mr. GARFIELD. There is an amendment and a substitute as well.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that some amendment ought to be offered as applying to the text of the Senate bill, so that whichever passes the clause in reference to the District of Columbia shall be stricken out.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I decline to admit any further amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] to the substitute.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. CHALMERS. Then, with a view of testing the sense of the House, I move to lay the substitute on the table.

The SPEAKER. That would take the bill with it.

Mr. CHALMERS. I do not wish to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman wants to get at the Senate bill?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The way to do that would be to vote down the substitute. If the substitute should be voted down then the question would be on the Senate bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as sections 9 and 10 the following:

SEC. 9. That the Senate and House committees appointed to investigate and report upon the best means to prevent the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases into the United States are hereby continued, with power to sit in vacation and retain the services of three experts and such clerks and stenographers as may be necessary for the purpose of completing the investigation in reference to the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases in the United States; one of said experts shall be learned in medical science, one a microscopist, and one a sanitary engineer; and they shall visit the port of Havana, and there investigate the nature and history of yellow fever, and the conditions of its origin and spread at that place and vicinity; and they shall visit such other points and make such further investigations and examinations as may be directed by the two said committees of Congress, receiving for such service the sum of $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses.

SEC. 10. That the President of the United States be requested to invite the concurrence and co-operation of the Spanish government in the examination and experiments of this commission in furtherance of international commerce and the sanitary interests of mankind; and the said committee shall make their report to the next session of Congress, recommending such additional legislation as they may deem necessary for the protection of the public health, and especially to prevent the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases; and that the money heretofore appropriated to meet the expenses of this inquiry remains available for this purpose, to be expended one-half by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and one-half by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, under direction of the respective committees of the House and Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. There will be no House, and no members of the House after the 4th of March. This amendment perpetuates a House committee after the term of this House has expired.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The amendment has been adopted by both the Senate and the House committees. It is the most important part of the bill.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, there were—ayes 68, noes 101.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I ask for tellers.

On the question of ordering tellers, there were ayes 13 not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were not ordered and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MANNING. I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order as the main question has been ordered. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question being put, there were—ayes 82, noes 94.

Mr. GOODE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; 45 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 113, not voting 52; as follows:

So the substitute was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. HUNTON. I am paired for the day and night with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, Mr. FRYE being the umpire; and that umpire has agreed that I may vote against the Senate bill, that being also the position of Mr. REED. I therefore vote "ay."

Mr. GUNTER. I am paired upon this question with Mr. MCGOWAN. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. FULLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SEXTON. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. WARD. I am paired with Mr. AIKEN, of South Carolina. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to announce that Mr. FREEMAN is paired with Mr. RIDDLE, of Tennessee.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to announce that Mr. HENDEE is paired with Mr. KNOTT. If Mr. HENDEE were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. TIPTON. My colleague, Mr. KNAPP, is absent by reason of sickness.

Mr. EWING. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. EDEN. My colleague, Mr. KNAPP, is absent on account of illness.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Mr. MCKINLEY is paired with Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on ordering the bill, as amended, to a third reading.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 87, noes 94.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 117.

Mr. GOODE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; 49 members voting therefor.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill reported by the committee of the House was substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. KILLINGER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. I would like to be heard just one instant. I desire to say that we would accept the Senate bill with a slight amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I believe my proposition is before the House to reconsider the vote by which the bill reported by the House committee was agreed to as a substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. HOOKER. My point of order is this: I desire to understand the position of the question. The House was voting upon the substitute for the Senate bill, and the Chair having announced that it had been adopted, tellers were called for; the Chair announced the vote by tellers, and then a call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill was made, and the yeas and nays were ordered upon that, and I submit that the yeas and nays ought to be taken upon that question before the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] is voted on, in order to test the sense of the House on that question.

Mr. POLLARD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The regular order is the motion I have made.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order. I want to know what is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to lay upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Let the House understand how they are voting. Let me inquire whether if the motion to lay upon the table my motion to reconsider prevails we can then vote on the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. You cannot.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. If, on the contrary, my proposition is sustained, then we can have a vote on the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That proposition will then come up again.

Mr. HOOKER. I have not yet stated my point of order. As I understand it, the House having already voted by tellers on the question of the adoption of the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill, and the yeas and nays having been called for upon that motion, the gentleman from Tennessee cannot make his motion now.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The yeas and nays were not ordered. Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman has no right to interrupt the action of the House in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote was taken by tellers upon the adoption of the substitute, and then the question came up upon ordering the bill as amended to be read a third time, and the vote was taken upon that question by tellers.

Mr. GOODE. And upon that question the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered upon the question of ordering the bill as amended to be read a third time, it is not competent at this stage to move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I understand that the yeas and nays were not called; no one had answered to his name.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOOKER. The Chair announced that there were forty-five voting for the yeas and nays, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. COOK. I insist that gentlemen take their seats, and that the regular order shall proceed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then you can congratulate yourself upon having defeated the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be read a third time; upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 128, not voting 50; as follows:

So the House refused to order the third reading of the bill. During the roll-call the following announcements were made: Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I vote "no," Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of moving to reconsider.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I am paired with Mr. MCGOWAN. Mr. EWING. I am paired with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. COBB. My colleagues, Mr. FULLER and Mr. SEXTON, are paired. I have been requested also to announce that Mr. REA is paired with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. POLLARD. My colleagues, Mr. BLAND and Mr. METCALFE, are paired.

Mr. WARD. I am paired with Mr. AIKEN. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. POWERS. I am paired with Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. TIPTON. My colleague, Mr. KNAPP, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. STRAIT. I am paired with Mr. REA. Mr. ROBINSON, of Louisiana. My colleague, Mr. ACKLEN, is detained from the House by illness.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. HUNTON. I am paired with Mr. REED.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. GOODE. I object, as there was so great confusion. I want to see if the votes were recorded correctly.

The reading of the roll-call was completed. The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill as amended to a third reading; and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDEN. And pending that motion I move the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. WADDELL. And pending that motion I move the House adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the House will not adjourn. The House refused to adjourn.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me for the purpose of moving to suspend the rules so as to take up the business upon the Speaker's table this evening.

Mr. EDEN. I have no objection to withdraw my motion for a recess until the gentleman can submit that proposition to the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask, Mr. Speaker, to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That at eight o'clock this evening the House will first proceed to consider business on the Speaker's table under the order of procedure as regulated by Rule 54.

Mr. THOMPSON. I object.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will say, then, "subject to the appropriation bills."

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to reconsider, it is hardly possible to entertain a motion to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. How, then, is the proposition to be reached?

The SPEAKER. When we meet at eight o'clock this evening the sense of the House can be tested on the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Very well.

Mr. EDEN. I now renew my motion that the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at eight o'clock p. m.

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1784) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States and to establish a bureau of public health.

The SPEAKER. When the House took its recess the question was upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. CONGER. There was also a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. GOODE. No such motion was made.

Mr. CONGER. Such a motion was made; I do not know whether the Chair entertained it.

The SPEAKER. The Journal shows no such motion.

Mr. PAGE. Would it not be in order to make that motion now?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. There is a misunderstanding in the House in reference to the attitude of this bill. If the House will bear with me a moment or two I think we can come to an understanding by which we can agree upon the passage of some bill. This is a very important measure. I think gentlemen misunderstand the posture of the question, or we would have had no difficulty in the passage of the bill.

According to the view entertained by some of my colleagues on the committee I am put in the attitude of opposing the bill which I reported as a substitute. That is not true. There were some features in the House bill that did not meet with my approval in committee, but I was entirely willing—

Mr. WOOD. I rise to a question of order. Is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will be allowed to go on.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to a third reading. That question is debatable.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. If gentlemen will allow me to go on it will expedite business very much. I was entirely willing that either of these bills should be passed. I believe that the Senate bill would accomplish all that we desire. I believe that the House bill would in all probability do the same thing. There are some features in both bills that do not commend themselves entirely to my judgment. My hope was that we would pass the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill, and that in the committee of conference we would adjust these differences to the entire satisfaction of both sides of the House. I still think that if the House will pass the bill I have offered as a substitute for the Senate bill, and let the question go to a committee of conference, there will be no sort of difficulty. I am exceedingly anxious that a bill of some sort should be passed. This is too important a measure to be passed over without action until this session adjourns.

Now, I am advised by gentlemen on the other side that they will resort to filibustering, perhaps, to defeat one of these measures. I trust that no gentleman on either side will resort to any such method to defeat any bill that may be agreed upon by a fair majority of this House.

A MEMBER. To which side are you addressing yourself?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. To both sides. I should be glad to have both this side and the other agree.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman does not consider himself authorized to speak for this side.

Mr. COX, of New York. Nor for this side.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, as gentlemen on both sides of the House say that I have no right to represent either party, I will speak for myself. My judgment is that we had better pass the House substitute and let a conference committee adjust the differences that have arisen upon the two bills.

Mr. GOODE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GOODE. I ask the gentleman whether at the last joint session of the Senate and the House committees it was not agreed between them that the best course to be pursued when we could not agree among ourselves was that the Senate should pass its bill and the House pass the substitute reported by the House committee in order that the question might go to a committee of conference?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. That was the agreement.

Mr. GOODE. That I have no doubt would result in the passage of a measure which would be agreeable all round.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for a minute or two?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. I desire to say, speaking for myself and for neither side of the House, that I would be satisfied—indeed I am anxious—to have some bill passed. I believe that it is not only the privilege but the duty of this House to establish a department of health. It is for this reason that the House and the Senate have appointed committees on this subject. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I have no desire for one moment to antagonize any bill which I believe can be made effective. My opposition this afternoon was to a bill which I feel confident can never be enforced. On that ground I shall stand. Now I want to be candid and fair. I want my position to be understood on both sides—that I am opposed to the amendment, but am willing to accept the Senate bill. This is all I have to say.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. May I have a few minutes?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the right and the duty of this Government, as far as in its power, exercising the power of the Government, to keep foreign enemies when they come armed from coming into this country to its destruction. I believe it is the duty of this Government, so far as it possesses power—and I have no doubt about the power—exercising all power, to keep foreign diseases out of this country. I believe there is just as much right on the part of this Government to fight the cholera, the plague, and the yellow fever as there is to fight a foreign soldier when he comes armed for the destruction of our citizens. And I am as ready to give power and effect to my views in the case of disease as I am in the case of a foreign enemy coming armed. Now, sir, I come here to the consideration of this question ready to vote for a bill designed to effectuate that result. I come here in accord with the chairman of the committee upon this subject; and when he announced this afternoon in this House that he himself was in favor of the Senate bill, I concurred with him. But I was sorry to hear the doctrine advocated here in this House that, notwithstanding the power and the interest of this Government, there was a right in every State to have the yellow fever if they had a mind to; a right to have the plague if they had a mind to; a right to have the cholera if they had a mind to. The great doctrine of Virginia State rights was rung out here on this floor. Right to do what? Right to die of foreign diseases. Sir, under that doctrine it would be just as hard for us at New York, at Troy, at Philadelphia, to die of diseases that come in at Norfolk—

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Oh, they do not have any diseases up in Wisconsin. At all events, they have no contagious diseases up there. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRAGG. Did not the gentleman from New York this afternoon upon this floor advocate the State-rights doctrine?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The gentleman from New York said nothing this afternoon.

Mr. BRAGG. I refer to the gentleman from New York representing the Brooklyn district.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The gentleman from the Brooklyn district must answer for himself. If he goes over to the State-rights camp it is natural that he should advocate their doctrine; he is new to it. [Laughter.]

Now, when this was proposed, I saw that your national quarantine system would be utterly nugatory, and I voted against it. My side of the House, I believe, with the exception of my temporarily State-rights friend from Brooklyn, voted in the same way. I hope my friends on this side of the House will do themselves the justice to continue to vote in the same way. And if a majority of those living in the neighborhood of the yellow fever want to die of the yellow fever, certainly we have no right to coerce the States. Let them have the yellow fever over there as much as they have a mind to. We will try, so far as our votes will do it, to exclude the yellow fever from the country.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS.]

Mr. CHALMERS. I voted to-day with the gentlemen upon the other side of the House because I favor the Senate bill. In my judgment the Senate bill is the only one which should pass. The right that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] speaks of, the State's right to have the yellow fever if gentlemen want it in their own States, I have no objection to. But I have a great objection to the gentlemen in Louisiana having the yellow fever and casting it over into Mississippi; and so far as the preservation of the health of the country by State rights, by State organization, and State quarantime is concerned, we have had that for a hundred years, and we have had the yellow fever almost continually in the country. We are tired of that sort of State rights.

I think there is no power under the Government more clear than this. It is in the nature of a regulation of commerce, and every gentleman admits that the General Government has the right to make commercial regulations with reference to interstate commerce. Commerce brings to the country not only goods, wares, and merchandise, but it brings infected people with it; it brings the germs of disease in the goods-boxes. It brings the disease to New Orleans, and there it is put upon the steamboats and railroads and carried into Mississippi and Tennessee and far up the Mississippi River.

I put it upon the ground of regulation of interstate commerce and of foreign commerce, and no man who can put two ideas together, it seems to me, should hesitate a moment to admit that the General Government has unlimited control over this question. More than that, I say it is an absurdity for us to come here and ask the General Government to take charge of the matter, to vote money and pass laws, and then turn around and say the General Government has no right to have a word to say in the matter when you come to spend that money.

It was said to me this evening: Why, there is a clause in the Senate bill which provides that if the State authorities do not carry out the quarantine regulations the United States Government may send an officer down to carry it out. I answered: that is exactly what we want to see done. I want the port of New Orleans to be closed, if necessary, by the United States authority. Louisiana will not do it. We have tried her, and she will not keep the fever from us. We appeal to the General Government, then, to come in and take charge of this matter, to prevent collisions between the States. The Union itself was a compromise, because there was a collision between the interests of the States so far as their commerce was concerned.

The same interest comes up here now. The merchants of New Orleans, in order to keep open their trade, will take the risk of keeping open their port, and in order to make a few dollars, perhaps, they will keep open their port until the disease appears among them. Then their people will commence to scatter; they will run, as mankind always will run, before the advancing plague. They will carry the disease in their persons and in their clothing into Mississippi and Tennessee and Kentucky and Missouri. They will infect the whole of the country with the seeds of the disease which may be hanging about them.

I maintain, then, that the Senate bill is not only the only one that can be passed, but it is the only one that should be passed by this House.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. KEIFER. I shall hardly occupy that length of time. I do not think that we should draw any very fine sight when we are dealing with this question. I have no disposition to speak here as if I were prepared to lecture members of this Congress for the levity that has been exhibited in relation to this most important question.

I have felt this afternoon and this evening as though this country, the people of the North as well as of the South, would not excuse this House if we went home without passing some thoroughly efficient law looking to a prevention, as far as possible, of this dread disease in our country.

Some men talk here as though we were legislating only for Louisiana or Mississippi, or some of the extreme Southern States, where this disease was at its worst. I remember that the disease invaded my own State, and the most healthful portion of it. My colleague [Mr. EWING] will remember that in portions of his district the yellow fever appeared and swept off the citizens without regard to their station in life. It was not confined to those who live in hovels; but it attacked the very best of our citizens.

There is another consideration. If this disease is not likely to reach the North at all, if it is never to invade Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, or any of the Northern States, we should remember that when last year it was spreading through the Southern States and depopulating towns and cities almost, we in the North heard the cry for relief, and there was hardly a village, city, or hamlet that did not pour out from its means what could be spared for the purpose of alleviating the suffering people of the South. Should that time again come, we in the North will feel that we are interested in our fellow-citizens of the South, and will again assist so far as is in our power.

We have already had to-day a vote upon the question whether we shall inject into this most important national measure the question of State rights. I wish there were not so many patents on our Constitution. We get out one every few days. This House has spoken on that question and said that we will not legislate or attempt to carry this principle of State rights into so important a question as this. Now let us go back upon our steps, and if possible get at the Senate bill and pass it. If there are any amendments needed to it, as suggested by the committee, let us make those amendments and then pass the bill, so that when your gavel falls, Mr. Speaker, at twelve o'clock on Tuesday next we can say that we have passed at least one law looking to the prevention of the plague in our country.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

Mr. WOOD. I represent a constituency that has shown, by its very liberal contributions to the suffering people on account of the yellow fever, we are not unmindful of the calamities following the spread of this disease. And I desire to say that I deeply sympathize with the lately affected districts of this country in consequence of the great injury and prostration they suffered from the yellow fever.

I think, however, there is an unnecessary alarm on this question. I fear that there are men who desire to take advantage of that alarm in order to ingraft on this Government a permanent institution which in my judgment is inconsistent with the theory of our Constitution.

There is no city of the United States so exposed to yellow fever as is the city of New York. We have more intercourse with tropical climates, with Cuba and those portions of the world where the yellow fever is constant, than has New Orleans or any other city in the South. We have had no Federal institution to protect us from the introduction of this disease. It is fifty-seven years since we had the yellow fever in the city of New York. We have had our own quarantine under our own State laws; we have our own institutions to prevent the introduction of disease, and we maintain them at our own expense. We do not want in the city of New York any establishment holding allegiance to the Federal Government to protect us from pestilence of any character.

I am opposed to both these bills. I am opposed to them because either of them will cost this Government at least $1,000,000 a year. I care not whether the appointments be under the direction of the State or of the President of the United States, the project is wrong in theory; it is an attempt to create permanently a new department of the Government—the department of public health. I believe that it is no part of the duty of the Federal Government to supervise the health of the people of the whole United States. The States, when they created the National Government, reserved to themselves all rights over questions of a purely State, domestic, or municipal character.

While I accord to gentlemen who are so fervent and industrious in their desire to enact this legislation the credit of great sincerity, great integrity of motive, great patriotism, if you please, they are, in my judgment, in error not only with reference to the power of the General Government to establish institutions of this character, but they will find that they are in error as to the practical effect. In the adoption of preventive measures against the introduction of disease they cannot accomplish through national agencies as much as the States themselves can accomplish in their own municipalities, for it is well settled that only by quarantine can the people in any city of the United States be protected against the introduction of this disease. While this innovation will cost at least a million of dollars annually, it will fail to prevent the introduction of disease unless the cities themselves provide such sanitary measures as properly belong to their province.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing, from the President of the United States, was presented by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue.

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1784) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I know that this is a very important matter and of great interest to a large section of this country. But I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee who has it in charge that there are a great many other matters of importance which must be acted upon very soon in these waning hours. This matter has been before the House, has been debated, has been voted on; and now it has come up again this evening when almost everybody here expects that the House will go to the Speaker's table and consider business of much interest to all sections of the country.

Just what the gentleman ought to do he knows better than I do; but I suggest to him that he bring this matter to an issue at once. If he wants another vote of the House, let it be taken as soon as possible. If the House has reconsidered its decision, and is ready to take the amendment offered by him, let us know it. If not, let me suggest to him in all kindness that if he can get the Senate bill and nothing else, he had better take it as an expression that there is a disposition here to do something on this subject. But I hope we are not to let this thing go on, and consume the whole night in a general debate, which I do not believe anybody wants.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] When he concludes I will call for the vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not desire to delay the House, and I ask that we may consider the time we are now occupying in debate as applying to all the stages of this question, and that when the previous question is called—and I will call it, as requested by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG]—it may be considered as relating to the whole series of votes until the bill is passed.

I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that several States have recently tried to prevent the spread of infectious or contagious diseases among cattle by laws regulating their transportation from

State to State. A recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that these laws of the States are unconstitutional, on the ground that the power of regulating not only foreign commerce but commerce among the States resides in Congress and not in the States. The attempt of a State so to regulate transportation from State to State as to prevent the spread of disease among cattle has been declared unconstitutional. Now, after the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that a State cannot do this thing, if it be said that Congress cannot enact a law to prevent the spread of diseases among cattle, or even among our people, we had better so change our Constitution as to have a government that is not powerless to save its own citizens from imported destruction.

The argument of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] was luminous with sense and statesmanship in every sentence. Look at that great Mississippi Valley. At the expense of the United States we have created light-house districts which extend from the Gulf to Pittsburgh. We have established lights and buoys all along the navigable waters of that valley to direct our shipping, yet when the steamer Porter started from New Orleans last summer, bearing death on her deck, her planks reeking with pestilence, there was not a city in the length of her long voyage that had the power to stop her or prevent her from landing. It was only by the usurpation of authority the city of Cincinnati kept her from landing at the wharves and infecting a third of a million of people. When she had gone far up on her way toward Pittsburgh she did stop at the little town of Gallopis, whose municipal authorities had no power to prevent her from communicating the pestilence to that community. The States have not made and have no power to make any effective law to meet such a case.

If Congress can provide light-houses and buoys for that river; if we can remove the snags, "sawyers," and bars that obstruct the navigation of a mighty river, can we do nothing to prevent the transportation of pestilence? Are we to fold our arms and sit helpless because the States cannot or will not take the steps necessary to prevent its spread? Shall we say that Congress cannot or will not do it? Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in such impotence, in such idiocy of impotence in this Government of ours in this last quarter of the nineteenth century.

In view of the fact that the Senate bill was drafted by a Senator of the strictest State-rights opinions and concurred in by members of the committee of both parties, that it was passed almost unanimously by a Senate in which the political parties are nearly equal in strength, that it is approved here by eminent lawyers on both sides of the House, it requires not a little courage for gentlemen here to assume to know so much more than the Senate and the Supreme Court and claim to be such purists in constitutional law that their consciences will not allow them to pass the bill.

Mr. WOOD. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the question of the public health is one in which the United States Government is concerned?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not say, nor does this bill provide, that the United States shall take charge of the health of all the people in localities wholly within a State. No one has submitted a proposition of that kind.

But I take it that there is no man on this floor so daft as to deny that one league from the shore, at least, the United States has unquestioned jurisdiction. Whatever State may lie within that line, we can enforce our laws upon that line against the universe.

We once had an embargo for years which provided that no ships from Great Britain should touch our shores at all. We have now probably lying upon our table under an Executive veto an act passed by an overwhelming vote in this House that no ship bearing more than fifteen Chinese from any part of the globe should come to our shores. I think that if we can keep out a ship bringing more than fifteen Chinese, we can keep out a ship bearing fifteen demons in the form of the germs of pestilence and fever, or can prevent fifteen fever patients in an infected vessel from landing in any port. By a decisive vote the House has refused to pass the House substitute because it is a weak and ineffective measure, and because it degrades and dishonors the National Government by making it subordinate to that of the States. We are anxious to pass the Senate bill, and in order to reach it, and aid our southern countrymen who may again suffer from the pestilence, we will join in retracing all the legislative steps that have been taken till we can vote for the Senate bill without amendment. As a first step, I demand the previous question.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I understand I am recognized and entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have been recognized by the Speaker, and I insist on my motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] was to have five minutes and conclude the debate.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am willing that he shall have five minutes, and that five minutes shall be yielded to the gentleman from Ohio; then I will move the previous question.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I take up the gauntlet thrown down here to-night by the gentleman from Ohio. I state this proposition, and I challenge contradiction from him or any other lawyer in the House, that from the foundation of the Government down to this time the doctrine has been recognized universally by the Supreme Court of the United States that quarantine and health laws belong to the States exclusively. The court says there are some powers which belong exclusively to the States and there are some powers which belong exclusively to the National Government, and that among the powers reserved to the States has been embraced the power over quarantine and health laws.

The gentleman undertakes to twit members of this House for daring to entertain an opinion for themselves. He tells us that under the power to regulate commerce the Government here at Washington may supervise the health laws of the States.

Now, sir, what is the power to regulate commerce? The regulation of commerce is interstate, international, and Federal. The power to protect and preserve the lives and health of the people is domestic, local, internal in its nature, and belongs to the State governments.

Now, sir, that doctrine is as old as the case of Gibbon and Ogden, and notwithstanding the learning of the gentleman I challenge him here and now to point to a case in the Supreme Court of the United States from Gibbon and Ogden in 9 Wheaton down to this time which disputes the doctrine laid down by Chief-Justice Marshall and Mr. Webster, "the great expounder," that quarantine and health laws belong to the States.

But has the Government no power? Certainly it has power to enact provisions in aid of the States. It has power to say to its officers, "You may aid the State in the execution of its laws." The Government has power to enact auxiliary and supplemental legislation. That is what our bill provides for.

One other thing. The gentleman argues this as if it involved nothing but State-rights doctrine. It involves more; it involves the question of dictatorship; it involves the question whether we are to have an autocrat of health in the United States. And, sir, I stand here, if I stand alone, to combat the monstrous proposition contained in the Senate bill that any man in this land shall be clothed with the autocratic and wide-reaching powers conferred upon the director-general of health in that bill. I will never consent to it, and I believe it to be one of the most dangerous propositions ever introduced into the American Congress.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he knows of any case where the doctrine of Federal quarantine has been passed upon at any time by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. GOODE. The case of Gibbon and Ogden came from the State of New York.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Answer the question.

Mr. GOODE. I will answer it in my own way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the case of Gibbon and Ogden was from the State of New York. The State of New York undertook to confer upon a single individual the exclusive right to navigate the water courses of the State of New York. It came here on appeal, and in the discussion of that question both the counsel and the court laid down the doctrine, so far as health and quarantine laws are concerned, that they belong to the States except in so far as the Government could aid in executing their provisions.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have seen an array of gauntlets, challenges, and defiance—

Mr. GOODE. The gentleman began it. You undertook to twit members on this side for presuming to have opinions of their own.

Mr. GARFIELD. When the gentleman from Virginia is completely done I will begin.

Mr. GOODE. Very well; go on.

Mr. GARFIELD. I say we have seen an array of gauntlets, defiance, and challenges, the substance of which is this: I am defied, and every lawyer here is defied, to produce any decision of the Supreme Court that authorizes the United States to establish quarantine regulations.

Now, as the United States has never passed a law for that purpose until the last session—

Mr. GOODE. No, sir; it was done as far back as 1796.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The State of Ohio has just as much right to be heard as the State of Virginia.

Mr. YEATES. But the State of New York seems to have the right to be heard all the time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Since no case involving directly that principle has ever been before the Supreme Court the gentleman's challenge can be made safely. We are standing upon a piece of original legislation. I have, however, referred to a decision of the Supreme Court relating to a State law to prohibit the transmission of cattle disease from State to State, and to the fact that the court said that could not be done by a State, because the whole business of interstate commerce belongs exclusively to Congress.

I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to a clause in the Constitution that has been but little noticed. Let me read it:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any impost or duties on imports or exports except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws, and the net profits of the imposts laid by any State on imports or exports shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States, and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of Congress.

Mr. GOODE. Those are inspection laws.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, it is true Congress hitherto has allowed the States to manage the matter of inspection and to levy a small tax upon vessels coming into their ports. But here is a plain declaration that Congress may alter or revise all such laws. The fact that the States have hitherto been allowed to do this thing is no proof that Congress has not the power to legislate on the subject. But this is all aside from this question, for this bill from the Senate does not interfere with the State quarantine regulations in New York or any other city, nor with the health laws of any State.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will call his attention to an authority, having it before me. In article 1075, Story on the Constitution, is this statement:

It [the power of Congress] extends to quarantine laws, and pilotage laws, and wrecks of the sea.

This statement of the text is supported by 9 Wheaton; Tucker's Blackstone; Cooley vs. Board of Wardens, 12 Howard; and Gray vs. Frazer, 21 Howard. And the note adds:

But upon these subjects the power is not exclusive.

Mr. GARFIELD. On this clause of the Constitution which I have just read Judge Story says, very distinctly, in his Commentaries, that the United States can pass quarantine laws.

I now demand the previous question on the pending motion.

Mr. BEEBE. Does the demand for the previous question cut off the motion to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. BEEBE. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] demands the previous question on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to a third reading. Pending that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] moves to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. The motion to lay the bill on the table cannot be in order.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. GARFIELD. Until the motion to reconsider is carried the bill is defeated. It can only be reached again by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The House can go on and take the further step, which effectually kills the bill. The Chair decides that the motion is in order.

Mr. BEEBE. Is the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider in order?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the other too.

Mr. BEEBE. I make both motions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make two motions at once. He had better confine himself to one at a time.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. May I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Objection was made.

Mr. BEEBE. The motion I submit is to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to read the bill a third time.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSE. I wish to ask the Chair what will be the effect of laying the motion to reconsider on the table? Does it not prevent the reaching of the House substitute or the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The effect is to make final the vote by which the House refused to read this bill the third time. In other words, it finally defeats the measure.

Mr. COX, of New York. It kills the whole thing, and that is what we are after.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] that this is a Senate bill, and there is a statement in the Manual exactly in point, which the Chair will read.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the House will be brought to order before the Manual is read.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will proceed around the Hall without his mace and request members to be silent and seated. [After a pause.] This is a Senate bill; and the Manual says:

In the case of a Senate bill, the engrossment having already been made before it came to the House, the question which arises is, "Shall the bill be read a third time?" which, being decided negatively, the bill is rejected.

Now, the House decided by a yea-and-nay vote that this bill should not be read a third time. A motion to reconsider that vote was entered and a motion to lay on the table that motion to reconsider has been made, which makes final the vote by which the House refused to read the bill a third time. The effect of the motion to lay on the table if carried will be to kill the bill.

The question being taken on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, there were—ayes 84, noes 95.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I call for tellers.

Mr. BEEBE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 34 members voting therefor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now submit the motion for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 32 members voting therefor, more than one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. GOODE. The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 90.

So the House refused to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the action of the House is reconsidered, would it be in order then to amend the Senate bill so that it might go to a committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. If the House agrees to reconsider, then the question will come up again on the third reading.

Mr. ATKINS. Of which bill: the House bill or the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill as amended by the House.

Mr. CHALMERS. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the House was put upon the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The first step is to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to read this bill a third time. What the gentleman from Mississippi suggests would be the next in order. The House must go back step by step.

Mr. HANNA. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HANNA. Suppose now that the vote shall prevail to reconsider the action of the House refusing to order this bill to a third reading; is that a vote which will tend to carry through the amendment to the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. That is a vote traversing the action of the House heretofore had. The Chair is unable to say what the effect will be, because that will depend upon the future action of a majority of this House.

Mr. HANNA. I want to know whether or not by so voting I will be enabled, as a member of the House, to come to a vote directly on the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. Not by that motion; but it is one of the motions by which the Senate bill can be reached.

Mr. HANNA. If we must take the House bill after all, then I am opposed to the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. After this motion shall have been carried, if it be carried, it will be competent to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. ELAM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELAM. As I understand it, the House now stands precisely as if there had been no vote taken upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

The SPEAKER. The House stands in this attitude: it said by its vote this afternoon that this Senate bill, as amended, should not be read a third time. The motion now is to reconsider the vote by which the House so declared.

Mr. ELAM. Then what comes?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider shall prevail, then the motion will probably be made to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the substitute for the Senate bill; but if this motion to reconsider does not prevail, then the bill falls.

Mr. BURCHARD. I ask permission for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] in charge of this bill to state what action he contemplates.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, and others. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] as the Chair understands, desires to know what will be the next vote to be taken should the motion to reconsider, now pending, prevail. The next vote will be upon ordering the bill, as amended, to a third reading, that amended bill being the substitute adopted by the House. The Chair understands that the amendment which was proposed to the substitute was rejected.

Mr. HOUSE. I understand that the Senate bill was amended by adopting the House bill as a substitute; and that the House then refused to order the Senate bill so amended to a third reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOUSE. Then, if the motion to reconsider prevails, the question will again come up on ordering the Senate bill, as amended, to be read a third time.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

The question was then taken upon the motion to reconsider; and it was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 106, noes 50.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be read a third time.

Mr. WILSON. Is it competent at this time to move to lay the whole bill on the table?

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. The House having now, by its vote, reconsidered its action refusing to order the bill, as amended, to be read a third time, is not the House now brought to a vote again upon the Senate bill as amended?

The SPEAKER. The House is now brought to a vote upon the question of ordering the bill, as amended, to be read a third time.

Mr. BEEBE. Is it in order now to move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted?

The SPEAKER. That is not the question before the House.

Mr. BURCHARD. This bill has not been ordered to be read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The vote of the House upon ordering the bill to be read a third time having been reconsidered, the question immediately recurs upon that which was reconsidered.

Mr. BURCHARD. And pending that question, cannot a motion now be made to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted? That is a prior question.

Mr. GARFIELD. At this stage I move to reconsider the vote by which the House substitute for the Senate bill was adopted; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. CARLISLE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLISLE. My point of order is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is not entitled to make the motion to reconsider, for the reason that he voted against the adoption of that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] having voted with the minority on the question of agreeing to the substitute, is not entitled to move to reconsider.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move, then, to reconsider the vote by which the House substitute was adopted for the Senate bill, and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] having voted with the prevailing side is entitled to move to reconsider; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. CONGER. Would not that motion if carried take the bill with it?

The SPEAKER. It would not. Should the motion to lay on the table be agreed to, then the question would recur upon the question to order the bill as amended to be read the third time. [After a pause.] The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recorded in the negative on the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I voted in the affirmative.

Mr. GARFIELD. I heard the gentleman vote in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. It being a yea-and-nay vote, the record must prevail.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will move to reconsider. I voted in the affirmative on the prevailing side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to reconsider the vote by which the House substitute was adopted for the Senate bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I feel it my duty to permit the friends of the House bill to manage this matter, and I therefore withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rise to a question of privilege. I voted in my place for the House amendment to the Senate bill, and if I am not so recorded then the record is incorrect and I ask that it be corrected.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair in reply to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] would state that there were three roll-calls kept of that vote, one by the Reporters of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and two at the Clerk's desk, and they all correspond.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Several gentlemen about me here heard me vote, and know that I voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. There were two roll-calls taken this afternoon, and the gentleman voted in the affirmative on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. PHILLIPS. No, sir; I voted for the adoption of the House substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman has a right to have his vote recorded correctly as a personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. That is a right that attaches when the Journal is up for correction.

Mr. BURCHARD. I think he has it at any time when he has a chance.

Mr. PUGH. I recollect distinctly that the gentleman from Kansas voted on that side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no other way except to be governed by the record?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Are there no means by which an error of this kind can be corrected? Have I not the right to correct the record?

Mr. CONGER. This is an important question, and in such a question, if there be a suspicion of the record, and the gentleman asserts with the testimony of those around him that he voted in a particular way, the correction should be made immediately, else we may find ourselves passing a bill by a false record.

Mr. COX, of New York. Are we to have two hundred and ninety-three members correcting the record, and are we to stop the proceedings that two hundred and ninety-three gentlemen may state whether their names are properly recorded or not?

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the third reading of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. We can pass and desire to pass the bill, but the gentlemen with whom I am trying to co-operate do not seem to be willing to let us reach that Senate bill, but insist on forcing the defeated House substitute upon us. This we will not permit, and I cannot in good faith to those friends who have followed me on this side of the House allow that to be done. The only mode left me to protect them and myself is to move, as I now do, to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" and "Question!"]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I made that motion originally.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. It is this: as I understand it, by a vote of the House the House has ordered a reconsideration of the vote by which the House passed upon the bill as it now stands before the House with the House amendment to the Senate bill, and my point of order is that the House having ordered the previous question no other motion is in order except a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state exactly what the question is. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the House refused to read the bill a third time. That vote has been reconsidered, and of course the question recurs immediately upon the vote that the bill be ordered to a third reading, pending which the gentleman from Mississippi moves to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the substitute.

Mr. BEEBE. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] moves to lay the whole bill upon the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. In view of the fact that all the efforts we have made to reach the Senate bill have failed I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was put upon Mr. GARFIELD'S motion; and on a division there were—ayes 119, noes 75.

Mr. EWING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; 50 members voting therefor.

The Clerk commenced the call of the roll, and called the name of Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. EWING. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"] It is a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio rises to a parliamentary inquiry, and he has a right to make it.

Mr. EWING. I rise to inquire whether the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the House amendment was entered prior to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to lay the subject on the table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] made the motion first, but the Chair asked that the gentleman withdraw it so that the Chair might recognize the gentleman from Mississippi to make the motion, as he was entitled to do.

Mr. MANNING. I make it now. [Loud cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. EWING. The purpose is to defeat the Senate bill, and I declare it here and now. [Loud cries of "Question!" and "Order!"]

Mr. SPARKS. There are men on this side of the House who are going to help to do it.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a question of order. The roll-call has been commenced, and it is not in order to interrupt the roll-call. Two names have been called, and one name has been answered.

The SPEAKER. There is such confusion and so many members who were unable to hear what was going on that the Chair was compelled to go back.

Mr. BEEBE. I make the further point of order that the yeas and nays were ordered, and debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman did not ask to debate. He rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. If the gentleman is quiet for a little while he will better understand me than he does now. I made the motion before the recess this afternoon that the vote by which the substitute was rejected should be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. Then it would appear on the Journal.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. It must appear on the Journal. I made that motion. It is first pending, and I insist upon it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that before the recess the motion was not in order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. But I endeavored to get the ear of the Speaker several times while other gentlemen were on the floor to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to a third reading.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I also entered a motion to reconsider the vote on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. CARLISLE. Did the gentleman from Tennessee vote to adopt the substitute?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I did.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Tennessee asserts that he made that motion, the Chair is bound to recognize his statement.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The record shows it.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The record shows that I made that motion.

Mr. HOOKER. Did the gentleman vote in favor of adopting the substitute?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I did.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution for printing additional copies of the report of observations of the transit of Venus; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House for printing the memorial addresses delivered in the Senate and House upon the life and character of Terrence J. Quinn, late a Representative from the State of New York.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 6523) providing for the engraving and printing of portraits to accompany memorial addresses on the late Representatives Leonard, Quinn, Welsh, Williams, Douglas, Hart-ridge, and Schleicher.

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

The House resumed the consideration of the Senate bill for preventing the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to know what is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roll on the motion to lay the bill upon the table. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] states on his responsibility as a member that he entered this afternoon a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted the substitute. Now, if that be correct—

Mr. BEEBE. Would that take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to lay the bill on the table?

Mr. FORT. I wish to state that I stood by the gentleman from Tennessee and heard him make the motion.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] rose in his place and stated on his honor as a member that he had voted upon the prevailing side on adopting the substitute, and the Chair declined to receive his statement.

The SPEAKER. The record did not so show.

Mr. STONE, of Iowa. I would like to know on what ground the Speaker receives the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee when he did not receive the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair on a question of this kind takes nobody's statement; he takes the record.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the point that even if the gentleman from Tennessee did make the motion that he states, he could not multiply motions in that way. He did attempt to make two motions: first, to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to a third reading, and then he attempted also to make a motion (and it is probably so recorded) to reconsider the vote on agreeing to the substitute. Now, I make the point that it was not competent to make both motions at the same time; that the second motion to reconsider, even if he did make it, was not in order; and I think the Speaker intimated to him that but one motion to reconsider could be entertained at a time.

Mr. SINGLETON. I would be very glad to have the attention of the House for one moment.

Mr. BEEBE. I object to debate. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] cannot proceed without unanimous consent, and we object.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to the gentleman from Mississippi speaking.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I would like the Chair to rule on the question which I presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the Journal does not show that the gentleman's motion is recorded.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Smith, the journal clerk, showed me the record of the Journal this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is always bound to listen to the statements of gentlemen, but in a matter of this kind the record controls him; and the record does not show that the gentleman's motion, which he states he made, is recorded.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The clerk read it to me from the record this evening. I conversed with him upon that subject.

Mr. BEEBE. Even if the gentleman had made that motion it does not take precedence of the motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is in order, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the House will give unanimous consent in order that we take a vote on the Senate bill—[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, as the Chair understands, rises to make a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair thinks he had better be heard.

Mr. BEEBE. I object to debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that by unanimous consent we may take a vote upon the passage of the Senate bill. [Cries of "Object!" "Object!"] Then I insist on my motion.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. GARFIELD to lay the bill on the table; and there were—yeas 134, nays 100, not voting 56; as follows:

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. VANCE. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. POLLARD.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. FREEMAN, of Pennsylvania, is paired with Mr. RIDDLE, of Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My colleague, Mr. BEALE, is paired with Mr. HISCOCK, of New York.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Missouri, Mr. POLLARD, is paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE.

Mr. ATKINS (who had voted "no") said: I change my vote to "ay" for the purpose of moving to reconsider.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to reconsider the vote by which this bill has been laid upon the table.

Mr. BEEBE. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. ATKINS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only twenty-seven voting therefor.

The question being put on Mr. BEEBE's motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, there were—yeas 90, nays 58.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATKINS and Mr. BEEBE were appointed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that I may be allowed to have a resolution read for information.

Mr. EWING. I object.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 115, nays 60.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now call up my resolution to suspend the rules and to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I demand the regular order, which is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAGE. I believe there is a message from the President on the Speaker's table, which is a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. It will be reached by adopting this motion; technically it is there, but it must be reached.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department to submit a report containing articles of impeachment against George F. Seward, late consul-general at China and now minister plenipotentiary to China, concluding with a resolution.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the presentation of that report.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. We all know very well that if this motion is entertained there will be no business done between now and the 4th of March.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know no such thing.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege, and it is whether my motion has not precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Virginia means to insinuate that my object in making the motion is to delay business.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman may not be conscious of it, but that is the effect of his motion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a duty to perform in this matter, and which I must perform.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order; the question of consideration is raised and it is not debatable.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the resolution accompanying the report.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States of America at Shanghai, China, and now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China, be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors while in office.

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of this House be appointed and instructed to proceed immediately to the bar of the Senate, and there impeach George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China, in the name of the House of Representatives, and of all the people of the United States of America, of high crimes and misdemeanors while in office, and to inform that body that formal articles of impeachment will in due time be presented, and to request the Senate to take such orders in the premises as they deem appropriate.

Resolved, That seven managers be appointed by the Speaker to conduct the impeachment exhibited against George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States of America at Shanghai, China, and now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China, and that the foregoing articles of impeachment be adopted by the House and presented to the Senate by the said managers in maintenance and support of the impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors in office, of the said George F. Seward.

The SPEAKER. The question is, whether the House will or will not proceed with the consideration of the privileged question. The gentleman from Virginia raises the question of consideration, and practically debate is not in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know what question is involved in this report.

The SPEAKER. It is articles of impeachment presented by the gentleman from Illinois, under instruction from the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do it with the view of going to the Speaker's table to dispose of the business there.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion. I want to know whether this House will refuse to consider this matter now and dodge the question. [Loud cries of "Regular order."] I insist upon the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; forty-nine members voting therefor.

Mr. TURNER. What is the pending question?

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House will proceed with the consideration of the question of privilege, which is a resolution to impeach a public officer.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. And that is antagonized by my motion to go to the Speaker's table and pass the bills there.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 126, not voting 55; as follows:

Mr. HENDEE. My colleague, Mr. JOYCE, is at home sick.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to state that my object in insisting—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I know it is not, but I want to state that my object in going to the Speaker's table is for the purpose of bringing up a bill [cries of "Regular order!"] which gives the right of appeal from district courts to the circuit court of the United States, thus affording relief to people who are so much oppressed by inefficient district judges.

Mr. SPARKS. I object to debate.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I only want my friends to vote with a knowledge of what they are doing.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to announce the pair of Mr. FREEMAN, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. RIDDLE, of Tennessee.

Mr. GOODE. On this question I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. VAN VORHES is paired with Mr. MORGAN, of Missouri.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman makes that motion I shall call for the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the motion.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now move to suspend the rules in order to proceed to business on the Speaker's table, under Rule 54.

Mr. EWING. I desire to inquire of the Chair how the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] gets the floor to move a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. He gets the floor by the recognition of the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. EWING. I am first on the list.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EWING] is first on the list of individual members. But the gentleman will notice that to-day the Chair has recognized only such members as were authorized by their committees to submit motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. EWING. The object of my inquiry was to ascertain whether the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] was authorized by any committee to make that motion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman has no right to catechise the Speaker as to what authority he has to recognize any member he chooses.

Mr. EWING. I am not catechising the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] because he submits a motion to suspend the rules in order to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, where there rests a large number of bills of a public character.

Mr. EWING. The Chair announced that he would recognize— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer that the gentleman be allowed to make his statement.

Mr. EWING. The Chair announced that he would recognize gentlemen in the order in which they are on the book, unless a committee should instruct some gentleman to move a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has always reserved the right to recognize any motion to proceed to the consideration of public business.

Mr. EWING. The Chair did not make that reservation when he made the statement the other day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never made any other statement since he has been in the chair.

Mr. EWING. The Chair did not make that statement the other day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS,] to suspend the rules for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it in order now to move that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock?

The SPEAKER. Not pending a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But before the motion is put to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

The question was taken upon the motion to suspend the rules; and upon a division there were—ayes 151, noes 20.

Mr. EDEN. Before the result of the vote is announced I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to inquire if we proceed to business on the Speaker's table at this time under a suspension of the rules, will we proceed to that business with all the rights that are given us under the rules?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to proceed to the business under Rule 54, and all other rules applicable are reserved. It is a mere motion to suspend the rules in order to get to the Speaker's table; and every bill is subject to the other rules of the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. All points of order being reserved?

The SPEAKER. They are. Two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules are suspended and the House will now proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table.

VETO OF THE CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

After a very careful consideration of House bill No. 2423, entitled "An act to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States," I herewith return it to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with my objections to its passage.

The bill, as it was sent to the Senate from the House of Representatives, was confined in its provisions to the object named in its title, which is that of "An act to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States." The only means adopted to secure the proposed object was the limitation on the number of Chinese passengers which might be brought to this country by any one vessel to fifteen, and as this number was not fixed in any proportion to the size or tonnage of the vessel or by any consideration of the safety or accommodation of these passengers, the simple purpose and effect of the enactment were to repress this immigration to an extent falling but little short of its absolute exclusion.

The bill, as amended in the Senate and now presented to me, includes an independent and additional provision which aims at, and in terms requires, the abrogation by this Government of articles 5 and 6 of the treaty with China, commonly called the Burlingame treaty, through the action of the Executive enjoined by this provision of the act.

The Burlingame treaty, of which the ratifications were exchanged at Peking, November 23, 1869, recites as the occasion and motive of its negotiation by the two governments that "since the conclusion of the treaty between the United States of America and the Ta Tsing Empire (China) of the 18th of June, 1858, circumstances have arisen showing the necessity of additional articles thereto," and proceeds to an agreement as to said additional articles. These negotiations, therefore, ending by the signature of the additional articles July 28, 1868, had for their object the completion of our treaty rights and obligations toward the government of China by the incorporation of these new articles as, thenceforth, parts of the principal treaty to which they are made supplemental. Upon the settled rules of interpretation applicable to such supplemental negotiations the text of the principal treaty and of these "additional articles thereto" constitute one treaty, from the conclusion of the new negotiations, in all parts of equal and concurrent force and obligation between the two governments, and to all intents and purposes as if embraced in one instrument.

The principal treaty, of which the ratifications were exchanged August 16, 1859, recites that "the United States of America and the Ta Tsing Empire desiring to maintain firm, lasting, and sincere friendship, have resolved to renew, in a manner, clear and positive, by means of a treaty or general convention of peace, amity, and commerce, the rules of which shall in future be mutually observed in the intercourse of their respective countries," and proceeds, in its thirty articles, to lay out a careful and comprehensive system for the commercial relations of our people with China. The main substance of all the provisions of this treaty is to define and secure the rights of our people in respect of access to, residence and protection in, and trade with China. The actual provisions in our favor, in these respects, were framed to be, and have been found to be, adequate and appropriate to the interests of our commerce, and by the concluding article we receive the important guarantee, "that should at any time the Ta Tsing Empire grant to any nation, or the merchants or citizens of any nation, any right, privilege, or favor connected either with navigation, commerce, political or other intercourse which is not conferred by this treaty, such right, privilege, and favor shall at once freely inure to the benefit of the United States, its public officers, merchants, and citizens." Against this body of stipulations in our favor, and this permanent engagement of equality in respect of all future concessions to foreign nations, the general promise of permanent peace and good offices on our part seems to be the only equivalent. For this the first article undertakes as follows: "There shall be, as there have always been, peace and friendship between the United States of America and the Ta Tsing Empire, and between their people respectively. They shall not insult or oppress each other for any trifling cause, so as to produce an estrangement between them; and if any other nation should act unjustly or oppressively, the United States will exert their good offices, on being informed of the case, to bring about an amicable arrangement of the question, thus showing their friendly feelings."

At the date of the negotiation of this treaty our Pacific possessions had attracted a considerable Chinese emigration, and the advantages and the inconveniences felt or feared therefrom had become more or less manifest, but they dictated no stipulations on the subject to be incorporated in the treaty. The year 1868 was marked by the striking event of a spontaneous embassy from the Chinese Empire, headed by an American citizen, Anson Burlingame, who had relinquished his diplomatic representation of his own country in China to assume that of the Chinese Empire to the United States and the European nations. By this time the facts of the Chinese immigration and its nature and influences, present and prospective, had become more noticeable and were more observed by the population. Immediately affected and by this Government. The principal feature of the Burlingame treaty was its attention to and its treatment of the Chinese immigration and the Chinese as forming, or as they should form, a part of our population. Up to this time our unconvincing hospitality to immigration, our fearless liberality of citizenship, our equal and comprehensive justice to all inhabitants, whether they abjured their foreign nationality or not, our civil freedom and our religious toleration had made all comers welcome, and under these protections the Chinese in considerable numbers had made their lodgment upon our soil.

The Burlingame treaty undertakes to deal with this situation, and its fifth and sixth articles embrace its most important provisions in this regard and the main stipulations in which the Chinese government has secured an obligatory protection of its subjects within our territory. They read as follows:

"ARTICLE V.

"The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from the one country to the other for the purpose of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties, therefore, join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

"ARTICLE VI.

"Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States."

An examination of these two articles in the light of the experience then influential in suggesting their "necessity" will show that the fifth article was framed in hostility to what seemed the principal mischief to be guarded against, to wit, the introduction of Chinese laborers by methods which should have the character of a forced and servile importation, and not of a voluntary emigration of freemen seeking our shores upon motives and in a manner consonant with the system of our institutions and approved by the experience of the nation. Unquestionably the adhesion of the government of China to these liberal principles of freedom in emigration, with which we were so familiar and with which we were so well satisfied, was a great advance toward opening that empire to our civilization and religion, and gave promise in the future of greater and greater practical results in the diffusion throughout that great population of our arts and industries, our manufactures, our material improvements, and the sentiments of government and religion which seem to us so important to the welfare of mankind. The first clause of this article secures this acceptance by China of the American doctrine of free migration to and from among the peoples and races of the earth.

The second clause, however, in its reprobation of "any other than entirely voluntary emigration" by both the high contracting parties, and in the reciprocal obligations whereby we secured the solemn and unqualified engagement on the part of the government of China "to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country without their free and voluntary consent" constitutes the great force and value of this article. Its importance both in principle and in its practical service toward our protection against servile importation in the guise of immigration cannot be overestimated. It commits the Chinese government to active and efficient measures to suppress this iniquitous system where those measures are most necessary and can be most effectual. It gives to this Government the footing of a treaty right to such measures and the means and opportunity of insisting upon their adoption and of complaint and resentment at their neglect. The fifth article, therefore, if it fall short of what the pressure of the later experience of our Pacific States may urge upon the attention of this Government as essential to the public welfare seems to be in the right direction and to contain important advantages which once relinquished cannot be easily recovered.

The second topic which interested the two governments under the actual condition of things which prompted the Burlingame treaty was adequate protection under the solemn and definite guarantees of a treaty of the Chinese already in this country and those who should seek our shores. This was the object and forms the subject of the sixth article, by whose reciprocal engagement the citizens and subjects of the two governments, respectively, visiting or residing in the country of the other are secured the same privileges, immunities, or exemptions there enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nations. The treaty of 1858, to which these articles are made supplemental, provides for a great amount of privilege and protection, both of person and property, to American citizens in China, but it is upon this sixth article that the main body of the treaty rights and securities of the Chinese already in this country depends. Its abrogation, were the rest of the treaty left in force, would leave them to such treatment as we should voluntarily accord them by our laws and customs. Any treaty obligation would be wanting to restrain our liberty of action toward them, or to measure or sustain the right of the Chinese government to complain or redress in their behalf.

The lapse of ten years since the negotiation of the Burlingame treaty has exhibited to the notice of the Chinese government, as well as to our own people, the working of this experiment of immigration in great numbers of Chinese laborers to this country, and their maintenance here of all the traits of race, religion, manners and customs, habitations, mode of life, and segregation here, and the keeping up of the ties of their original home, which stamp them as strangers and sojourners, and not as incorporated elements of our national life and growth. This experience may naturally suggest the reconsideration of the subject, as dealt with by the Burlingame treaty, and may properly become the occasion of more direct and circumspect recognition, in renewed negotiations, of the difficulties surrounding this political and social problem. It may well be that, to the apprehension of the Chinese government, no less than our own simple provisions of the Burlingame treaty may need to be replaced by more careful methods, securing the Chinese and ourselves against a larger and more rapid infusion of this foreign race than our system of industry and society can take up and assimilate with ease and safety. This ancient government, ruling a polite and sensitive people, distinguished by a high sense of national pride, may properly desire an adjustment of their relations with us, which would in all things confirm, and in no degree endanger, the permanent peace and amity and the growing commerce and prosperity, which it has been the object and the effect of our existing treaties to cherish and perpetuate.

I regard the very grave discontents of the people of the Pacific States with the present working of the Chinese immigration, and their still graver apprehensions therefrom in the future, as deserving the most serious attention of the people of the whole country and a solicited interest on the part of Congress and the Executive. If this were not my own judgment, the passage of this bill by both Houses of Congress would impress upon me the seriousness of the situation, when a majority of the representatives of the people of the whole country had thought fit to justify so serious a measure of relief.

The authority of Congress to terminate a treaty with a foreign power by expressing the will of the nation no longer to adhere to it, is as free from controversy under our Constitution as is the further proposition that the power of making new treaties or modifying existing treaties is not lodged by the Constitution in Congress, but in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as shown by the concurrence of two-thirds of that body. A denunciation of a treaty by any Government is, confessedly, justifiable only upon some reason both of the highest justice and of the highest necessity. The action of Congress in the matter of the French treaties, in 1798, if it be regarded as an abrogation by this nation of a subsisting treaty, strongly illustrates the character and degree of justification which was then thought suitable to such a proceeding. The preamble of the act recites that "the treaties concluded between the United States and France have been repeatedly violated on the part of the French government, and the just claims of the United States for reparation of the injuries so committed have been refused, and their attempts to negotiate an amicable adjustment of all complaints between the two nations have been repelled with indignity;" and that "under authority of the French government there is yet pursued against the United States a system of predatory violence, infracting the said treaties, and hostile to the rights of a free and independent nation."

The enactment, as a logical consequence of these recited facts, declares "that the United States are of right freed and exonerated from the stipulations of the treaties and of the consular convention heretofore concluded between the United States and France, and that the same shall not henceforth be regarded as legally obligatory on the Government or citizens of the United States."

The history of the Government shows no other instance of an abrogation of a treaty by Congress.

Instances have sometimes occurred where the ordinary legislation of Congress has, by its conflict with some treaty obligation of the Government toward a foreign power, taken effect as an infraction of the treaty, and been judicially declared to be operative to that result. But neither such legislation nor such judicial sanction of the same has been regarded as an abrogation, even for the moment, of the treaty. On the contrary, the treaty in such case still subsists between the Governments, and the casual infraction is repaired by appropriate satisfaction in maintenance of the treaty.

The bill before me does not enjoin upon the President the abrogation of the entire Burlingame treaty, much less of the principal treaty of which it is made the supplement. As the power of modifying an existing treaty, whether by adding or striking out provisions, is a part of the treaty-making power under the Constitution, its exercise is not competent for Congress, nor would the assent of China to this partial abrogation of the treaty make the action of Congress, in thus procuring an amendment of a treaty, a competent exercise of authority under the Constitution. The importance, however, of this special consideration seems superseded by the principle that a denunciation of a part of a treaty, not made by the terms of the treaty itself separable from the rest, is a denunciation of the whole treaty. As the other high contracting party has entered into no treaty obligations except such as include the part denounced, the denunciation by one party of the part necessarily liberates the other party from the whole treaty.

I am convinced that, whatever urgency might in any quarter or by any interest be supposed to require an instant suppression of further immigration from China, no reasons can require the immediate withdrawal of our treaty protection of the Chinese already in this country, and no circumstances can tolerate an exposure of our citizens in China, merchants or missionaries, to the consequences of so sudden an abrogation of their treaty protection. Fortunately, however, the actual recession in the flow of the emigration from China to the Pacific coast, shown by trustworthy statistics, relieves us from any apprehension that the treatment of the subject in the proper course of diplomatic negotiations will introduce any new features of discontent or disturbance among the communities directly affected. Were such delay fraught with more inconveniences than have ever been suggested by the interests most earnest in promoting this legislation, I cannot but regard the summary disturbance of our existing treaties with China as greatly more inconvenient to much wider and more permanent interests of the country.

I have no occasion to insist upon the more general considerations of interest and duty which sacredly guard the faith of the nation in whatever form of obligation it may have been given. These sentiments animate the deliberations of Congress and pervade the minds of our whole people. Our history gives little occasion for any reproach in this regard, and in asking the renewed attention of Congress to this bill I am persuaded that their action will maintain the public duty and the public honor.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1879.

R. B. HAYES.

An act to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no master of any vessel owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States or by a citizen of any foreign country, shall take on board such vessel, at any port or place within the Chinese Empire, or at any other foreign port or place whatever, any number exceeding fifteen Chinese passengers, whether male or female, with the intent to bring such passengers to the United States, and leave such port or place and bring such passengers to any number exceeding fifteen on one voyage within the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any master of a vessel seeking a harbor in stress of weather.

SEC. 2. That whenever the master or other person in charge of any such vessel takes on board the same, at any foreign port or place, any greater number of Chinese passengers than is prescribed in the first section of this act, with intent to bring such passengers to the United States, and leave such port or place and brings such passengers to any number exceeding fifteen on one voyage within the jurisdiction of the United States, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for each passenger so taken on board and brought within the jurisdiction of the United States exceeding the number of fifteen, be fined one hundred dollars, and may also be imprisoned for not exceeding six months.

SEC. 3. That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States, or any of the Territories thereof, from any foreign place whatever, at the same time that he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and if there be no cargo, then at the time of making report or entry of the vessel pursuant to law, shall, in addition to the other matters required to be reported by law, deliver and report to the collector of the district in which such vessel shall arrive a separate list of all Chinese passengers taken on board the vessel at any foreign port or place, and of all such passengers on board the vessel at that time; such list shall be sworn to by the master in the same manner as directed by law in relation to the manifest of the cargo; and the refusal or neglect of the master to comply with the provisions of this section shall receive the same penalties, disabilities, and forfeitures as are provided for a refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of the cargo.

SEC. 4. That the amount of the several penalties imposed by the foregoing provisions shall be in liens on the vessels violating those provisions; and such vessels shall be libeled therefor in any circuit or district court of the United States where such vessel shall arrive.

SEC. 5. That nothing herein contained shall be held to repeal or modify any law forbidding the importation of coolies, or of females for immoral purposes, into the United States: Provided, That no consul or consular agent of the United States residing at any port from which any vessel taking Chinese passengers may take her departure shall grant the certificate provided for in section twenty-one hundred and sixty-two of the Revised Statutes for more than fifteen Chinese passengers on any one vessel.

SEC. 6. That this act shall not apply to persons officially connected with the Chinese government, or any embassy thereof, or to persons rescued from shipwreck during the voyage of and by the vessel bringing the same within the jurisdiction of the United States, or to persons who may only seek a temporary residence for educational purposes, and who shall have a certificate from the Chinese government for that purpose.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect from and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine. And the President of the United States shall immediately on the approval of this act give notice to the government of China of the abrogation of articles five and six of the additional articles to the treaty of June eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, between the United States and China, proclaimed February fifth, eighteen hundred and seventy, commonly called the Burlingame treaty.

SAM. J. RANDALL,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

W. A. WHEELER,

Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass this bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President? Mr. WILLIS, of Kentucky. I move the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on this message.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. I hope that general consent will be given.

Mr. WILLIS, of Kentucky. I ask that general consent be given to print remarks on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that such members as may desire it shall have leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the subject of this veto message. The Chair hears no objection.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Constitution requires that this question be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 110, nays 96, not voting 84; as follows:

the names be dispensed with.

Objection was made.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. As required by the Constitution, two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the bill is rejected.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to certain stocks belonging to the Pottawatomie Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian affairs, and ordered to be printed.

KISKIMINETAS AND CONEMAUGH RIVERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of Major William E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, of the results of the examination of the Kiski-minetas and Conemaugh Rivers, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CANEEY FORK RIVER, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of Captain W. R. King, Corps of Engineers, of the results of investigation of Caney Fork River and Obies River, Tennessee, and of the survey of the Cumberland River, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FEES OF DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. No. 3124) to amend section 824 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, returned from the Senate with amendments; which were read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill:

"Provided, however, That informations shall not be filed in such cases except when the accused has been committed in default of bail, or is under a recognizance for his appearance to answer for crimes charged in the information."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act to amend section 824 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relative to fees of district attorneys."

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, that bill places indictments and informations upon the same footing. Its effect is to give to district attorneys the same fees for convictions under information as for convictions under indictment. It is an encouragement to the district attorneys to dispense as far as possible with grand juries, to do away with the protection which grand juries afford to the citizens, and pay them for resorting to information. In these days when affidavits can be hired to be made for a penny apiece, by the bushel, it seems to me that we ought not to pass such a bill, and I therefore move to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPERVISORY JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 5065) to give circuit courts supervisory jurisdiction in certain criminal cases, with amendments by the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. HANNA. This is a bill which it seems to me every lawyer that practices in circuit courts should take an interest in and favor its passage.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, (at eleven o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn. It is now almost Sunday morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is desirable that the House, before adjourning or taking a recess, should receive from the Senate the sundry civil bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the motion.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEEDS, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 1651) to validate and confirm certain acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments of writing under seal, made in a foreign country, for lands lying in the District of Columbia, and the records thereof, with amendments by the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. FRYE. This bill was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House, unanimously passed the House, went to the Senate, and has been amended by the Senate in certain particulars. I have examined the amendments, the bill having been under my charge when it passed the House, and I find they are only put in for the protection of innocent parties. The bill simply provides to make valid certain acknowledgments of deeds made in foreign countries. The amendments are all right. I move that they be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. FRYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE F. SEWARD.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to submit the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department in reference to the impeachment of George F. Seward.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that the House is now executing an order made under the suspension of the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a privileged question.

Mr. GARFIELD. And that order of the House is unexecuted. We are proceeding under a suspension of the rules, which can only be interfered with by appropriation bills.

Mr. BUTLER. I have a further point of order. By a resolution of the House all the evidence and papers in relation to Mr. Seward were referred to the Judiciary Committee, and there is nothing before the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department on which they can report. I will read the resolution of the House:

Resolved, That the answer of George F. Seward in response to the order voted by the House and issued by the Speaker, requiring him to show cause why he should not be declared in contempt, and all evidence and papers appertaining thereto, together with the reports of the committee, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report as early as practicable what action, in their judgment, should be taken by the House in relation thereto.

And I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that that was done advisedly because no resolutions of impeachment have ever been presented to the House of Representatives that did not come from the Judiciary Committee of that House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; Andrew Johnson was impeached under a report from the Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. BUTLER. Pardon me; that was done under a resolution of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MAYHAM. The resolution reported yesterday, which the gentleman from Massachusetts has read, only related to an interlocutory proceeding.

Mr. BUTLER. In accordance with that resolution all the evidence is in our committee—the Committee on the Judiciary. All the reports of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department in reference to this matter are in our committee. We have not yet reported back and cannot do so while the gentleman from Illinois attempts to occupy the floor all the time. I ask the gentleman from Illinois, will he answer me a question: whether to-day the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department have not been considering this question on the evidence before that committee during the session of the House?

Mr. SPRINGER. The committee has been in session to-day; yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. With everything pertaining to this case in our committee by order of the House, what have you to consider?

Mr. SPRINGER. The only evidence referred to the Judiciary Committee was that with reference to the non-production of books. That was the only thing before the House and the only thing to which the resolution referred, as to the the contumacy of the witness.

Mr. BUTLER. Read the record. The language of the resolution is "all evidence and papers appertaining thereto."

Mr. MAYHAM. Appertaining to what?

Mr. BUTLER. Appertaining to—

The answer of George F. Seward in response to the order voted by the House, and issued by the Speaker, requiring him to show cause.

And the reports of the committee were also by the same resolution referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MAYHAM. Mr. Seward was required to appear before the House and to show cause why he refused to obey the committee in producing certain books. That was the only question before the House, and that was the only question submitted to the Judiciary Committee. All that related thereto, that is to his contumacy, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

But, independent of that, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department have gone forward with the evidence before them and have presented a report to this House by which Mr. Seward stands upon the judgment of the committee impeached. That report does not raise a question as to the production of books; and the gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken when he supposes the report made to this House yesterday related to anything but the contumacy of the witness, Mr. Seward.

Mr. BUTLER. One word further. By what right did the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department sit during the session of the House?

Mr. MAYHAM. By an order of the House?

Mr. BUTLER. Was the committee authorized to sit to-day?

Mr. MAYHAM. Certainly it was. We had authority given to us long since to sit in the vacation by order of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it a vacation to-day? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYHAM. We had authority to sit during the sessions of the House, and that committee had jurisdiction of this case and it would hardly do for the gentleman to say that a committee having authority from the House to investigate the expenditures in the State Department, and especially the conduct and the charges preferred against Mr. Seward, was not sitting in strict conformity with the order of the House in the matter, but I can inform the gentleman from Massachusetts what the proposition is. He does not know that this committee had decided before any contumacy had been shown by this witness to introduce articles of impeachment against him.

Mr. BUNDY. I desire to be heard in respect to the report last made by the gentleman from New York. I now hear for the first time that any action was ever taken in that committee to bring up articles of impeachment against Mr. Seward.

Mr. MAYHAM. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that I am informed by the chairman of the committee that no final action was taken on the subject until to-day, and therefore I withdraw that part of the statement.

Mr. BUNDY. The gentleman should go further. The only time when the committee or a majority of the committee came together, having any purpose to present articles of impeachment, was not until to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to know if the committee did not determine to bring in articles of impeachment before to-day, and the gentleman from New York failed to be present and to vote on them. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] was there, and will bear me out in the assertion which I have just made.

Mr. BUNDY. Now, sir, I was present in the committee when this matter was considered, and when the only vote to present these charges was taken the gentleman from Kentucky was not present.

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; I was there.

Mr. SPRINGER. I invited the gentleman to be there.

Mr. TURNER. Yes; and I was there, and the gentleman is greatly mistaken when he says I was not.

Mr. WADDELL. I object to any further debate between these gentlemen.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I suggest that they should go into the lobby and settle the matter.

Mr. BUNDY. I was in error when I said the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] was not present when the vote was taken; but I say this, that when the only effort or attempt was made to read the charges the gentleman from Kentucky was not present to my recollection, but when the vote was taken formally he was present; and the gentleman from Kentucky is unquestionably and entirely right about that.

One word further. Here is a report that will take half an hour to read. I waive the formal reading of the report. The first intimation I had of this proceeding was the brief statement of seventeen charges for impeachment [laughter] as late as six o'clock this evening. The minority of the committee have had no time to prepare a report expressing their views as they desired to do.

Mr. MAYHAM. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I do not desire to invade the sanctity or disclose the secrets of the committee-room; but I desire to ask him if he did not state that the minority would make no formal report, but that they would offer a resolution as an amendment when the report of the majority was made?

Mr. BUNDY. I will answer that question. The chairman of the committee proposed in the committee—and it is divulging no secret of the committee to say that his proposition was to present the report and have it lie over until Monday. That was my understanding. I understood the chairman to state that it was not his purpose to have action upon the report to-day, but that he would only submit the resolution to-day and ask that the report be printed and go over until Monday next, and then the minority could consider whether they would bring in a formal minority report.

Mr. TURNER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state in reply to what he has said—

Mr. BUNDY. I cannot yield to the gentleman. The statement of the gentleman from Kentucky was, perhaps, precisely right, but it does not differ in substance from mine. I understand him to ask me if the chairman did not propose that if it was the desire of the majority that their report should go over until Monday to enable the minority to prepare a report, that he would agree to that arrangement. Perhaps upon that point the gentleman from Kentucky is right.

Mr. SPRINGER. My only explanation to the House for the late hour at which this report is brought in is this, and I will state it to the House as briefly as possible: Mr. Seward has been represented before the committee by counsel speaking for him, and the committee have granted him every request that he has made by his counsel speaking for him.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will confine myself to the point of order. My colleagues on the committee have assured me time and again that they would make no opposition whatever to final action by the House on this matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Sue them for breach of promise. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I will let the gentleman who is to be one of the United States district attorneys do the suing.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. That is for criminal business.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is going into the legal business now, as he will soon cease to be a member of Congress. We have endeavored by every means in our power to obtain action in this matter. We have granted Mr. Seward all the time he asked, and the minority of the committee told us that they would offer no opposition to final action being taken by this House if there was proper delay; and now they come in here and say that we have not dealt fairly with them. I appeal to my colleague of the republican party on the committee to state whether every opportunity has not been given to Mr. Seward during this investigation to be heard by himself or his counsel.

Mr. BUNDY. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have asked you a question, and I want an answer. Is it not true that Mr. Seward has been given every opportunity during this investigation to have a fair and impartial hearing?

Mr. BUNDY. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to ask me that question to be answered now?

Mr. SPRINGER. I want it answered now.

Mr. BUNDY. I answer most cheerfully in the affirmative; that the chairman of the committee has shown every courtesy and all the kindness which his heart seems so full of. And now I ask, when the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. TURNER,] rising in his place here, says that the minority were to have until Monday to prepare their report if they choose—

Mr. TURNER. Let me correct the gentleman.

Mr. BUNDY. What is the correction?

Mr. TURNER. I said that the chairman asked the gentlemen if they wanted time, and said that if they did he would give it to them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no desire to take any advantage of the gentleman. I went to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY,] this evening just after the House assembled, and said to him that on the first opportunity I should call this matter up. He made no opposition whatever to it. If he had said to me that he wanted to bring in a minority report, I would have given him time to prepare it; but he said he did not want to.

It is not disputed by the minority of the committee that the facts are substantially as alleged in the report, but they deny the legal conclusions to which the majority of the committee have arrived. I only ask this House to pass upon this question upon its merits, and then I will have discharged my duty. I now ask that the report be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I refer the Speaker again to the point of order which I raised.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order? The gentleman will state it again.

Mr. GARFIELD. The point of order is that the House is now acting under an order adopted under a suspension of the rules, which order directed us to proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table. That order is unexecuted, and being an order made under a suspension of the rules it cannot be interrupted by anything except the appropriation bills, which were especially provided for by terms in the order adopted under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a question of the highest privilege and can interrupt any business that may be proceeding at the time it is brought up.

Mr. GARFIELD. Furthermore, this order was adopted in consequence of the very conflict which was raised by the gentleman himself as between his proposition and the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS,] and the House refused to entertain the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] and determined to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Now in reference to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio. The order to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table is very often interrupted during its execution by motions to adjourn. It expires when the day expires—

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. So that very often much of the business on the Speaker's table is left undisposed of. Now as regards the point whether the gentleman from Illinois has a right to interrupt the consideration of business on the Speaker's table—

Mr. GARFIELD. That is the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read from the Manual:

Whenever the Speaker is of the opinion that a question of privilege is involved in a proposition, he must entertain it in preference to any other business.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I raise the question of consideration upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the very moment that this subject is disposed of, in case the House proceeds to consider it, then the House of course would recur to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. CAMP. That question has already been raised, and was decided in favor of going to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. My point of order is that the Speaker of the House cannot entertain any proposition from a committee except as presented by the proper organ of that committee, and it being presented now, the report must be read.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration has been raised.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. This same question has before been presented to the House for decision. I moved to proceed to business on the Speaker's table under a suspension of the rules, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] rose to a privileged question. The Chair gave the floor to the gentleman from Illinois on his privileged question in preference to going to business on the Speaker's table. The question of consideration was then raised by myself, and the House voted to give preference to business on the Speaker's table. That harmonizes with the decision of the Speaker that he would recognize the question of privilege, and he has done so. But after the House has decided not to consider that question of privilege, but to go to business on the Speaker's table, can that question of privilege be again presented until the House adjourns or until the business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; the House may change its mind.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio raises the question of consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. On what?

The SPEAKER. On proceeding to the consideration of this report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair submit the question whether we will take up this case now?

Mr. MAYHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this is a question of privilege and the Speaker so decides, may not the order that has been made by the House be interrupted at any time on the presentation of this high question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. That is the view of the Chair, or he would not have recognized the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio raises the question of consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask the Chair to submit the question whether the House will consider the report.

The question being put,

The SPEAKER said: The yeas appear to prevail.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the question be taken first by tellers, in order to save time.

Mr. WADDELL. It is now quarter past twelve o'clock on Saturday night; and I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion. I have assurances that the sundry civil appropriation bill will be here in about an hour and a half—as soon as it can be engrossed. It is very important that we should receive that bill from the Senate so that we may non-concur in the amendments and ask a conference. I trust that the House will be patient and remain in session until that bill can be received.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. That bill will not be here for three hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move the House take a recess till nine o'clock Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recognized in a moment. The Chair cannot entertain the motion for a recess while a motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. WADDELL. Before the question is put on the motion to adjourn I desire to say one word in reply to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. WADDELL. At the solicitation of many gentlemen about me I withdraw my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House consider the report presented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER?]

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. BUNDY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 88.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move to take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. EDEN. Say nine o'clock.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I will modify it and say nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. ATKINS. Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The SPEAKER. They have, but that does not preclude the motion.

Mr. ATKINS. I know that, but I wish to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order to hear the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ATKINS. I expected as soon as the motion now pending was disposed of to move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at nine or ten o'clock, as might seem to suit the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The gentleman had better put it at a later hour.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not desire to interfere with the pending motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman what information there is in reference to the appropriation bills?

Mr. ATKINS. I have assurance since I made the announcement a moment ago that it will take the clerks longer to engross the sundry civil bill than they supposed, and that it will not be here for three or four hours yet.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman to fix the hour to which we are to take a recess at eight o'clock. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] We ought to sit here all the time to dispose of these bills.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I say nine o'clock.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest the gentleman say nine and a half o'clock.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Very well; I agree to that.

Mr. ATKINS. As I have said, I do not desire to make the motion until the pending motion is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair is bound to recognize the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ATKINS. I trust the House will take a recess until nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. That is right.

Mr. WADDELL. Does the gentleman propose to sit to-morrow for legislation?

Mr. ATKINS. The purpose simply will be to receive messages from the President and Senate and reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. HALE. And conference reports.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; and for the purpose of sending appropriation bills to committees of conference. The session to-morrow is to be for that and nothing more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina will observe that when we take a recess until to-morrow at eight o'clock it will be a continuance of Saturday's session.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; a continuance of Saturday's session.

Mr. WADDELL. Oh! that is a technical matter.

Mr. HALE. Let the motion for a recess be until half past nine.

Mr. ATKINS. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist on his motion I will make that motion.

Mr. TUCKER. If we do not adjourn, how long can we take a recess—until Monday at eleven o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has known a legislative day to continue for three calendar days.

Mr. THOMPSON. So have others.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House will allow this report to be printed in the Record [cries of "No!" "No!"] and to be called up at the next meeting— [Cries of "No!" "No!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. We will not have it at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will agree to take a recess until to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] moves the House take a recess until to-morrow at half past nine.

Mr. WADDELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If to-day is

Saturday and we take a recess, will we not take a recess until Sunday morning to legislate on that day?

The SPEAKER. Sunday will not be reached until Saturday's session has expired.

Mr. WADDELL. Suppose we take a recess, can we run on to-morrow as a legal day? Can we sit on Sunday as a legislative day?

The SPEAKER. If we take a recess until to-morrow, it will be the continuance of this legislative day.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Why, it is Sunday now; it is after twelve o'clock.

Mr. WADDELL. Then to-morrow will not be the legislative day of Sunday.

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. WADDELL. If we take a recess, do not we go over, then, until Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from Pennsylvania modify his motion so that the House shall take a recess until half past nine o'clock for the purposes specified by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I modify my motion in that way.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I hope if we take a recess to meet to-morrow it will be for religious services.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The House to-morrow will also receive conference reports?

The SPEAKER. That is included, and the appointment of conferees.

Mr. TUCKER. I move to amend the motion so that the House shall take a recess till nine o'clock on Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, and will be voted on first, as it fixes the longest time.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I should prefer that the recess should be till Monday morning, but I am informed it is necessary there should be a meeting to-morrow.

The question being taken on Mr. TUCKER's motion, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] that the House take a recess until half past nine o'clock a. m.

The question being put, the Speaker stated that, in the opinion of the Chair, the "ayes" had it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays. I demand that the regular business shall be done, and it should be done now.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 84, not voting 117; as follows:

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 5065) to give circuit courts appellate jurisdiction in certain criminal cases.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I offer the following amendment to the order already made:

That if the House take a further recess until Monday morning at any hour before eleven o'clock, then that general business be proceeded with on Monday morning.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

And accordingly (at five minutes past one o'clock a. m.) the House took a recess until half past nine o'clock Sunday morning.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired the House reassembled at half past nine o'clock a. m., (Sunday, March 2.)

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I ask consent that the privileges of the floor for the remainder of the session be extended to Judge John A. Blair, of New Jersey.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CRAPO asked unanimous consent to have printed in the Record as a portion of the debates of this House some remarks he had prepared upon the subject of fisheries.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

RECESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now take a recess for fifteen minutes. I am advised that by that time one if not two appropriation bills will be here from the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and thirty-five minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until nine o'clock and fifty minutes a. m.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SIMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; also that the Senate requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to said bill, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WINDOM, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill just returned from the Senate with amendments.

There was no objection, and the bill and amendments were taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I now move that the request of the Senate for a conference on the amendments of the Senate to the sundry civil appropriation bill be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. ATKINS, Mr. HEWITT of New York, and Mr. HALE.

RECESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now take a recess until half past ten o'clock this morning. I name that hour because I am assured that the legislative appropriation bill will be here from the Senate by that time.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until ten o'clock and thirty minutes a. m.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill of the House (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; also that the Senate requested a conference with the House on the amendments of the Senate to said bill, and had appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to take from the Speaker's table the legislative appropriation bill, with the amendments of the Senate thereto. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I now move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that the request of the Senate for a committee of conference be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. ATKINS, Mr. DURHAM, and Mr. FOSTER as the conferees on the part of the House.

HOLMEAD CEMETERY.

Mr. CLAFLIN submitted the following:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the Senate bill No. 1108, entitled "An act to protect Holmead Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments, and agree to the same.

WM. CLAFLIN.

STEPHEN L. MAYHAM.

R. W. TOWNSHEND.

Managers on the part of the House.

E. H. ROLLINS.

GEORGE E. SPENCER.

A. S. MERRIMON.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CLAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. ATKINS. I trust that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will withdraw that motion and allow me to move that a recess be taken until nine o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill will probably be ready for action to-night, and it is necessary, in order to have the bill enrolled, that it shall be placed in the hands of the enrolling clerks as soon as possible.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to state that I think it is very probable we can agree upon a report on the sundry civil appropriation bill by nine or half past nine o'clock this evening. If we do so and the report is adopted, then the enrolling clerks will have the whole night in which to enroll the bill. The Clerk of the House informs me that it is important that the bill shall be placed in the hands of the enrolling clerks as soon as possible.

Mr. KENNA. In addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. ATKINS,] I will say that if all three of these important appropriation bills are delayed until to-morrow morning in getting to the enrolling clerks, it is quite likely that one or more of them will fail. One of those bills alone will require seven hours for reading and comparison.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Is it not practicable to have an evening session a little earlier than nine o'clock?

Mr. ATKINS. I do not think the conference committee will be able to report earlier than nine o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I can give up going to church on Sunday; but I would like to go to bed at night. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLYMER. The only objection I can see to the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is this: there has been a disagreement in the conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill. By reason of the absence of two of the Senate conferees the report of the committee setting forth that disagreement was not signed last night. If we now take a recess until nine o'clock to-night the report from that committee cannot be presented until that hour. It seems to me that for the purpose of getting that important bill through we ought to have the report submitted some time during the day.

Mr. ATKINS. I would inquire of the gentleman at what time the committee will be able to report the fact of their disagreement?

Mr. CLYMER. I think certainly within an hour.

Mr. HALE. After all, that is more a technical matter than otherwise, because under the practice the same conferees will undoubtedly be reappointed; so that nothing will be gained by meeting here earlier than proposed.

Mr. ATKINS. If, in view of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] has just stated, it shall be agreeable to the House, I do not think I would object to taking a recess at this time for an hour or an hour and a quarter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Senate does not meet again until two o'clock this afternoon, and in all human probability the Senate conferees who were absent last night will not be here before that time.

Mr. CLYMER. If the Senate conferees should not be here before that time, they can be sent for or the report can be sent to them and be signed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not like to have the House brought together on a contingency of that sort.

Mr. PRICE. I do not want to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations; but I ask whether it will not be practicable to get through the public business by taking a recess now until ten o'clock to-morrow morning. We shall then have twenty-six hours before the final adjournment on Tuesday. I hope we shall, if possible, avoid sitting here on the Sabbath, a proceeding which is not creditable to us.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty is in regard to enrolling the bills and comparing the enrollment. Probably the comparison of one of these large bills would take four hours.

Mr. MILLS. It is a well-known fact that upon these appropriation bills the clerks do a large portion of the enrollment in advance—all that portion of the bill in regard to which there is no contest.

The SPEAKER. That portion of the enrollment is now being done as fast as possible.

Mr. MILLS. Then, Mr. Speaker, we shall transact business with more dispatch if we go to bed to-night and sleep till morning than if we stay here to-night.

Mr. ATKINS. In response to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] I will say that it will be impossible for the clerks to enroll the bills in time unless we have a session this evening.

The SPEAKER. There are three hundred amendments to one of the bills.

Mr. CLYMER. I felt it my duty to state the exact condition of affairs.

Mr. WOOD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ATKINS. I adhere to my motion to take a recess until nine o'clock this evening.

Mr. TUCKER. I move to amend the motion so that we shall meet at twelve o'clock to-night instead of nine o'clock. I hope this motion will prevail.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TUCKER, it was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. ATKINS was then agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and forty minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until nine o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at nine o'clock p. m. Sunday, March 2) resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 5271) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Richard Stevenson, late assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and his bondsmen.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) releasing the reversionary claim and interest of the United States in and to certain lands of the State of Michigan.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. BLAINE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. WALLACE.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNNELL. For my personal information, Mr. Speaker, I ask what order was made when the recess was taken this morning as to the business of this evening?

The SPEAKER. The business of this evening is limited to the reception of messages from the President, messages from the Senate, and reports of conference committees and to the appointment of conferees.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then I understand no business can be taken from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Not to-night. There was an understanding that should the House take a recess to-night until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock, general business (which the Chair understood as meaning business on the Speaker's table) should be proceeded with between nine and eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes. The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit a report from the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
HIESTER CLYMER,
JOHN H. BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.
S. W. DORSEY,
WM. A. WALLACE,
J. G. BLAINE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask a further conference with the Senate thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to have the gentleman state on what particular subject the conferees disagree.

Mr. CLYMER. That is hardly worth while. It is a general disagreement.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. BAKER of Indiana, as the conferees on the part of the House at the further conference.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am directed by the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill to make a report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

ABRAM S. HEWITT,
W. A. J. SPARKS,
CHARLES FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. G. BLAINE,
W. B. ALLISON,
R. E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the request of the Senate for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, Mr. SPARKS, and Mr. FOSTER as conferees at the further conference.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes. The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House (at nine o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House take a further recess till eleven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The House reassembled at eleven o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the further conference asked on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and had appointed Mr. DORSEY, Mr. FERRY, and Mr. WALLACE as conferees on its part.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House take a recess until half past eleven o'clock.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to take a recess until half past nine o'clock in the morning. I do not see why we should sit night after night for nothing.

Mr. DURHAM. I hope gentlemen will not insist on their motions, as there will be a conference report here in a few moments.

Mr. EDEN. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. McMAHON. So do I.

Mr. DUNNELL. I should be glad to hear from the Committee on Appropriations whether any necessity exists compelling us to remain here night after night.

Mr. DURHAM. The conference report will soon be made on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, the conferees of the two Houses have been in conference upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and have not been able to come to any agreement. I move, therefore, that the House insist and ask for a further conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the conference report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House, No. 6240, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

J. D. C. ATKINS,
M. J. DURHAM,
CHARLES FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.
WILLIAM WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. I move the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a further conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who makes this report from the conference committee, to state to the House the points of disagreement, so we may know something about our bearings.

Mr. ATKINS. Well, sir, if it is the desire of the House that reply should be given to that question, I am perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. McMAHON. I call for the regular order. We all know what the points of difference are.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course the House is entitled to know the situation of its business, and especially where so much has been intrusted to the conference committee.

Mr. ATKINS. I will answer the gentleman in general that there are several subjects upon which we have not been able to agree. We have not been able to agree, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the salaries of the officers and employes of the two Houses. The Senate conferees have stood out in favor of the salaries as fixed at present for the officers and employes of the Senate, while the House conferees have not been willing to accede to their demands. There is a difference of opinion. We also differ—

Mr. McMAHON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Are these explanations in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. McMAHON. I am inquiring for information.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. You cannot take the floor from him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never known of an instance where a member making a report from a conference committee was not allowed to reply to any question put to him if he chose to reply. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. ATKINS. It is very manifest, Mr. Speaker—and I have no concealment; I have no disposition to withhold any fact that may be in possession of the conferees on the part of the House—but, sir, it is very manifest to this House that there are differences of opinion between the two Houses and those differences exist in the conference committee. We differ upon the subject of the test-oath amendment; we differ on the subject of the amendment in reference to deputy marshals; we differ on the subject of the supervisors' amendment, and we differ on the point I have just stated. I do not know that there is anything to be gained either way, whether it be stated or whether it shall not be stated. These are the main points of difference between the two Houses.

Mr. FOSTER. As a member of the conference committee, I think it is due to the House to say that the committee could probably agree upon every point save those of a political nature. I think it is due further to say that this is true as to the Army bill as well. I have no hesitation in saying I believe that both of these conference committees could agree on every question save those of a political nature. The hitch is right there, and nowhere else.

There are four questions of a political nature pending now in conference. One on the Army bill which relates to the use of troops to preserve the peace at the polls; that section of the Revised Statutes has been repealed by the House bill. The Senate rejected that provision of the House bill. There is a deficiency of some $250,000 to pay for the maintenance of the courts.

A MEMBER. You mean to pay deputy marshals of elections.

Mr. FOSTER. Of which some $250,000 is for the pay of marshals.

Mr. ATKINS. My friend is speaking now of the deficiency bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking of the deficiency bill. I think it is due to the House and to the country to know exactly where our difficulties are. Then on the legislative bill are the two provisions of which the House is well aware, one relating to the test oath for jurors, and the other known as the supervisors and marshals clause. Now, who shall yield or who shall not, it is not exactly for me to say. It seems to me that there can be no great necessity on the part of our democratic friends to urge this matter now. They will have the control of both Houses of Congress at the next session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is arguing the question.

Mr. FOSTER. We might as well understand this question first as last. I do not propose to use any bravado. I am willing for myself, and I believe I speak for my republican friends, to try to find a point of agreement; but that has been resisted so far. We have been unable, the House conferees, to find a point of agreement; or rather I have been unable to find one, I say frankly, anywhere. Our democratic friends object to it; they say they cannot yield; our friends from the Senate say they cannot yield.

Now, it may be well enough to order another conference committee, but the result is to be precisely the same, unless one side or the other backs down or yields something. I believe, and I state it here upon my responsibility as a Representative, that if our democratic friends would yield something, we could find a point of agreement. So far they have not been willing to yield anything anywhere.

Mr. COOK. We yielded enough when we gave you a president who was not elected.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, one side or the other is responsible if we have an extra session from failing to agree. Our republican friends of the Senate have gone far to secure some point of agreement, but thus far have failed. Unless something be yielded, it seems to me an extra session is inevitable. [Cries of "All right!" "Let it come!"] So far as the republican side of the House is concerned, I say in no bravado at all, we cannot yield anything unless some point of agreement can be found on the other side. If not, we will sit it out.

A MEMBER. So will we.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure my republican friends will join me in this sentiment, that unless some point of agreement is yielded on the other side we propose to sit it out. [Cries of "All right!"]

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the previous question on the motion that the House insist on its amendments.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. ATKINS. I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for a moment? It is only in the direction of what he is trying to do. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ATKINS. I would yield to the gentleman, but I do not propose at this stage of the proceedings to get into a discussion upon this question.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose—

Mr. FRANKLIN. I make the point of order that the vote is being taken and that the gentleman from Tennessee is not on the floor to yield to anybody.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is on the floor.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Has he not called the previous question?

The SPEAKER. He has a right to the floor even after moving the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that I hope the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will prevail. There is a disposition on the part of some gentlemen to recede and bring this matter to a test here and now. I hope that will not be done. I hope a new committee will be appointed or that the old one will be reappointed, so that the gentlemen of the committee from both branches of Congress may again meet. And I hope, in view of the various embarrassments that would come upon the country by reason of an extra session of Congress, which very few sane men want, that the six men to whom the two Houses intrust this question will come to some accord. There is no reason why there may not be on all the propositions stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] some accord. There is no reason why one side or the other should insist upon everything.

I do not believe if another conference is ordered that the gentlemen representing the other side will see their way clear to insist upon everything; the clause for the withdrawal of the troops, the test oath repeal, neither of which we care much about; and in addition the supervisors and marshals clause relating to the elections. Then we might have a fair adjustment which this side would be willing to accept. I hope that disposition will be appreciated on the other side. If not, let us do as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] has said—sit it out to the end.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to say in submitting the statement I did to the House I eschewed every allusion to politics; it was a simple business transaction. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] I stated the points of difference as succinctly as I possibly could. I did not even pretend to give a reason.

Now, sir, I trust that the gentleman from Maine and my friend from Ohio, who have addressed this House, did not design to get any party advantage in this matter in the statements or the remarks they have made to the House. I do not desire to enter into a political discussion at this time. I have desired to come to a conclusion upon this subject. I wanted the conference committee to come to a conclusion if possible. The House has its views; the majority of the House have their views; it seems the majority of the Senate have their views. If we can upon the principles of right and justice arrive at a just conclusion and submit it to both Houses and it can be ratified, I doubt not the country will ratify it.

If we cannot do so, then as a matter of course we must take the consequences, and leave the country to judge of the motives and to lay the right or the wrong at the door of those to whom it belongs. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. ATKINS. I will yield.

Mr. SPARKS. In reply to one remark made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] I desire to state that I think the gentleman has, inadvertently no doubt, failed to state correctly the position of the democratic conferees on the Army appropriation bill. I was one of those conferees, and I wish to say to the House that every disposition was manifested by the democratic conferees to have a compromise of existing difficulties so far as appropriations are concerned, and so far as everything before that conference is concerned, except the matter of having an armed force to keep the peace at the polls.

Mr. ATKINS. I must insist upon my motion.

Mr. SPARKS. A word more. On this point I want to say that so far as I am concerned it would be utterly useless to appoint me as a conferee on that bill with any expectation that I will yield that point, for I will not do it. [Applause.] I will yield so far as money is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the conferees on the Army appropriation bill have been reappointed.

Mr. SPARKS. It is within my province to say to those gentlemen that if there is a difference between us in regard to the amount of money to be appropriated, I am prepared to yield. And there are other points in the Army appropriation bill in regard to which I have the same disposition. But that the Army shall be used under the direction of an unscrupulous Executive, in the language of the statute, "to preserve the peace at the polls" where my neighbors vote and where I vote, by my consent there never shall be appropriated one dollar out of the Treasury to pay the Army for any such purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. ATKINS. I now insist upon the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments to the Army appropriation bill and ask for a further conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to have the conferees on the part of the House appointed at this time?

Mr. ATKINS. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. DURHAM of Kentucky, and Mr. FOSTER of Ohio as the conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] what is the prospect of an agreement by the conferees on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I think we can have that bill in the House inside of an hour.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] make the motion. We want to follow the lead of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, not of the other gentleman.

Mr. McMAHON. If the sundry civil appropriation bill shall be agreed upon, it can be enrolled just as well in the absence of the House as while the House is in session.

The SPEAKER. The House may not agree to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. McMAHON. They undoubtedly will agree to any report that is brought in here from the conference committee. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I never knew the House during the last hours of a session to take action in opposition to the wishes of the Committee on Appropriations. And should the House do that now—

Mr. GARFIELD. We are bound to be loyal to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to state that the Senate has just passed the river and harbor bill, and it will be here in a short time. It is important that that bill should be sent to a conference in order that there may be time to enroll it. That is a bill which I suppose the House will not care to lose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend that motion so that the House will now take a recess until one o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken on the longest time first.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is not a case of filling up a blank.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is corrected. The question will be first taken on the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] moves that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. The gentleman from Ohio on the other side moves that the House take a recess until one o'clock. The question should be taken on the longest time first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In filling up blanks the largest sum and the longest time shall be first put; but where a specific time or sum stands part of a motion, it is not until it is struck out and a blank thereby produced that this rule can begin to operate.

Mr. McMAHON. Let the Chair state the question now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is this: The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] moves that the House now take a recess until nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Several MEMBERS. Ten o'clock.

Mr. McMAHON. Very well. Leave it at nine o'clock.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Ohio on the left [Mr. GARFIELD] moves to amend that motion so that the House now take a recess until one o'clock.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend so that the House will take a recess until half past twelve o'clock; that will give us about an hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. I accept that amendment.

The question was then taken upon the amendment as modified; and it was agreed to.

The question was taken upon the motion as amended; and upon a division there were—ayes 110, noes 40.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. McKENZIE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being 12 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until twelve o'clock and thirty minutes a. m. Monday, March 3.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes a. m. Monday, March 3.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, and I hope that by that time, or by eleven o'clock, the sundry civil appropriation bill will be reported from the committee of conference.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ATKINS; and it was agreed to.

Accordingly the House (at twelve o'clock and thirty-one minutes a. m.) took a recess until ten o'clock a. m. Monday, March 3.

The recess having expired, the House (at ten o'clock a. m., Monday, March 3) resumed its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed with the regular order, which is the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

LANDS OF BLACK BOB BAND OF SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) instructing the Attorney-General of the United States to bring certain suits in the name of the United States to set aside certain patents to lands of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

After the words "instructed to," in line 4, to strike out "direct the district attorney for the State of Kansas to bring suits" and insert "cause a suit in equity to be brought;" in line 6, after the words "United States" to strike out "to set aside and annul the patents which have been issued to any of" and insert "in the circuit court for the district of Kansas, to quiet and finally settle the titles to;" in line 9, after the word "lands," to strike out "of" and insert "claimed by or under;" in line 10, after the word "Kansas" to insert "or adversely to said titles;" and to strike out, beginning in line 11, the following words: "And to test the question of title to any or all of said lands, and to permit any attorneys selected by the settlers now upon said lands to appear in court and to assist in the prosecution and trial of said cause; Provided, That in no way shall the United States become responsible or holden for the payment of attorneys' fees for any counsel thus employed by said settlers;" so as to read:

"That the Attorney-General of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, instructed to cause a suit in equity to be brought in the name of the United States in the circuit court for the district of Kansas, to quiet and finally settle the titles to the lands claimed by or under the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians in Kansas, or adversely to said titles."

After line 16, to insert:

"All persons having any claim to said lands, or any part thereof, as well as said band of Indians, shall be made parties to said suit, either personally or by representation, as said court may deem convenient, consistently with justice to all the interests involved, and notice of the institution and pendency of said suit and for the appearance of the parties thereto shall be given, either by personal service or by such publication as the court shall order, or both. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to cause the rights of said band of Indians, and of the individual members thereof, to be duly presented and protected in said suit, and he shall employ counsel to aid in such protection; and any other claimants to said lands, or any part thereof, may appear in said cause, personally or by counsel, to defend the same and assert their rights; and said court shall, upon proof and hearing, proceed to determine, according to the principles of law and equity, all the questions arising in respect to said lands, or any thereof, and decree accordingly, and cause such decree to be carried into execution, and the possession of the lands, or parts thereof, respectively, to be delivered to the person entitled thereto; and upon a final decision of the said matters it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue patents for said lands in conformity to such decision. No objection shall be allowed in said suit in respect of want or misjoinder of parties other than such as are required in this act, or for multifariousness or want of form. The right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States shall exist as in other cases."

Amend the title so as to read:

"A joint resolution instructing the Attorney-General of the United States to bring a certain suit in the name of the United States to quiet and settle the titles to lands of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians."

Mr. HASKELL. I move that these amendments be concurred in. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the votes by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor bill (H. R. No. 6463) be taken from the Speaker's table that we may non-concur in them and ask a conference with the Senate.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Would it be in order to ask that the amendments be read?

The SPEAKER. If that is to be done, the Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to wait until eleven o'clock because to read these amendments now would interfere with the business in which the House is now proceeding.

Mr. REAGAN. My object is that the conference committee may get to work upon these amendments as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. If the amendments are to be read, the reading will occupy the entire time between now and eleven o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the demand for the reading of the amendments will not be insisted upon.

Mr. EDEN. In order that we may go on regularly with the business on the Speaker's table until eleven o'clock, I object to the request of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. LUTTRELL. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the amendments. Let them go to a committee of conference.

Mr. EDEN. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor appropriation bill will be non-concurred in, and a conference with the Senate will be asked.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. REAGAN, Mr. KENNA, and Mr. HUBBELL as the conferees on the part of the House.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. FRANKLIN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the bill (H. R. No. 1596) for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma. [See Appendix.]

Mr. FLEMING, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the bill (S. No. 1784) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health. [See Appendix.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the bill (H. R. No. 6134) to regulate the duties on sugar. [See Appendix.]

M. G. HARMAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2161) for the relief of M. G. Harman, of Virginia.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 2, after the word "pay," insert the following: "To the personal representatives of the late."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the personal representatives of the late M. G. Harman, of Virginia."

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move concurrence in these amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. S. MASSIE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2294) to authorize the Secretary of War to place upon the rolls of Company H, Ninth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, the name of William S. Massie.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

Massie to be placed on the rolls of Company H, Ninth Regiment of West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, as of the date of August 18, 1861; and that he be entitled to receive all pay, bounties, commutation of rations, clothing, and other emoluments of said service as were paid to and received by other privates of said company from the 18th day of August to the 25th of October, 1861, deducting therefrom any and all sums of money, rations, or clothing he may have heretofore received on account of said service."

Strike out the preamble.

Mr. NEAL. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate. The amendments were concurred in.

ELIAS B. BELL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2472) for the relief of Elias B. Bell, late private of Company E, Third Regiment West Virginia Cavalry.

At the end of the bill add:

"And issue to him an honorable discharge dated of the muster-out of his regiment, June 30, 1865, and that he be allowed and paid any arrears of pay and bounty due him upon the settlement of his accounts by the accounting officers of the Government."

The amendment was concurred in.

At the end of the bill add "and that he be paid a pension from the date of this act."

The amendments were concurred in.

STREET RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In section 1, line 11, to strike out the word "week" and insert "month," so as to read:

"And every such corporation shall, once in a month, redeem all such tickets issued by it which shall be presented by any other such corporation, by paying therefor at the rate of four cents in money for each ticket so presented."

On page 1, in line 16, strike out "action of tort" and insert "a civil action."

In section 2, line 6, before the word "corporation," strike out the words "the person or" and insert "such," and in line 7, after the word "to," strike out "his or;" so as to make the section read:

"Sec. 2. Any street-railroad corporation refusing to receive, as above provided, any such ticket issued by any other such corporation, or refusing to redeem, as above provided, any such ticket of its own issue, shall forfeit, for each ticket which it shall so refuse, the sum of $1, to be recovered in action of tort by such corporation presenting the same, to its own use."

Strike out section 3, as follows:

"Sec. 3. That all street-railroad corporations which have, for the past year, or longer, issued commutation tickets at a less rate than charged for a single fare, shall be required to continue to issue them at the same rate or less, as now charged by said street-railroad corporations. And all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move that the House non-concur and ask a conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN KANSAS.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In section 1, line 5, after the word "year," insert the words "the terms of said courts to be held on the second Monday of January."

In line 7, after the word "act," strike out "the time and length of the term to be fixed by the judges of said courts respectively."

At the end of section 3, add "if no suitable building is provided without expense to the United States, then, and in that case, no court shall be held at said place."

Mr. RYAN. I would like to have this bill read as amended.

Mr. HASKELL. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. McMAHON. I believe that the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, which originally recommended this bill, has agreed to the amendments of the Senate, having considered them informally. The gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE,] who has had charge of the bill, is not here now.

Mr. HASKELL. These amendments of the Senate do not disturb the amendment adopted in the House on motion of my colleague, [Mr. RYAN.] That amendment remains just as it passed the House.

Mr. RYAN. That is all I wanted to ascertain.

The amendments were concurred in.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6179) donating four condemned cannon to the town of Sutton, in the State of Massachusetts.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Mr. MILLS. I move concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Strike out all after the word "acquired," in line 7, down to and including "thereof," in line 8.

Mr. CONGER and Mr. KEIGHTLEY moved to concur.

The amendments were concurred in.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 238) extending the time for the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDEN. I make the point of order that that bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, as it makes an appropriation of public lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1266) to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial circuit.

The bill was read.

Mr. HANNA. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TIPTON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion and let the bill pass; it is an absolute public necessity.

Mr. HANNA. There may have been such a necessity before the repeal of the bankrupt law, but there is not now.

Mr. TIPTON. I can assure the gentleman that there is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FORT LEAVENWORTH MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 827) to provide for the sale of certain portions of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDEN. I think that ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, as it manifestly makes an appropriation of public lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask whether this bill grants any lands now belonging to the United States?

Mr. EDEN. It does; as I understand it, it gives a part of this reservation to the railroad company.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

H. M. BILLINGSLEY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 984) for the relief of H. M. Billingsley.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to H. M. Billingsley the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry from November 20, 1864, to March 20, 1865, and the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant from the 20th of March, 1865, to the 16th of May, 1865, and the pay and allowances of a captain from May 16, 1865, to the date of his muster-out of service, deducting therefrom any pay that he may have received as a non-commissioned officer or private in said company.

Mr. RYAN. I move that that bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 959) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits.

The bill was read. It provides that from and after the passage of the act, the even sections within the limits of any grant of public lands to any railroad company, or to any military road company, or to any State in aid of any railroad or military road, shall be open to settlers under the homestead laws to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres to each settler, and any person who has, under existing laws, taken a homestead on any even section within the limits of any railroad or military road land grant, and who, by existing laws shall have been restricted to eighty acres, may enter under the homestead laws an additional eighty acres adjoining the land embraced in his original entry, if such additional land be subject to entry; or if such person so elect, he may surrender his entry to the United States for cancellation, and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead laws the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made. And any person so making additional entry of eighty acres, or new entry after the surrender and cancellation of his original entry, shall be permitted so to do without payment of fees and commissions; and the residence and cultivation of such person upon and of the land embraced in his original entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and of the land embraced in his additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from the five years' residence and cultivation required by law; provided that in no case shall patent issue upon an additional or new homestead entry under this act until the person has actually, and in conformity with the homestead laws, occupied, resided upon, and cultivated the land embraced therein at least one year.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that that bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD AND PRE-EMPTION ENTRIES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1087) to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries of public lands.

The bill was read. It provides that before final proof shall be submitted by any person claiming to enter agricultural lands under the laws providing for pre-emption or homestead entries, such person shall file with the register of the proper land office a notice of his or her intention to make such proof, stating therein the description of lands to be entered, and the names of the witnesses by whom the necessary facts will be established. Upon the filing of such notice the register shall publish a notice that such application has been made for the period of thirty days in a newspaper to be by him designated or published nearest to such land, and he shall also post such notice in some conspicuous place in his office for the same period. Such notice shall contain the names of the witnesses as stated in the application. At the expiration of said period of thirty days, the claimant shall be entitled to make proof in the manner heretofore provided by law. The Secretary of the Interior shall make all necessary rules for giving effect to the foregoing provisions.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that that bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TREADWELL S. AYRES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1205) for the relief of Treadwell S. Ayres.

The bill was read.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order on that bill that it makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1102) to authorize the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois respectively to commence and prosecute suits against the United States in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The bill was read.

Mr. TIPTON. I move that the bill pass.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. MCMAHON. I will say that this case has been thoroughly considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause Rule 112 to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

112. All proceedings touching appropriations of money, and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made or authorizing payments out of appropriations to be made, shall be first discussed in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. This requires an appropriation; and in accordance with former decisions with reference to this very bill the Chair sustains the point of order.

ANNA M. CLARK.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. R. No. 31) approving the adverse decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the claim of Anna M. Clark; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office adverse to the claim of Anna M. Clark, (Executive Document No. 12, House of Representatives, first session, Forty-fourth Congress,) be, and the same is hereby, approved, and the said claim is hereby rejected.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 1368) in relation to the Kansas Pacific Railway, and to alter and amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for military or other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment to said first-named act; which was read a first and second time.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, (interrupting the reading.) I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. It would occupy a great deal of time to proceed with the bill now.

The SPEAKER. The bill has to be read through.

Mr. CABELL. Has it been before a committee of this House?

The SPEAKER. It has not. This is a bill taken from the Speaker's table, and it has not been before any committee.

Mr. CABELL. I move that it be referred to one of the committees of this House.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. That is my motion; that it be referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be so referred.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I should like to hear the bill read.

Mr. RYAN. I also desire that it should be read. If it is a proper bill to be passed, I want that it should be put upon its passage.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. We have no time now to find out what sort of a bill it is. It is too important to pass without proper consideration. Let it go to a committee.

Mr. TIPTON. If it is important that the bill should be passed, it certainly ought to be read.

Mr. BRAGG. Let the bill be read. We do not know what it is.

Mr. EDEN. Is it not liable to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. Does it part with any of the lands of the United States?

Mr. MORRISON. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. ROBERTS, (interrupting the reading.) Has not sufficient of that bill been read to disclose the fact that it is subject to the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Maryland state in what respect it is subject to the point of order?

Mr. ROBERTS. To my mind enough of it has been read to disclose the fact that the bill should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House. It undertakes to regulate certain rights of a railroad company in which the United States has an interest.

Mr. CABELL. And it appropriates money.

Mr. MORRISON. It proposes to save the rights of the United States. It is a most meritorious bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois state that it does not appropriate any public lands?

Mr. MORRISON. I do not state that. I have not read it through, but I know the subject of the bill.

Mr. RYAN. The bill does not appropriate any lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has stated that the bill appropriates money.

Mr. RYAN. If it does I am not aware of it.

Mr. CABELL. I understood from the reading that the bill required an appropriation to pay the commissioners for the duties intrusted to them.

The SPEAKER. That would subject it to a point of order.

Mr. CABELL. Certainly it would.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that he has not yet reached that point in the bill.

Mr. CABELL. I so understood the reading. It may be that in the confusion I did not hear distinctly.

The Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CABELL. I make the point of order that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of the Government directors out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDEN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order and let the bill pass.

Mr. CABELL. I cannot do that.

Mr. EDEN. I presume the bill will give rise to no debate. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It is a very important bill and does require debate. It provides for the payment of money out of the Treasury. It is not nearly as good a bill as the House bill.

Mr. RYAN. It may not be so good a bill as it ought to be, but it is a good bill so far as it goes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

WILLIAM H. NEWMAN AND L. A. VAN HOFFMAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 752) for the relief of William H. Newman and L. A. Van Hoffman; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope the point of order will not be insisted upon. This is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

FORT HARKER MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 26) to donate a portion of the military reservation of Fort Harker to the State of Kansas for the establishment of an educational or charitable institution and to open the remainder of said reservation to settlement; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. EDEN. That bill is liable to the point of order. It disposes of public property.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

AMENDMENT OF ARMY APPROPRIATION ACT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1492) to amend section 15 of an act entitled "An act making an appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1878; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. EDEN. That bill ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is there a point of order raised against it?

Mr. EDEN. I do not know.

Mr. MCMAHON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE AT DECATUR, NEBRASKA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 835) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Decatur, Nebraska.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, and I will say that it is precisely the same bill, word for word, which the committee of the House has agreed to report to the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion the Chair desires to ask consent for Mr. KENNA to print remarks upon the question of the Brazilian mail service appropriation.

There was no objection, and leave was granted. [See Appendix.] The question was taken on Mr. GARFIELD's motion, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and fifty-seven minutes) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 3, 1879.

The Senate met at one o'clock p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Heavenly Father, Author and Patron of human affections, in the friendships of men we see some faint reflection and semblance of Thyself. In this Senate, through the scenes of joy and grief, of differing opinion and high debate, in the coming and the going, in the greeting and the parting, the years have rolled over us, and all these Thy servants, every one, have been most kind to him who has essayed to lead their daily devotions here. God bless them for it; yet more than all in this their reverent recognition of Him who ruleth over all. Dear to our hearts is this nation whose heritage is wide as the continent, whose welfare is the problem of the coming year; yet dearer far to Thee must be this great people whom Thou hast cherished through all the story of their wondrous life. As all nations before Thee are but as the key-board of Thy fingers, and whosoever Thou dost strike the note of our Republic, oh, may the answer be a strain of universal liberty, law, order, and concord resounding through the world.

And now in the closing hours of this Congress, under the pressure of so many urgent things, suffer us once more to commend to Thee all these Thy servants, their persons, families, friends, estate, and all our rulers and magistrates, and all our men of rank and might, yea, and all the millions of the people, to preserve them in body, safety, and prosperity in all the land and in all our generation. Through the name of Him whose name is above every name and will endure forever, the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not any quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. No quorum?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is evidently no quorum present.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (at one o'clock and six minutes.) Is it in order to give a notice?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. There is no quorum present. It is a legislative act to give a notice.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the roll be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll of the Senate will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and 34 Senators answered to their names—less than a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, (at one o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) There is a quorum present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator withdraw that motion?
Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw it for a moment.

EXERCISE OF ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call up a resolution submitted by me last Thursday from the special committee appointed to investigate the election frauds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks the Senate to consider a resolution which will be reported.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the select committee appointed under the resolutions adopted on the 17th of December, 1878, to inquire into certain alleged violations of the constitutional rights of American citizens in recent elections in any of the States of the Union be continued, with power to report at the next session of the Senate; and said committee shall have authority to sit during the recess of the Senate, and shall possess, during said recess and until its report shall have been made, all the power and authority heretofore conferred on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to know—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (H. R. No. 2472) for the relief of Elias B. Bell, late private of Company E, Third Regiment West Virginia Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 5300) to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Fort Scott, Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 6179) donating four condemned cannon to the town of Sutton, in the State of Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. No. 1901) for the relief of Philip W. Stanhope;

A bill (H. R. No. 1956) for the relief of Thomas Murphy, of Knox County, Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 2161) for the relief of M. G. Harman, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 2294) to authorize the Secretary of War to place upon the rolls of Company H, Ninth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, the name of William S. Massie;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) instructing the Attorney-General of the United States to bring suit in the name of the United States to quiet and settle the titles to land of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) releasing the reversionary claim and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in the State of Michigan.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 5231) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM CLAFIN of Massachusetts, Mr. J. C. S. BLACKBURN of Kentucky, and Mr. G. W. HENDEE of Vermont, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 959) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits;

A bill (S. No. 934) for the relief of H. M. Billingsley;

A bill (S. No. 1087) to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on the public lands; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 31) approving the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the claim of Anna M. Clarke.

EXERCISE OF ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now renew my motion.

Mr. TELLER. My resolution has not yet been voted on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from Colorado; which will be again read for information. The resolution was again read.

Mr. BAYARD. When was that reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the 27th day of February.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that when the resolution was introduced the Senator from Delaware objected to it. He wanted to examine it. This is the third time I have called it up, and the objection has come from the other side of the Chamber. It was the action of the committee unanimously. I supposed that the investigation was specially desired on that side of the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not believe this practice is to result in good. It entails expense on the country. It may be a very pleasant thing for committees to travel from one end of the country to the other making investigations which will result in no practical good at the public expense. As one member of the body I take it upon myself to say that I object to all such useless expenditures of public money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate agree to the resolution? The resolution was agreed to.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion.

Mr. BAYARD. I offered a joint resolution yesterday relative to some allowance to employés, which ought to be acted on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAYARD. Will not the Senator allow me one moment to call up this resolution which I trust now will be passed? It is relative to paying pages and clerks of committees for sixty days. I believe it will take no time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is highly important I think to public interests that there should be an executive session; but if nobody else asks to lay this aside, I shall withhold my motion for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent to consider at this time a resolution which will be read.

Mr. BAYARD. It is the resolution offered yesterday in respect to paying the clerks of committees and pages.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, was read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to pay all committee clerks, pages, messengers, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives who do not receive annual salaries, their present rate of compensation respectively for sixty days from the date of the adjournment of this Congress; and the money required to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available: And further, The provisions of this resolution shall apply to the persons holding their respective positions at the date of its approval.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. When the resolution under consideration was offered yesterday I objected to it. I did so for several reasons, prominent among which is the fact that the legislative bill now pending appropriates the money necessary to pay all employés thirty days' additional pay. That has been the usage of the Senate, I believe. This is unusual, as I understand. If the resolution should pass and we should have an extra session, of course it would be paying double, perhaps treble, because the legislative bill contains provision for what this resolution provides for. Of course if we were in session the employés would be paid. Therefore I believe I must object. I do it with great respect to the mover, but I believe it my duty to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One objection will not carry it over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The matter is on the Calendar. This is a joint resolution, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thought it was a simple resolution of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the question is on the second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It appropriates money from the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senate has a right to vote to-day that it be read the second time; but it cannot be read the third time without unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Inasmuch as this is the last day of the session and the Senator from Delaware does not care about the second reading if he cannot have the third, I must insist on the motion I made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ORDNANCE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire unanimous consent to withdraw a resolution I offered on the 26th instant, to raise a committee on ordnance. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Chair to examine into and report upon the whole subject of ordnance as it relates to the Army, Navy, and militia; and that said committee shall have authority to examine departmental books and papers and to employ a clerk. The expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The Secretaries of War and Navy are each directed to detail an officer as secretaries of said committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the resolution is withdrawn.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. ANTHONY. While the galleries are clearing I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing have leave to sit during the recess.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is usual, I believe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no objection, and the resolution is agreed to.

COMPILATION OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the reports of the Senate and House Committees on Private Lands Claims from the Nineteenth Congress to date, compiled under the direction of the Senate Committee on Private Land Claims by its clerk, be printed for the use of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I present a memorial to Congress from the United States Church, as it is called, sitting at Joliet, Illinois, praying Congress to overrule the Postmaster-General, who has suppressed, as they say, their literature as blasphemous. They insist upon it that it is not, and recite at length their grievance in respectful language and ask the interposition of Congress to change the decision of the Postmaster-General. The memorial is in respectful language; but it is proper for me to state that I did not know before of the existence of this church or of its literature. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2518) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the schooner Don Pedro, reported it without amendment.

INTEROCEANIC SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to furnish for the information of the Senate the reports of survey of the Panama and Nappi interoceanic ship-canal routes, made in 1875, with the accompanying papers.

Mr. ANTHONY. And that they be printed.

Mr. SARGENT. I had not included that, but I will insert it on the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution will be so modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I insist on the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The galleries are cleared and the doors closed. The Senate is in executive session.

After one hour and thirty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. H. REAGAN of Texas, Mr. J. E. KENNA of West Virginia, and Mr. J. A. HUBBELL of Michigan, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 1st instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 19) for the relief of Captain James M. Beeber;

An act (S. No. 290) for the relief of James D. Holman;

An act (S. No. 401) for the relief of Charles H. Mosely;

An act (S. No. 713) for the relief of Martin Clark;

An act (S. No. 852) granting a pension to Mary E. Pauley;

An act (S. No. 1265) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to Jacob A. T. Wendell, Henry Van Allen, and John R. Bailey a part of the military reservation of Fort Mackinac;

An act (S. No. 1365) to place Lewis Leffman, ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list;

An act (S. No. 1475) for the relief of the sureties, &c., of Samuel M. Reynolds, late additional paymaster of United States volunteers; and

An act (S. No. 1763) for the relief of Albert U. Wyman, late Treasurer of the United States.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the river and harbor appropriation bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the thing read before that is done. I wish to see just what it is that we have before us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the action of the House.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 1, 1879.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Ordered, That Mr. REAGAN, Mr. KENNA, and Mr. HUBBELL be managers of said conference on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives? To this the Chair hears no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SPENCER, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

SCHOONER DON PEDRO.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 2518. I will state in a few minutes what there is in the bill, and then the Senate can vote upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not well enough to remain in the Senate to-day. I merely want to dispose of the census bill. I trust there will be no interference.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let this be disposed of. It is the only thing I shall ask of the Senate, and it will not take five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill indicated by him.

Mr. SARGENT. Laying aside the regular order temporarily.

Mr. HAMLIN. Temporarily.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Maine if he will yield to me one moment in order that I may ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4579, so that I may move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and grant the committee of conference asked for by the House?

Mr. HAMLIN. If my friend will reflect a moment he will see that is just what I am asking the Senate to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the bill called for by the Senator from Maine.

The bill (H. R. No. 2518) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the schooner Don Pedro was read; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The House report was reported back with the bill by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, if we cannot have a Senate report, let us take a House report.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is the Senate committee's report. The committee adopted it.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, March 27, 1878:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Don Pedro, by reference of said claim to the Court of Claims, find the following facts:

The schooner Don Pedro, a vessel of about ninety-seven tons burden, sailed from Boston for Saint John, with a general cargo, in July, 1877. At about midnight, the United States revenue-cutter U. S. Grant hove in sight, heading apparently directly for the schooner, and, without changing her course at all, struck the schooner just forward of her fore chains, cut her down to the water line, and sunk her at once. The officers and men on the schooner claim that they took every precaution, complied with all the requirements of the law; and the owners allege that their vessel was destroyed by the neglect of the cutter, and in utter disregard of the law. Your committee believe these owners entitled to a remedy in law. They find that in a similar case, that of the Ada A. Andrews, sunk by the Ticonderoga, the claimants were sent to the Court of Claims. (See chap. 418, Laws 1873.) They recommend the same action in this case, and to that end the enactment of the bill referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I guess I shall not object under the circumstances.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust Senators will not ask me to yield. I merely desire to dispose of the census bill. On account of a sudden cold, I am not well enough to remain in the Senate to-day.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. No. 1655) to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state that these amendments have been once read in the Senate, all except a portion of the last one, I think, and now the select committee on the tenth census recommend that the Senate shall agree to all the amendments. If there is no objection, I should like to have the question taken on the amendments in gross.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me in order to ask for the appointment of a committee of conference?

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator will allow us to get through with this bill. We can get through in five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to this bill?

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, as between the bill as it left the Senate and as it came back from the House, I think there is a choice in favor of the action of the House. I wish, however, to say for my self that having called attention to this subject once or twice, feeling that I have sufficiently discharged my duty in regard to it, I shall now content myself with making one or two very brief observations.

I wish to record a prediction that this census bill, beside being objectionable in other respects, will cost more than twice the sum of money of which we have heard. I am willing to hazard my reputation as a prophet by predicting that it will cost seven or eight million dollars, more than one-half of which I believe will be unnecessarily expended. In addition to that, it deposits a discretion with somebody which I deem unsafe and unwholesome.

If I wanted an illustration of this I could find it in a letter written by one of the persons likely to be assigned to this duty, in which advising the discretionary power to dispense with schedules and parts of schedules, he takes up beeswax for example, and honey, as matters about which no inquiry should be made. I speak of these because my honorable friend from California [Mr. SARGENT] sits here. He knows better than I do the export of his State in the matter of honey alone; it is not only striking but amazing; and that production is one of those selected as something of which no account should be taken in this attempt to throw a drag-net of inquiry over all the industries of the country worthy of mention. It indicates to my mind the unsafety of permitting any individual, however instructed, to determine for himself upon what subjects inquiry shall and shall not be made. I think the law-making power should prescribe the schedule of inquiry, the topics to be ascertained; and this one product to which I have referred, instructively, I think, illustrates the wisdom of so prescribing.

But, Mr. President, having said that I think this bill should be and ought to be improved, and having said that I believe it will be a needlessly costly proceeding, I feel that I have sufficiently discharged any duty which may be supposed to rest upon me, and if the Senate thinks that a year before there is occasion for any such legislation it is worth while in haste and in heat to adopt this measure so be it; I shall vote against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the several amendments made by the House of Representatives? The amendments were concurred in.

DISTRICT STREET RAILROADS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate insist on its amendments and grant the committee of conference asked for by the House of Representatives? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT being by unanimous consent authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. ROLLINS, and Mr. MERRIMON were appointed.

BLIND PENSIONERS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think there will be unanimous consent to take up a bill, to which there cannot be any objection, for the relief of soldiers and sailors becoming totally blind in the service of their country. The law as it now stands provides that a person who has lost both eyes in the service of the country shall receive a particular class of pension. The Pension Office has construed that law so that if a person had but one eye when he went into the service, and lost the other eye in the service, he cannot get the pension. The bill on which I ask action has been passed by the House of Representatives. It is very clear that if a person entered the service who had but one eye and then lost the other he is totally disabled. I should be glad if the bill could be taken up now and passed. I have the authority of the Committee on Pensions for calling it up.

Mr. VÖORHEES. It is eminently just and right.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I inquire of the Senator whether the bill is on the Calendar?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes; it has been on the Calendar for some days, and was forgotten the other evening.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6242) for the relief of soldiers and sailors becoming totally blind in the service of the country. It construes the act of June 17, 1878, entitled "An act to increase the pensions of certain soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both eyes in the service of the country," so as to include all soldiers and sailors who have become totally blind from causes occurring in the service of the United States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, after the words "totally blind," to insert the words "or so totally disabled as to require the attendance and assistance of another person."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment, because if we amend the bill at all it will have to go back to the House. Another law can be passed on the subject. I am satisfied the chairman of the Committee on Pensions will not insist on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH B. COLLINS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 6270, for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, which will only occupy a few minutes.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have a report from the Committee on Claims of a bill for the payment of quartermasters' accounts, which ought to be disposed of. There is a large number of those accounts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Minnesota afterward. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks the Senate to consider at this time the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6270) for the relief of Joseph B. Collins. It authorizes the President to reinstate Major Joseph B. Collins, late of the United States Army, and to retire him in that grade as of the date he was previously mustered out, charging him with all extra pay and allowances paid him at that time.

Mr. SARGENT. Let the report be read, or the substance of it stated by the Senator who reported the bill.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to state the substance of it?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We had better have the report read.

Mr. HOWE. Joseph B. Collins entered the Army as a private. For gallantry during the Mexican war he was promoted to a lieutenancy. He served during that war. He served in the Army until the close of the rebellion. He had risen to the rank of major, I believe. During the process of consolidation he was, in the judgment of all military lawyers in violation of law, pressed out of the service. He had been wounded twice, and educationally and physically he was unfitted for any other business, and he was left with a family on his hands. This bill proposes to restore him and retire him. It was in violation of law, as I believe, and as other better lawyers than I am believe, and as the committee believe, that he was squeezed out of the Army in the first instance.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw any objection to the bill.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said the bill proposes to restore him. In what mode is that accomplished?

Mr. HOWE. And to retire him. The bill was drawn by the Military Committee.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill as follows:

That the President be, and he is hereby authorized to reinstate—

Mr. HOAR. That is all I want to know.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR QUARTERMASTERS' STORES.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Committee on Claims have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, and for other purposes. They have made certain amendments thereto, and instruct me to report it back with the recommendation that the bill be passed as amended. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. HILL. Will it take any time?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; I think not. It is the usual bill to cover accounts coming from the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. MERRIMON. What is it about?

Mr. McMILLAN. It contains the claims allowed by the Quartermaster-General and passed upon by the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller of the Treasury. It involves a large number of accounts for quartermasters' stores.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the Secretary read the amendments only?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am satisfied.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that the bill be read through. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) Does the Senator desire the House bill to be read or the amendments of the Senate committee?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that it is a bill to be passed, and that it never has been read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been "read twice and referred to the Committee on Claims."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is not the report of a conference committee?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill consists of lists of names and sums. It will be read of course if any Senator desires it. It is a bill for the payment of the southern claims which have been allowed by the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not object to the bill; I am rather in favor of it; but I am opposed to having any bill passed without having it read at the desk; I think it a dangerous practice. Every bill ought to be read. Otherwise we do not know what we are voting on, and it is a practice that ought not to be allowed.

Mr. McMILLAN. If Senators would only listen to the bill when it is read, there would be more occasion for its reading.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Minnesota has no right to say that a Senator must listen to a bill. Any Senator has a right to ask to have it read, and then he listens as he pleases.

Mr. McMILLAN. I did not say that Senators must listen, but that they should know the contents of a bill that is passed, and it may not be always necessary to have it read at the desk for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is not debatable. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that this bill may be laid aside, that I may make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the right of the Senator from Minnesota under the rules.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5231) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to report, and do report, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2, with an amendment striking out in line 11, page 1 of the bill, the words "Gatling and other;" and that the House agree to the same.

WM. WINDOM,
S. W. DORSEY,
W. A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN H. BAKER,
WM. A. J. SPARKS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill as it came from the House appropriated $100,000 for the preservation and repair of fortifications and other works. The Senate increased the amount to $200,000. The report of the conference is a recession on the part of the Senate from its amendment to the item:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, &c., and "for Gatling and other machine guns, $125,000."

The Committee on Appropriations and the Senate thought the amount ought to be increased to $250,000; but the committee of conference on the part of the Senate were unable to procure an agreement to that amendment, and they have recommended a recession from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference?

The report was concurred in.

CLAIMS FOR QUARTERMASTERS' STORES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, and for other purposes.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the Senate may consent perhaps to having the amendments read merely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the names and sums contained in the bill be omitted in the reading except as to the amendments proposed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, as follows:

On page 5, line 90, at the end of the line, add "and fifty cents."
On page 9, line 197, for the letter "L" substitute "S."
On page 10, line 216, after the word "Francis," insert "A."
On page 10, lines 222 and 223, strike out the word "Sagerson," where it occurs, and insert "Sagerser."
On page 12, line 273, strike out the word "Mary" and insert "Margaret."
On page 12, line 274, at the end of the line, add "and fifty cents."
On page 14, line 331, strike out the word "Eavery" and insert "Eavey."
On page 20, between lines 476 and 477, insert "To Josiah Toms, $135."
On page 23, line 662, strike out "Brown" and insert "Bown."
On page 31, at end of the line 730, insert "deceased."
On page 31, between lines 748 and 749, insert "To Albert Gardner, $110."
On page 34, line 904, strike out the word "Rondebush" and insert "Rondebush."
On page 42, line 1018, strike out the word "Lydig" and insert "Lydia."
On page 46, line 1100, strike out the letters "J. W. L." and insert "W. L. J."
On page 49, line 1185, strike out the letter "A" and insert "H."
On page 51, line 1228, strike out the word "Hines" and insert "Hinds."
On page 55, line 1334, add "and fifty cents."
On page 60, line 1458, after the word "William" insert "A."
On page 61, line 1470, strike out "administrator" and insert "widow."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH L. STEVENS.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 1837.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that another bill of a similar character to the one just acted on be taken up, which I also desire to have passed.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1837) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens, postmaster at Manchester, New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper officers of the Post-Office Department to credit, in the account of Joseph L. Stevens, postmaster at Manchester, New Hampshire, $3,285, being the value of certain postage-stamps which were stolen from the safe in that post-office on or about the 16th of June, 1877, without the fault or negligence of the postmaster.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NARRATIVE OF THE POLARIS EXPEDITION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask that a message be sent to the House requesting the return to the Senate of a concurrent resolution passed by the Senate for printing copies of the Narrative of the Polaris Expedition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to having this message sent to the House requesting the return of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

POWELL'S REPORT ON ARID REGIONS.

Mr. PADDOCK. Some days ago I interposed an objection to the consideration of a resolution which came from the Committee on Printing authorizing the printing of the report of Major Powell upon the arid region of the United States. That objection is now withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection to the passage of the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives reported from the Committee on Printing being withdrawn, is it the pleasure of the Senate to consider the resolution at the present time?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report on the lands of the arid region of the United States, by J. W. Powell; 1,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask to have passed a joint resolution authorizing the employés of the Senate and House to receive thirty days' compensation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought we had passed that.

Mr. SARGENT. It passed the Senate in the deficiency bill and failed. A resolution of the same kind was offered by the Senator from Delaware. This has been modified to meet the views of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] who is in favor of allowing thirty days, but not in favor of sixty days.

Mr. BAYARD. I accept the amendment the Senator from California now proposes to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read first.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have yesterday and to-day objected to a similar resolution, but paying sixty days' compensation instead of thirty as this provides. Under the same circumstances I should object again, but I am assured by the members of the Committee on Appropriations on the conference that the thirty days' provision failed in the deficiency bill, and in the legislative bill it has also been stricken out. I am in favor, and I was when I made the objection, and expect always to be willing that thirty days' compensation should be paid each employé. I think that right; but I think that sixty days' compensation or double pay is radically wrong. Had it not been that I am assured by those on the committee of conference that that provision has been stricken from both the bills, I should of course object to this joint resolution, but the Senator from California says that this is to be in full, and with the understanding that thirty days' pay is all that is to be allowed under any circumstances, I agree to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from California proposes the resolution he now offers as a substitute for the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; let this be substituted for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I reserve objection until we hear what the substitute is.

Mr. SARGENT. It is the one just reported, providing for thirty days' compensation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from California said he offered a substitute.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Delaware introduced the joint resolution last night, to which the second reading was objected, and the objection was made because it provided for sixty days, which I do not believe in. I have offered this substitute which provides for thirty days, and under this resolution they will receive no other pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator's use of the word "substitute" misled me. It is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California to the joint resolution will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 8 it is proposed to strike out "sixty" and insert "thirty," and at the end to add the words "and they shall receive no other compensation for said time than that herein provided;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to pay all committee clerks, pages, messengers, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives who do not receive annual salaries their present rate of compensation respectively for thirty days from the date of the adjournment of this Congress; and the money required to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available: And further, The provisions of this resolution shall apply to the persons holding their respective positions at the date of its approval, and they shall receive no compensation for said time than that herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to state again that it is the understanding that this is only pay for the thirty days.

Mr. BAYARD. That was stated, and is in the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand it so, but I want to have it perfectly understood.

Mr. SARGENT. That is my understanding.

The joint resolution was passed.

H. T. BURROWS

Mr. McDONALD. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution and to have it considered at this time.

Mr. McMILLAN. If it will not occupy time I will yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be reported for information.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 72) for the relief of H. T. Burrows was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator from Indiana to explain exactly what this means?

Mr. McDONALD. It means exactly this: some nine months since Mr. Burrows was placed on the roll as a special messenger. On the appointment of Mr. Bullock as consul at Cologne, Mr. Burrows was placed by the Sergeant-at-Arms on the messengers' roll and has been discharging special messenger duty ever since, but the Sergeant-at-Arms has only been able to pay him laborer's wages, which he has received and which is to be deducted from the amount of pay he should have received as a messenger. It simply gives him the wages that he has earned as a special messenger and nothing more. The amendment was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and it was by them reported favorably and put into the deficiency bill, but it being in conflict with some rules the House had adopted on that subject it was stricken out in conference. This is simply to restore it and give Mr. Burrows the pay he has earned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the only difficulty that I know of about this affair is that I think I know that there are other persons who are in substantially the same category, and if this be just, which I do not deny, (I do not know anything about it,) then these other persons ought to be provided for. There is a very competent person who has been acting as messenger all the time to the Committee on the Judiciary who I understand does not receive messenger's pay. I do not know whether he gets the pay of a laborer or of some other intermediate employment; but a constant and competent person performing the full duties of a messenger all the time, night and day, and with great faithfulness, who I have the best reason for believing does not get the pay of a messenger. My only point is to treat all these persons who have performed higher duties than the Sergeant-at-Arms has been able to pay them for exactly alike, which of course is just.

Mr. McDONALD. I am very willing to do that. I know that this case is just, and I have no doubt the case to which the Senator refers is equally meritorious.

Mr. MATTHEWS. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, in connection with what has just been stated by the Senator from Vermont, I desire to call his attention to the fact that the case of another employé by the name of R. A. Birchett was also provided for in the deficiency bill and stands upon the exact circumstances of those of Mr. Burrows provided for in this joint resolution, and it would be exceedingly inequitable to provide for Mr. Burrows without providing for Mr. Birchett.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont will offer an amendment to the joint resolution covering these cases, I shall be perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to get at the exact facts before I offer it, and for the moment I will object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I will withdraw it by and by when I ascertain exactly what the state of the thing is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont consent to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Vermont does not; he objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects. The resolution is not before the Senate.

Mr. McDONALD. He objects for the present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the present; but that is enough for the present.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator from Vermont withdraw his objection one moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say to the Senate that there are cases other than messengers. There are daily laborers, who have been employed in this body, who have rendered their services, and when the time of payment came they did not receive the compensation to which they were entitled. I wish to take care of the laborer as well as the messenger, who may be regarded as one grade above him. Indeed they are the most worthy, as they get the least sum and do the hardest work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont insists upon his objection, and the joint resolution is not before the Senate.

CLAIMS FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6362) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof. This bill has been partially considered by the Senate and it was interrupted by the lapse of the period appropriated to the morning hour.

By unanimous consent, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed at the Clerk's desk that the bill which is now called up was reported by the Committee of the Whole to the Senate on a former day.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it was read through and reported by the Committee of the Whole to the Senate. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMILLAN. There was an amendment reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reserved will be reported.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, rejected the amendment of the Committee on Claims, striking out, after line 485, the following clause:

To E. T. Eggleston, executor of Sophia A. Fox, deceased, $6,874.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment was disagreed to in Committee of the Whole, and it is moved, as the Chair understands, by the Senator from Minnesota in the Senate.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is interested in this amendment. I do not see him in his seat now. The amendment made by the Committee on Claims was to strike out this claim from the House bill. The facts of the case are that this claim was presented to the commissioners, amounting to $11,000 and upward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will pause. The Chair will state the question again. It was proposed by the Committee on Claims to amend this bill by striking out the paragraph read. That amendment was disagreed to in Committee of the Whole, and so the paragraph stands in the bill as reported to the Senate. The Senator from Minnesota now moves to strike out that paragraph. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. McMILLAN. This amendment was voted upon in Committee of the Whole, and when the bill came into the Senate I reserved it as an amendment for a separate vote, and I ask the Chair to state the question now under that state of facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question again. The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims was to strike out a certain paragraph contained in the bill as it came from the House. That amendment was disagreed to in Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole therefore ordered the bill to be reported to the Senate with that paragraph standing as a part of the text of the original bill. The question now is upon the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. McMILLAN. This claim was stricken out by the Committee on Claims of the Senate, because the commissioners never allowed this portion of the claim originally. The claim presented to the commissioners amounted to $11,000 and upward. The commissioners allowed between $4,000 and $5,000 of the claim, and disallowed the balance in 1876. That was reported at that time to the House of Representatives, and the House of Representatives inserted the amount of the claim then allowed by the commissioners, to wit, $4,000 and upward, and that amount has been paid. At this session of Congress, the House of Representatives insert the balance of that claim, which had been disallowed by the commissioners, as a claim in this bill.

In the mean time, or at the time the commissioners had passed upon it, the statute of limitations had run against the debts of the estates of these persons, so that the creditors are barred of their claims by the statute of limitations insisted upon by these people, and they come in now and ask that this amount which was passed upon by the commissioners of claims and disallowed shall be allowed by the Congress of the United States without any further examination. Under that state of facts, I do not see how the Senate can allow this claim. There has been no allowance of it by the commissioners, and we are only to allow in this bill claims that have been allowed by the commissioners of claims.

Mr. HARRIS. In order that the Senate may not arrive at a wrong conclusion upon the statement of the honorable chairman of the committee, while the statement which he makes is literally true, yet I think it is calculated to mislead. The original claimant in this case was a Mrs. Fox, and the commissioners found that Mrs. Fox, the original claimant, was loyal and that the claim was justly due to the amount of eleven thousand and some odd dollars. But pending the investigation Mrs. Fox died, leaving a will. The commissioners finding that one, two, or more of the devisees, I do not know the number, were loyal, undertook to distribute the fund. They do not award it to the personal representative, the executor who had a right to it. The commissioners having found that the $11,000 was due to Mrs. Fox, and the commissioners having found that Mrs. Fox was loyal and entitled to receive it, she having died subsequently, they undertook to distribute the fund, not through the personal representative, not through the executor of the will, but by their own order to distribute, the thing that the administrator or personal representative ought to have done.

The commissioners undertaking to distribute the fund, they then undertook to inquire into the question of the loyalty of the devisees, the heirs of Mrs. Fox, the objects of her bounty. The proof being satisfactory as to the loyalty of some one or two of those devisees, they did order and pay, not to the personal representative, but to these devisees under the will, some four or five thousand dollars. But there was $6,000 of the amount that the commissioners found justly due the estate of Mrs. Fox which remained unpaid, and unpaid because the commissioners say that these devisees have not furnished proof that was satisfactory as to their loyalty to the Government. That is the whole question in the case. For one I thought in committee, as I think upon this floor, that the balance ought to be paid and it ought to be paid under the will of Mrs. Fox, whose loyalty was abundantly and clearly proved, and whose rights were established by the judgment of the commission.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, I shall add but one or two words to the statement already submitted by the Senator from Tennessee, and I shall do so simply from the fact that this objection was urged when this matter was before the Senate a few days ago. The point to which I wish to call the attention of Senators is that the result of the decision of the commissioners is to work a confiscation of the estate of a loyal person, a person adjudged to be loyal, merely by the accident of death. I wish to call the attention of Senators to that simple fact. Mrs. Fox filed a petition for the recovery of this money.

Mr. BAYARD. When?

Mr. LAMAR. In 1870, I think. She was adjudged by the tribunal to be loyal. Her claim was adjudged to be valid; $11,000 was found to be due to her and her estate. In 1873 Mrs. Fox died, leaving a will, in which she bequeathed her estate to certain persons then living in Warren County, Mississippi. The commissioners, after having adjudged the claim valid, awarded $4,000 to a minor child on account of its tender years, and refused to recommend the payment of $6,000 of this claim thus adjudged to be well founded to the other two beneficiaries of the estate, upon the ground that their loyalty during the war was not established to the satisfaction of the tribunal.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator when their title accrued?

Mr. LAMAR. Their title accrued in 1873, under the will. The whole ground is that the devisees or legatees of an estate cannot take property devolving upon them on account of a want of established loyalty before their title ever accrued. The title of these devisees accrued seven years after the expiration of the war.

Mr. MITCHELL. Were they minors also during the war?

Mr. LAMAR. I will come to that point. These persons whose loyalty was not established to the satisfaction of the commission are two aged women, utterly impoverished, dependent for a support upon this meager amount. They are not charged with disloyalty; they are not charged with giving aid and comfort, but simply their affirmative loyalty is not established to the satisfaction of the commission, a loyalty that was supposed not to exist seven or eight years before their title accrued under this will. In other words, the ground is that the mere fact of a want of loyalty works an incapacity in a loyal citizen to devise her estate away. It is a monstrous doctrine.

The Senator states that claims against this estate have been barred by the statute of limitations, and that therefore these beneficiaries can get money which would otherwise have gone to the payment of the creditors. That may be true; perhaps it is, but it is no fault of the beneficiaries under the will. They could not control that matter. The petition was filed; the judgment was pronounced; the award was made; and immediately after the award, at the very next session of Congress, a bill was filed for their relief; and it is owing to the delay of Congress, for justifiable reasons no doubt, that the time has elapsed which has barred claims against the estate, thus allowing these aged women in the evening of their days to get this pittance. I am glad if it be so that the statute of limitation did apply. It was a humane and beneficial and benignant operation of that statute in one case at least.

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill under consideration is one embracing claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof. This entire claim was presented by the commissioners of claims in 1876. It was at that time passed upon by the commissioners of claims; they allowed a portion of it and disallowed the balance of it. The portion allowed was at that time inserted in the regular bill and passed Congress, and has been paid. No action was taken upon the balance of the claim at that time by Congress, and it has remained without action, and we are now called upon to insert it in the act embracing a large number of claims allowed by the commissioners, and this one disallowed without being referred back to the commissioners of claims and without any examination of the case except that given by the Senator from Mississippi, as stated upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Would not that of itself be satisfactory to the Senators? Granting the facts to be, as we do not doubt they are, as stated by the honorable Senator from Mississippi, does it not make a clear case that these ladies ought to be paid?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is reversing the decision of the commissioners under circumstances in which I am not willing to act, under circumstances where if we did not allow that claim, or if the bill should be defeated on that account it would interfere with all the other claimants in this bill, so that we have not an opportunity of fairly considering the question, and it does not properly come within the bill because it is not a claim allowed by the commissioners, and this is a bill which should embrace only claims of that character.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it not a fact that from the commissioners there is a judgment establishing the original testatrix's right to the $11,000; and is not the question here a mere matter as to the distribution of that to certain devisees?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir; the commissioners have disallowed the amount embraced in this bill; they have passed upon certain facts.

Mr. BAYARD. But as I understand the fact, it was judicially established that the testatrix was loyal and was entitled to a certain sum, $11,000; a decree was made distributing a portion of that, and then a decree was made refusing to distribute the rest of it; but the great fact was whether the sum was due to her and whether she was a person entitled to receive it from the Treasury. Both of these points being answered in the affirmative, the whole question becomes a matter of the distribution of the amount.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the Senator allow me one moment in order that I may be able to understand the matter? The statement of facts does not agree. The Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Tennessee understand that the claims commission have passed upon this whole claim and allowed the whole amount of it.

Mr. LAMAR. Will the Senator allow me to explain exactly how it was? The commission adjudged the claimant to be loyal. The claimant died pending the suit, after it was begun, and before judgment was pronounced. They adjudged her claim to be valid for $11,000, and they recommended that there be paid $4,000 to a minor child on account of its tender years; but while they adjudged the claim to be valid, while they found in favor of the claimant, they declined to recommend the payment of $6,000 to certain persons to whom the deviser of the estate, that is the claimant herself, who died, had long before bequeathed it. In 1873 we find a presumed want of loyalty in 1861; in other words, that a loyal citizen could not convey her property to a disloyal one.

Mr. McMILLAN. This is a claim made by certain persons whom the commissioners declare to have been disloyal. They could not have been disloyal except from 1861 to 1865.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand that the original claimant, the person who made the claim originally, established the justice of her claim and established her loyalty.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Having done that, she died, and the commissioners admitted both the loyalty of the claimant and the amount of the claim, but did not pay all of it, because the property would go to some persons who were not loyal. I do not think that is fair.

Mr. McMILLAN. It came within the rule which the commissioners have established, not only in this case but in all similar cases.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question regarding the same point that the honorable Senator on my right was upon. I desire that there should be no misunderstanding as to the matter of fact between the honorable Senator and myself. I imagine we agree perfectly in the fact that the commissioners found that eleven thousand and some odd hundred dollars were justly due Mrs. Fox, the original claimant, and that they found that her loyalty was sufficiently and satisfactorily established; that they paid four thousand and some odd hundred dollars because they were satisfied that one of the devisees of Mrs. Fox was loyal, but they withheld the balance because of want of proof of loyalty of the others. That is the whole case.

Mr. McMILLAN. The commissioners of claims have uniformly, I believe, in the determination of cases before them, followed the rule that where the claim was in favor of an estate of a deceased person, they would apportion the claim. If there were any number of the heirs or legatees who had been disloyal, they refused to allow such portions of the amount and distributed the claim themselves, allowing to the loyal and disallowing the claim of the disloyal. In this case they found that the amount withheld was to go to disloyal persons, and they deducted from the claim that amount. It will be remembered that the question presented here is not as between the legatees under the will and the estate, but that it is a claim of these persons who claim to be legatees of Sophia Fox against the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States has enacted that no claim shall be allowed to a disloyal person. These persons, disloyal, found to be so by the commissioners, come to the Government and present their claim. This is for personal property.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to interrupt him with an inquiry? Do I not understand that notwithstanding the supposed disloyalty of the present claimants, nevertheless they do not claim in their own right originally against the United States, but by virtue of a claimant the amount of whose claim, the justice of whose claim, and the character of the claimant, were established by the judgment of this commission?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is the fact. They have sustained the loyalty of the testatrix.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Then, do I understand that the committee are of opinion that a claim originally good by reason of the loyalty of the claimant becomes bad by its devolution, by reason of a will or a transfer or conveyance or assignment? If so, what is the value of loyalty as a ground of original claim?

Mr. McMILLAN. The Committee on Claims have expressed no opinion on that subject. They find a decision by the commissioners of claims. They find that they have pursued a uniform course in regard to the matter. They find here that the commissioners, in pursuance of their rule, have disallowed a certain claim, and that the House of Representatives have inserted that amount in a bill which the act of Congress authorized the House of Representatives to frame, namely, a bill embracing claims allowed by the commissioners of claims. It is very evident that if these parties wish to obtain their right they should resort to a special law for that purpose, for this balance, whatever it is, may be allowed by special act of Congress, and it should not be introduced as a claim allowed into this bill. The act of Congress did not provide for the allowance of claims that have been disallowed by the commissioners of claims, but for the claims which have been allowed by them; and to present the question on this bill presents it under circumstances where great injustice would be done to other claimants and great wrong would be done to the Government of the United States. This question should be presented upon a special act for the relief of those parties. It is not a claim which has been allowed and therefore inserted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Was not the amount of eleven thousand and some hundred dollars admitted to be due to Mrs. Fox's estate?

Mr. McMILLAN. I will read from the report of the commissioners. The total value of the supplies is $11,748.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That amount, I understand, was ascertained to be due to the estate of Mrs. Fox?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is as I understand the fact.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then the commissioners made an allowance to one person on account of her tender years of a little over $4,000, and as to the balance of the claim which was allowed to the estate of Mrs. Fox, it is not disposed of.

Mr. McMILLAN. It has been disallowed by the commissioners.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Has it been disposed of? I understood the Senator to say there was an amount of eleven thousand and odd hundred dollars estimated to be due to the estate of Mrs. Fox? Is that true?

Mr. McMILLAN. That was the amount of the claim of Mrs. Fox in her life-time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If Mrs. Fox had lived, would that amount have been paid to her?

Mr. McMILLAN. As I understand, it would have been paid to her.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then there has been some four thousand and odd hundred dollars allowed out of that to one of tender years. Then I understand this case to be that three ladies claim to be the devisees or heirs at law, I do not know which, of Mrs. Fox, and the claim of two of them is resisted on the ground of disloyalty, if I understand this case.

I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the Senator, if he is not through, but I wish to express myself in reference to that matter. I wish to say that I am utterly surprised and amazed that the charge of disloyalty should be raised against two aged women, as I understand these ladies are, long subsequent to the war, and interposed to prevent their taking an estate which fell to them from a deceased relative. I am surprised, I say, that such objection should be made in the Senate of the United States. I once heard, while I was upon the Committee on Pensions, an objection of disloyalty raised against the widow of a revolutionary soldier, but when it came up before the Senate of the United States that objection was dispelled. The war of the Revolution had been over for nearly a century, and yet that was interposed because the widow of some revolutionary soldier had said during the pendency of the war that she believed she would rather live under King George than the Continental Congress; but when it came before the Senate they would not admit that that was any ground to deprive this lady of her right, and her pension was allowed to her.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware, and other Senators who have uttered sentiments in conformity with his, to the precise point. It is not a question of the validity of this claim. Here is a bill which contains a list of claims which have been allowed by the commissioners of claims. There are thousands of claims in the bill—more than a thousand undoubtedly, I do not know exactly how many. The committee takes a bill and looks to see whether it agrees with the judgment of the commission and looking far enough into the transaction to see whether the tribunal had jurisdiction over it, and that is all. On the faith of that simple examination alone the Senate passes a bill which is for the relief of a great many hundred persons. Now, we do not undertake to reverse the decisions of the commissioners of claims; we do not undertake to inquire into the justice of their decision in the least; we only undertake to see whether they have decided and whether they had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and there we stop. If anybody thinks their decision wrong or if anybody thinks there is a claim over which they had not jurisdiction, the claimant comes to the Senate for a private bill, the committee examine his private claim, and go into it and prepare themselves to tell the Senate in regard to every question of fact and every question of law that the Senate wants to know about it, and that is the function of the Committee on Claims.

Now, this particular claimant comes in and says, "I want you to depart from that rule," a rule which saves the Senate weeks and months of time, because if it is going into the merits of these other cases on this bill it would take weeks and months, and it could do nothing else; it must sit here all the year round for that. Now, this claimant comes in and says that three years ago, not in the year to which this bill relates, the southern claims commission disallowed her claim because they proceeded under the erroneous rule that a claim due to a loyal claimant who has died should not be permitted to pass to disloyal heirs. That is the precise point.

Now I agree, as far as I am at present instructed, that the southern claims commission erred in that particular, that it is an unjust rule. The Senator from Mississippi cannot state it more strongly than I am at present prepared to say amen to, unless there is some reason I do not now think of. But upon this bill there are several names on every page where the commission have done that thing exactly, and in every similar bill there are such claims.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I had the floor, and was compelled to yield to a conference report.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am yielding to both Senators.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me out of his courtesy to finish this statement, I shall be obliged to him.

There are three or four such claims on every page. We ought, therefore, in justice to all these, to reverse the decision of the claims commission in all these cases. But there is another difficulty. These claimants not only ask the Senate to reverse the decision of the Court of Claims, and to do it on this bill instead of a private bill, but they ask the Senate on a mere statement to distribute this estate. They say that Mary Jones, who died five or three years ago, had a claim. Now, will the Senate enact that that claim shall go to two persons who the Senator from Mississippi says were next of kin? If we do that, we have got, in the first place, to cut up by the roots all consideration of whether there are creditors who ought to have been considered. The amendment ought at least to send it to the executor or administrator of the deceased to have it distributed by the courts of the State. I agree the Senator from Mississippi will make a very good answer on this point to this extent: he will say the southern claims commissioners said that these two ladies were next of kin, and for the very reason that they were disloyal next of kin did not give them this sum; but the rule which the establishment of this precedent will establish is that on this long bill we have got to go into that question in every case, not only give the claimants an allowance, but distribute the claims of those deceased.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Allow me a moment.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; and I beg the Senator to accept my hearty thanks for letting me interrupt him so long.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am a very amiable gentleman or certainly the Senator would not have been indulged.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Delaware is the most amiable gentleman within the sound of his own voice.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, may I ask the Senator from Delaware to be kind enough to yield to me?

Mr. McMILLAN. I believe I hold the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will ask the Senator from Minnesota to yield to me.

Mr. McMILLAN. For what purpose?

Mr. ALLISON. To make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The Senator from Iowa has a right to the floor for that purpose. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 22, and 23, and agree to the same, with amendments as follows:

As to 23, in lines 6 and 11 of amendment 20, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "one."

As to amendment 22, in line 5, strike out "40" and insert "15."

As to amendment 23, in line 4 of said amendment, strike out "30" and insert "20."

And the Senate agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 52, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Substitute for the matter stricken out the following: "And no clerk of the district or circuit courts of the United States or their deputies shall be appointed a receiver or a master in any case except where the judge of such court shall determine that special reasons exist therefor, to be assigned in the order of appointment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 59, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Correcting the spelling of the name of "Shepherd" so that it will read "Shepard."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 58, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Add after said amendment the following as a new paragraph:

"For the payment of the following named persons for reporting testimony before committees of the House of Representatives at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress at times when the official stenographers were engaged with other committees, namely: Joseph I. Gilbert, E. W. Grant, E. C. Bartlett, E. D. Easton, C. J. Hayes, and William F. Bonyng, $3,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary, on accounts to be rendered by them respectively, certified by the official stenographers for the committees of the House, and approved by the chairmen of the several committees for which the work was done, and by the Committee of Accounts. To pay Henry G. Hayes and Andrew Divine, official stenographers for committees of the House of Representatives, the difference between their compensation as fixed by law and that actually received by them during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and in the months of July and August, 1876, $900 each, $1,800. To pay J. C. Kondrus for services as messenger for official reporters of debates during the present session, $250."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 94, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment from the beginning down to and including the word "and" in line 4, and in line 8, after the word "intended," insert the word "hereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,

S. W. DORSEY,

W. A. WALLACE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,

W. A. J. SPARKS,

JOHN H. BAKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the present consideration of the report. I want to look at it first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw the report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; I do not want it withdrawn. I have a right to object to its consideration.

Mr. SARGENT. Let it lie on the table temporarily.

Mr. ALLISON. It can be withdrawn temporarily, that the Senator from Vermont may look at it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the report of a committee of conference is a matter of the highest privilege; which, when presented, is before the consideration of the Senate of right; but the Chair understands the Senator from Iowa to propose to lay the report on the table temporarily.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I entirely dissent from the ruling of the Chair; and I think if he will look at the rules of the Senate he will perceive that the rule of the House of Representatives has never prevailed here. The presentation of the report is privileged; but the question of its consideration falls under the other rules of the Senate, as has been universally understood and always acted upon in this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will read the forty-ninth rule:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except while the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and, when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report shall immediately be put, and shall be determined without debate.

The Chair's impression that it was before the Senate as of its own right is erroneous, founded on the practice; but it is also true that it is not taken from the consideration of the Senate by a single objection; and the question is on proceeding to the consideration of the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will depend, when the question is up.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the Senator examining this report if he desires to do so; but if he wishes any particular information I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not remember at this moment. I should be glad to look at it. If the Chair prefers to lay it before the Senate, of course it will only take an hour or two to look at it in debate here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no desire about it. The Chair only deferred to the experience of the Senator from Vermont, and desires to enforce the rules of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what the Senator from Vermont desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report?

Mr. SARGENT. I think there is unanimous consent that it lie temporarily on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that suggestion? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) releasing the reversionary claim and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in the State of Michigan.

CLAIMS FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6362) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. McMILLAN. The title of this bill indicates what it should embrace. It is an act making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof. The claim under consideration is one which has been disallowed by the commissioners and does not come within the title of the act; and the character of the bill indicates that the claim should not be embraced here. It embraces the claims allowed by the commissioners in a large number of cases; and to determine the question of a claim disallowed by the commissioners would involve the discussion of the merits of that claim, which is entirely improper upon a bill of this kind, and would lead, it seems to me, in most cases to great injustice. I submit the question now to the Senate, and ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. To retain the claim the vote will be "nay."

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I rise not to speak to this amendment but to avail myself of the opportunity to learn when in the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations it is necessary for us to come back here this evening. If, as I suppose, we can accomplish after a recess everything touching the appropriation bills that we can by remaining here, I wish to take the sense of the Senate, either at this moment or presently, upon a motion for a recess until half past eight o'clock or until some time which will enable us to get our dinners and return.

Mr. WINDOM. I know of no reason relating to the Committee on Appropriations that will require the Senate to be here before eight o'clock.

Mr. CONKLING. I think we had better say half past eight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from New York to make that motion?

Mr. CONKLING. I will in a moment, after seeing whether there be a preference with the chairman between eight and half past eight.

Mr. CONOVER. I will state that the President will be here at eight o'clock to attend to business.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator from New York will withhold his motion for a short time this bill can be disposed of and out of the way.

Mr. CONKLING. Without further debate?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the debate is closed.

Mr. CONKLING. If we can have a vote without debate, I will wait for that; but if we are to hear this amendment further talked over, I will test the sense of the Senate on the necessity of our staying here.

Mr. ROLLINS. I want to state to the Senate that there are quite a large number of bills relating to the affairs of the District of Columbia which ought to be considered, several of which have passed the House. We have been waiting day after day for their consideration and to ask the attention of the Senate to these bills. I think that some time should be allowed the Committee on the District of Columbia to take up these matters, which are of great importance, and dispose of them.

Mr. CONKLING. So do I.

Mr. ROLLINS. It will take but a short time.

Mr. CONKLING. But I do not think Senators are called upon to kill themselves, or to see how near they can come to doing it. If we are to come back here and sit, as I suppose, during the night, there should be some interval meanwhile. The Senator will get an opportunity while we are waiting for reports of agreements or disagreements by conference committees, to take up the District bills, and I will vote with him.

Mr. ROLLINS. I suggest that some time be fixed upon not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. KERNAN. We cannot do that now. There are bills affecting States and individuals of great importance. We will help the Senator to have part of the time, but I do not think he ought to ask for a special time.

Mr. CONKLING. If we can have a vote on this amendment, I will wait for it before submitting the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] to strike out the clause which has been read, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Chair please state the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] to strike from the bill the following lines on page 21:

To E. T. Eggleston, executor of Sophia A. Fox, deceased, $6,874.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] I cannot see that this is a political question at all, but I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I decline to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am bound to say to my honorable friend from Florida that I think, as the matter was left to me, that he has a perfect right to vote if he desires to do so.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Then I shall vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Dawes,	McMillan,	Teller.

Davis of W. Va.,	Morrill,	Sharon,

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] having examined the amendment he desired to examine on the deficiency bill, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa calls up the report of the committee of conference on the deficiency appropriation bill. The question is, will the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the conference committee is before the Senate. The report has been read.

The report was concurred in.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of that report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the matter lie for a moment.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made the report will lie on the table temporarily, to be called up by the Senator from Minnesota.

RECESS.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish now to take the sense of the Senate upon giving some relief to the members of the body. I move that the Senate do now take a recess until half past eight o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate take a recess until half past eight.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has left the Chamber, but requested me to say that he preferred eight o'clock.

Mr. CONKLING. Well, Mr. President, I will say eight o'clock although I think the difference is not very great.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York modifies the motion just made, and moves that the Senate now take a recess until eight o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at eight o'clock p. m.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there is no quorum present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That question being made by the Senator from Missouri, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is necessarily absent from the Senate to-night on account of ill health.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, (at eight o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) A quorum is now present.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the report of the conference committee on the sundry civil bill will be taken up and acted upon. It is very important that that bill should go to enrollment as soon as possible.

CENTENNIAL COMMISSION'S REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have received from the United States centennial commission their final report presenting a full exhibit of the result of the United States centennial celebration and exhibition of 1876, as required by the act of June 1, 1872.

In transmitting this report for the consideration of Congress I express, I believe, the general judgment of the country, as well as my own, in assigning to this exhibition a measure of success gratifying to the pride and patriotism of our people and full of promise to the great industrial and commercial interests of the nation. The very ample and generous contributions which the foreign nations made to the splendor and usefulness of the exhibition, and the cordiality with which their representatives took part in our national commemoration, deserve our profound acknowledgments. At this close of the great services rendered by the United States centennial commission and the centennial board of finance, it gives me great pleasure to commend to your attention and that of the people of the whole country the laborious, faithful, and prosperous performance of their duties which have marked the administration of their respective trusts.

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Add at the end of said amendment the following: "To pay H. W. Spofford the balance of salary due him as clerk to the Committee on the Census from May 13 to January 31, inclusive, $264."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same, with amendments as follows:

In lieu of the sums proposed in lines 1, 2, and 3 of said amendment, insert $1,632,098.78; in line 12 of said amendment, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one;" in line 15, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four;" in line 162, after the word "only," strike out down to and including the word "residence," in line 163, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "until the 30th day of June, A. D. 1880;" in line 366, strike out all after the word "dollars" down to and including the word "dollars" in line 367; in line 429, strike out the words "thirty thousand six hundred and thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five thousand;" in line 449, strike out the word "ninety" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seventy-five."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. WINDOM,
S. W. DORSEY,
H. G. DAVIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. D. C. ATKINS,
ABRAM S. HEWITT,
EUGENE HALE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have that part of the conference report relating to Senate amendment No. 41 read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 41, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of said amendment insert the following:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to lease the water-power at Moline, or such portion as may be agreed upon, to the Moline Water-Power Company, upon such terms and conditions and for such term of years as may be agreed upon, if the same can be done consistently with the interests of the Government of the United States, said lease to be made upon the condition that the said Moline Water-Power Company shall go on and complete the development of the water-power and maintain it at its own cost and expense.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment proposed by the Senate to the bill of the House in respect to this subject is as follows:

For completing the development of the water-power at the Rock Island arsenal, in pursuance of contracts made with the Moline Water-Power Company, $25,000.

I perceive that the conference committee, instead of confining itself to the questions of how much money should be appropriated to carry out the existing laws and contracts made in pursuance of them, has gone into a species of legislation providing for new arrangements in the discretion of the Secretary of War with what I assume is a State corporation, and for leasing this water-power for an indefinite period in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and upon such terms as he thinks it fit to agree to, subject to the engagement that the State corporation shall keep the water-power in repair.

I submit, Mr. President, although I know how hopeless it is, that the conference committee, on the part of the Senate, have in substance exceeded their powers; I do not say that they have in a technical sense; but the matter that was in dispute between the two Houses was simply, and that no doubt was a mere informal dispute, how much if any money ought to be appropriated from the Treasury to carry into effect the existing obligations of the United States, whether arising by force of law or by force of contracts made in pursuance of law; but they proceeded to enter into an entirely new scheme of legislation, conferring unlimited powers with one exception (and that merely the exception of requiring a promise or condition) upon one executive officer of the Government in respect of the disposition for an unlimited time in the same discretion of an important and as I must suppose necessary adjunct to the Rock Island arsenal, namely, the water-power that the United States at the expense, I believe, of millions of dollars has created.

Now, Mr. President, I should be glad to have the chairman of the conference committee explain to the Senate upon what principles of parliamentary propriety in the execution of the trust that was reposed in that committee, this thing has been done, and what exigency of public necessity it is that has imported into this bill, for the first time, and without any previous discussion so far as I know in either House—though I have no right to speak of the other—without any previous discussion so far as I know in this House on a subject of this importance,—a large delegation of discretion for the disposal of the property of the United States to this officer.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I do not know whether I can technically, to the full extent that will be required by the Senator from Vermont, defend that amendment or not. I want to say, with reference to that and one other amendment in the bill, that under the circumstances in which the committee were placed it is barely possible that the technical rule was not as strictly enforced as it might have been. I shall not attempt to say that it is, in the entire strictness with which the Senator would enforce it, in order. It may have been inadvertently admitted as in one other case to which I will call the attention of the Senate directly. I leave the matter entirely to the Senate. If the Senator from Vermont insists on the point of order, the bill may be lost.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should not mind much about that under existing circumstances. What I am chiefly desirous of ascertaining just now, if my honorable friend from Minnesota will listen to me,—and to whom

I know so much is due in the way of gratitude and respect for the enormous labor that at the very last hours of the session all these bills impose upon him—is what are the business necessities and arrangements and prospects and exigencies, in other words the whole state of the situation, that compelled our committee to assent (because I must suppose it was forced upon them by the other House) to this arrangement. I think the Senate ought to know what the necessity of it is, the grounds upon which it proceeded, and so on.

Mr. WINDOM. This is an old controversy that has existed a long while with reference to this Moline water-power, the Senate insisting upon making an appropriation and the conference committee on the part of the House this year insisting on making none. It was finally, upon consultation with the member from that district and the Senator from Illinois himself, I think, who is now before me, [Mr. DAVIS,] and I think also by an understanding with others who knew personally of the circumstances, this paper was agreed to and handed to the committee with the understanding that it would be a satisfactory adjustment. Seeing no harm in it and having so frequently heard of it, and thinking this would take us out of the difficulty, the committee did agree to it. I have no further defense to make.

I do not doubt that occasionally in technical matters, which the astute Senator from Vermont can discover in these long bills, some exceptions may be taken. I can assure him he will find nothing, however, to which he can make a substantial objection. I will not attempt technically to defend this. I think it was inadvertently admitted, so far as the technical rule is concerned, and if the Senator sees proper to appeal to the Senate upon that ground, I simply say that I will not attempt to defend that part, although in itself I think it is not wrong, nor in the other case to which I have referred and which I have discovered since the bill has been reported.

I can only say that the committee have done the very best that they could in the time limited. I do not know but that they have made a technical mistake. If so, they simply submit the bill to the Senate, and if there is anything wrong growing out of the mistake, the Senator will make the point of order. What will then become of the conference report I do not know. If in the judgment of the Senate this is a technical error, I do not know but that there will be time to get up another conference report on the bill. I certainly will do the very best I can to bring it to a vote if in the judgment of the Senate this is a technical violation of the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to acquit my honorable friend from Minnesota of any intentional dereliction of duty; but what I am after, and what I have failed to get so far, is a clear and definite statement of exactly how this case stands and why this provision that is now in the conference report that we have never heard of before ought to be there.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Moline Water-Power Company, on the application and request of the United States, deeded the water-power about Rock Island, which is necessary for all the works of the Government there, and the Government contracted with this company to develop that water-power and keep it up. That requires annual expenditures of money. One of the members of the conference committee of the other House, if it is proper to say so, is opposed, as I understand, to this thing entirely. He is opposed to the Rock Island arsenal; he is opposed to carrying out the contract of the Government there. I applied at the instance of the proper authorities for an appropriation of $75,000, which was necessary, in the opinion of the authorities, to do what the Government had engaged to do in reference to this matter. The Committee on Appropriations thought proper to reduce it to $25,000, in which the member representing the district in the other House, although not satisfied, acquiesced.

This same thing was gone over last year, and the committee of the House, dominated by a particular person, refused the appropriation of last year and refused the appropriation of this year, and, as I understand, he wants to get rid of the obligation of the Government in this matter, and he was willing that this provision should be inserted; but the member of the House from the district, to whom this was submitted, said that the proper way was to make an appropriation, and if he could not get anything else he would take this. In my judgment there should be no reconveyance of the water-power to the Moline Company at all; it is wanted and needed by the Government of the United States in the development of the great work which is going on there, and I do not think it ought to be leased to them, nor do I believe the Secretary of War will lease it to this company. I thought that the provision was a harmless one in that respect, and therefore, it having the assent of the member from the district, I remarked to the chairman of the committee that if the appropriation could not be obtained, to insert this, because it seemed to be satisfactory to the member from the district. The Government is bound to spend money enough there to develop that water-power and keep it up. They violate their contract every day with the Moline Water-Power Company, who conveyed them all the interest they had. They are powerless to do this, they cannot do it. It is the Government that must take the initiatory step; an appropriation is necessary for that purpose; but I do not want the bill to fail. I would rather the appropriation should fail than that the bill should fail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose it is my own fault, but my lack of information is almost as dense now as it was before. I should like my honorable friend from Illinois or somebody else to tell me one or two things if he knows them. The Senator has stated, and I have no doubt correctly, that the Moline Water-Power Company deeded this property to the United States. How much did they get for it?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator informs me that he does not know. Is there any member of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate that has agreed to this arrangement, who does know?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The contracts were before the deed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the conference committee does not know, then I suppose we must go without the information.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the amount of consideration the United States paid to the Moline Water-Power Company for the deed of this property that on some previous occasion has been conveyed to the United States for a consideration?

Mr. ALLISON. I have the contract here before me. I do not remember the amount paid. I want to say to the Senator from Vermont that I dislike quite as much as he does this arrangement of reconveying this water-power to the Moline Water-Power Company. The contract in terms provides that the United States Government shall hold this water-power and use a portion of it in perpetuity and maintain the remainder of it.

I should like to say one word further, as I am quite familiar, as is the Senator from Illinois, with the Rock Island arsenal. The Government of the United States did engage with this water-power company to develop the power, and they have developed it to a certain degree; but they have also improved the main channel of the Mississippi River, and by doing so have diverted water which properly belongs to the Moline Water-Power Company as I understand to the main channel, thus requiring an additional expenditure at this time for the purpose of maintaining sufficient water in its dam or race that is now used by various manufacturing companies. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations inserted $25,000 to remove these obstructions and open up this water-way; but, as has been said by the Senator from Illinois, there are people—I need not say where or who they are—who are determined that this Rock Island arsenal shall be destroyed. One of the reasons why an arsenal was fixed at Rock Island was that there is there a vast accumulation of water that may be utilized by the Government for the purposes of an arsenal. Of course if this water-power is reconveyed to the Moline Water-Power Company, the United States can use no portion of it, and when the United States shall cease to use the water-power an argument will be made, "Why have an arsenal on Rock Island?"

Therefore, Mr. President, although I have absolute confidence that the Secretary of War will not exercise this discretionary power conferred upon him, if it was in hostile hands I should regret exceedingly to see this Senate adopt the conference report which would enable the Secretary of War to deprive the Government of the United States of the great advantage of this water-power for all time to come. I regret exceedingly to see this provision in this bill, although I feel quite sure, as does the Senator from Illinois, that the present Secretary of War will not exercise the power conferred upon him in this bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senate will vote down the conference report and let a new committee be appointed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I have no objection to having it voted down on that point. I believe with the Senator from Iowa that it is the purpose of certain persons to destroy the arsenal at Rock Island.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Certain interests.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. And so of the armory at Springfield, Massachusetts. These interests want to have arms manufactured by private associations. I am opposed to that. There is no place in this country where a great work of this kind is better fixed than at Rock Island. The Government purchased this power because the agents of the Government believed it was necessary to the complete development of the plans there, and I believe that it is; but it is just as the Senator from Iowa says, that in the improvement of the main channel of the river there has been created an obstruction and the Moline Water-Power Company cannot get the necessary amount of water to which they are entitled to carry on their work. Moline is a place of ten thousand people; it is one of the most prosperous manufacturing places in the State of Illinois; and we cannot get through an appropriation of money enough for the Government to carry out its own contract. I do not believe that this power should be reconveyed to that company at all. I believe that it will become absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Government. Although I think this provision itself is harmless as it is because the Secretary of War will not make the lease, yet I have not the slightest objection to the proposition being cast out entirely.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that I am aware of the exact effect of this proposition. I desire to state, however, that I have had some experience in regard to this Moline Water-Power Company and the arsenal at Rock Island, and it is a matter of the utmost importance to the United States, as well as to the Moline Water-Power Company. If I understand it aright, the United States is dependent for all its water-power upon that company, and undertook a vast work upon Rock Island, which reflects great credit upon its projectors, and is of great consequence to the United States. But the United States is dependent upon a contract it made with the Moline Water-Power Company for its water.

A part of that contract, if I mistake not, is that the United States shall have power enough and still leave power for the Moline Water-Power Company, and that the United States shall develop this power. There always has been a great deal of difficulty in it; and while I cannot tell what is the purpose of the proposition now, I hesitate at any change made in the last hours of the session by law without the arrangement being mutual, because you may cut off the United States entirely from that which makes Rock Island worth anything to it as an arsenal, or you may so cramp and destroy the water-power of Moline that you will be obliged to make different arrangements. I think originally if the United States had not depended upon this water-power at all but had relied upon other power independent of it the United States would have been better off; but they have gone too far. They have expended $7,000,000 in that arsenal, and they cannot retrace their steps, and they do not desire to do it. They have a more valuable property there than any other nation in the world has for that purpose, and they cannot treat it in any other spirit than with the utmost care; and I suggest to the gentlemen who have charge of this conference report that there is nothing so necessary as to be very careful about that power. I know when I was upon another Committee on Appropriations we got into great difficulty in this same way and had to retrace our steps, undertaking by law to fix what should be done in the development of this water-power.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that the Senate of the United States, that is a perpetual body, will not feel itself coerced either by fear of losing this bill or the fear of being obliged to meet again, into taking a step that it believes to be against the public interest.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the state of this case. At the expense of $7,000,000, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, we have a great and important arsenal in the greatest and most growing region of the Republic, and we purchased and obtained a conveyance from the Moline Water Company, or whatever its name is, of a sufficient water right to carry on the manufacturing operations and necessities of this great work of ours, and own it. Of course the United States owns this water-power, its portion of it with the correlative duty which exists in all such cases of doing its share to keep it in order because of course where there is a single dam and different water rights, each owner must contribute in common to keep up the dam, and keep out the sand-bars and so on.

My honorable friend from Massachusetts states and states correctly that we have something more, a good deal more; I am only stating a part of the skeleton of the thing so as not to take up time, that the Senate may see its importance and the danger of this step it is proposed we are to take without information, without consideration, and in violation of the spirit and also I think of the letter (though at first I did not make that point) of the duty of a conference committee.

Now I ask the attention of the Senate to this brief provision, for it is brief, upon the subject of what becomes of the rights of the United States to this water-power if this amendment be agreed to, in the discretion of a single officer of the Government, who may be changed from day to day and from month to month by the accidents of life or disease and of all the other affairs that enter into the operations of official life. Now what is it?

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to lease the water-power at Moline, or such portion as may be agreed upon, to the Moline Water-Power Company—

To the very grantors from whom we bought it at a great expense, it is now proposed that we shall lease it back again, they having got our money and our consideration in various ways in the expenditure of it to build up the property, get it ready for use, and now it shall be handed back to them—upon such terms and conditions and for such term of years as may be agreed upon—

An absolutely indefinite delegation of power to a single officer of the Government to make a perpetual lease if he shall choose, so long as wood grows and water runs, as the phrase is in the rural districts, of this essential part of this property—

if the same can be done consistently with the interests of the Government of the United States—

That is, in the opinion of the Secretary of War. Now notice what follows. The discretion ceases and we now come to a descriptive allegation and declaration of what the nature of that lease is to be—said lease to be made upon the condition that the said Moline Water-Power Company shall go on and complete the development of the water-power and maintain it at its own cost and expense.

For whose benefit? The astute and patriotic gentleman who in his closet or office framed that amendment, industriously forgot that this water-power should be kept up for the benefit of the United States. It is to be turned over bodily to this company upon the condition; it thus becomes theirs to all intents and purposes, and for their own uses as lessees, that they shall develop and complete and have it for their use at their own expense. In other words, it is a complete delegation of authority to the Secretary of War to absolutely annihilate every interest and right of any beneficial character that the United States has in that water-power.

Now, I do say, Mr. President, that there is no hour in the last day of a session of Congress so late that it will prevent me from resisting, as far as I can with decorum and propriety to Senators, such a scheme as that introduced for the first time in a conference between the two Houses. Therefore, I hope the Senate will not be scared upon the subject of losing this bill. It is much better to lose the bill than it is to lose a half million dollars and destroy this property. We can rebuild up and re-enact the bill, but the property once gone we cannot get back.

Mr. KERNAN. It is introduced for the first time in the conference report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To all intents and purposes it is, although it hangs upon these threads of the Senate amendment:

For completing the development of the water-power at the Rock Island arsenal, in pursuance of contracts made with the Moline Water-Power Company, $25,000.

There was a simple provision of money to carry out what was supposed to be an existing obligation on the part of the United States. That is made the occasion for introducing, without any examination and without any time to examine, on the part of the Senate committee, to whom no such mission was intrusted, into the bearings of this subject and the consequences; and this most skillfully and adroitly drawn amendment prepared by somebody is put forth as a thing that is to be agreed to and we are expected to approve it. I must be excused for one.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, I do not have the apprehension that the Senator from Vermont has in relation to this scheme. It is very clear why this was introduced. It was done, doubtless, by the conference committee on the part of the House, or the persons who dominated that committee, upon the ground that the contract of the Government with this Moline Water-Power Company was disadvantageous to the Government. That is the reason why this provision was introduced. They believe—they have asserted it time and again in the conference committees—that this contract was disadvantageous to the Government, and they wanted to get rid of it on that account.

I do not think that the criticism upon this provision by the Senator from Vermont is exactly correct. I do not think there is any particular astuteness in drawing it. It is a very plain thing drawn and detailed there with regard to what the party wanted. Although, as I said before, I do not believe that the interests of the Government would be consulted by leasing this back again to this company, yet there is no harm in it. Certainly the bill ought not to be lost because this provision is here. The Secretary of War will not make this lease unless he thinks it is for the interest of the Government to do so, upon such terms as he pleases. He can keep it for the general benefit of the company and the Government and get a release from the company to the Government, but he certainly would not give away such a thing as that.

As I said before, the conference committee believed and I was willing that this should be adopted in place of the provision for the appropriation. If we could not get the appropriation, the member from that district who has the interests of the whole district at heart and knows more about it than I do, for I live in another part of the State entirely, and never was upon Rock Island in my life, thought it could not do any harm, and at any rate if there was any lease at all it would be reserving such portion to the Government as the Government would need. I do not believe that a bill should be lost because this provision is in it, although I see that there ought to have been an appropriation of $75,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator in charge of the conference report, my honorable friend from Minnesota, is willing that this report shall be disagreed to and that the matter may go back. There is time enough; there is no difficulty about that.

There are only one or two points to which I may call attention besides in order that they may be considered when the matter goes back. The seventieth amendment of the Senate has been changed in a manner to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate although I admit that the change is fairly within the parliamentary rule, but I only call attention to the propriety of it. The seventieth amendment of the Senate is:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds under the acts of June, &c., to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with judgment of the Supreme Court in cases decided under the said acts to be paid as other Army transportation, $300,000.

That is amended so as to provide that these payments shall be made in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court in cases decided, which I think is just enough so far, although it would embrace other cases than those decided, but according to the principle of it, but it then provides in the form of a proviso:

But in no event shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General be paid until the decision of the Court of Claims be had in each case.

Now, the legal effect of that, apparently, will be that when the others of these cases, of which the Senate will remember there were three classes, standing upon different provisions in the grants, one a mere right of way, another a right to have property transported free, and a third to have it transported under such rules and regulations and at such prices as should be just or should be fixed by the Secretary of War, all those three classes—the phraseology of this clause as it is left seems to provide that these other cases that have not yet been decided, that are in controversy, shall follow the judgment of the Court of Claims by force of this law, although their judgment might be reversed on an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. It provides for paying whatever the Court of Claims may determine. I think that is wrong and I think there is great danger in it. Of course I have great respect for that court, but on such very important interests that affect such large sums of money every year, in doing justice between the United States and these companies, in these three classes, according to the provisions of the law that made the land-grants, it is not right for the Senate of the United States to agree in advance that the moneys of the Treasury shall be paid out in all these various classes in future cases according to the decision of the Court of Claims, stopping there, but according to a final decision that might be made in each case by the Court of Claims on appeal would be much safer. I suggest to my honorable friend when it goes back, and I presume nobody will object to that, just to say "by the Supreme Court upon appeal."

Mr. WINDOM. Upon that point I wish to say that the amendment now criticized by the Senator from Vermont was drawn in the presence of and with the full approval of the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my honorable friend from Minnesota what he thinks?

Mr. WINDOM. I think there is nothing wrong about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be very well if the Attorney-General of the United States was a member of the conference committee. I did not know that the heads of the Executive Departments were before, but even then I suppose that his opinion is subject to our revision here. If he is not a member of the conference committee—

Mr. WINDOM. When a conference committee cannot at all times have the advice and presence of the Senator from Vermont, it seems to me that in the pressure of their business they may consult the Attorney-General upon questions of law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be so, Mr. President, and I am much obliged to my honorable friend for the implied censure that I receive in exercising the privilege that I think I shall continue to do while I am a Senator of expressing my opinion upon reports of committees in this body freely. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. WINDOM. No, no.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Thank you, sir. My duty is done, Mr. President, when I call the attention of the Senate to the risks it runs in dealing with railway companies in the accidental omission of very small phrases sometimes, in committing ourselves to engagements from which we cannot recede. The moment we make an arrangement of this kind the companies always say it is perpetual and that you cannot recede because you thereby violate the contract. You have entered into a new arrangement upon which they act, and they often have gone so far and still maintain that where an act provides in terms that we may alter or amend or repeal the provisions to which we have committed ourselves, we have not any power to do it. But my duty is done about it.

Now I come to the next thing that I wish to call attention to, if I may do so without offense to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. It is impossible for the honorable Senator from Vermont to give offense to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senate will give me its attention, as I do not intend to tax its patience, the necessity for these observations is quite as disagreeable to me as it must be to the patience of the Senate. On the fifty-fourth page of the reprinted bill with the amendments numbered as they left the Senate, there was a provision to which I will refer. The House bill had provided—

For the expenses of the geological survey, and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain.

And then there was a proviso about something in the legislative bill—

To be expended by the director of the geological survey, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

The Senate amended that provision by adding after the word "geological" the words "and geographical," and after "survey" the words "of the Territories," and striking out the reference to the legislative bill. Now out of that small seed, that I should have supposed must have come from the Department of Agriculture, it has grown so rapidly and into such large proportions that we have got no less than four printed pages of systematic legislation, the effect of which is—because I will not take time to go into it in detail—to abolish and set aside the mineralogical and geological survey that has been conducted under Professor Hayden, the survey that has been conducted under Major Powell, and the survey that has been conducted under the chief of the Army through the Engineer Corps by the engineers, and to consolidate all of these duties, interesting and useful to the United States, in one grand subdepartment of the Interior, which is to have, to begin with, a director-general, and then it is to have members—I do not know what that means, but it speaks of members of the geological survey, &c.—which is to go into a vast variety of examination and survey and exploration, &c., of course at a very large expense to the United States and an entire change of the existing law and of existing arrangements, when the thing that was sent to the conference committee as between the House of Representatives and the Senate was to insert after the word "geological" the word "geographical," and to strike out from the House bill a clause that had no potency whatever, because it referred to a bill that had not passed and without date, and the items, the clauses in which, when they came to us we had struck out ourselves, and I suppose they will stay out, this is built up.

I do submit that if this scheme were the most perfect of any that was ever invented, it is a wide departure from the authority that is possessed by a conference committee, and we cannot accept it unless we are to give up the whole safety of legislation and particularly on appropriation bills, because it is pressed upon us as it is said by the Senator from Illinois that you are likely to lose the bill; and so in the last three days of the session everything is to become a law that is on an appropriation bill by the judgment of three gentlemen, who, pressed by the great number of details and difficulties of doing the things that strictly belong to the bill, are obliged hastily to consider others. Unless we yield to that system this body is bound to say that it will not agree to a report that contains such a provision.

Now, my own judgment, which is entirely apart from the parliamentary propriety of this introduction, is that these surveys may and ought to be usefully condensed, and that the United States has educated, and is educating at public expenditure and from year to year, a body of men at West Point who come from the people and are of the people and who labor for the people, and who have the talent and the cultivation and the discipline and the organization, more so than any similar body of men in any country on the face of the earth, that makes them capable to act in time of peace, who are enjoying the salaries and emoluments of public office, of doing this duty and doing it well at a fraction of the expenditures that diversified service as it is now would be, and at a fraction of the expense that this new arrangement will breed.

Therefore, Mr. President, having said this, I hope that the Senate without being frightened at the danger of losing the appropriation bill will disagree to this report and allow the conference committee to try it again.

Mr. WINDOM. So far as the last question presented by the Senator from Vermont is concerned, I think there can be no doubt of its desirability as a mode of disposing of this much-vexed question of geological surveys. I am entirely clear that it is much better than the straggling mode of spending money that we have had on this subject heretofore. It is a question which has been before the Senate fully and been fully argued and thoroughly understood, for the measure has been printed and is on our tables, and is part of the proposition the Senate did act upon. The House appropriated $100,000 for these surveys, referring to the question of the organization of a director of the geological survey. The Senate committee proposed to strike out a portion of that amendment. It was stricken out, and to take the place of what was stricken out this was inserted. The latter part organizing a commission for the purpose of codifying the land laws, &c., possibly is not technically connected with it as it should be by the rule. That is the other thing to which I referred a moment ago when on my feet.

I am entirely willing to submit this whole question to the Senate. The Senator from Vermont has argued it and has stated all the danger that would grow out of this Moline Water-Power provision. I believe it is a safe proposition, but I am entirely willing to submit it to the Senate and take the judgment of the Senate upon it.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word relative to the last matter spoken of. When the sundry civil bill came to the Senate from the House it contained this provision:

Provided for under the ——— section of the act "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved March —, 1879, to be expended by the Director of the Geological Survey under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

At the time this bill was being considered by the Senate Committee on Appropriations the bill referred to had not been printed and did not reach the committee of the Senate until the sundry civil bill was acted upon by the committee. Here was a reference to section blank of an act which had never passed, a section that nobody knew anything about, not a line of which either the Senate or its committee ever saw. When the regular legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to which I presume this refers came before the Senate it contained section 2 of nearly five printed pages, overthrowing all the existing condition of things. The Senate Committee on Appropriations deliberately determined that they had no time to look into that to see whether it was an improvement upon the old system or not, and the Senate concurred in that action. Therefore neither the committee of the Senate nor a member of the Senate either in committee or on this floor has had an opportunity to know what this change means. A committee of conference now meet, and they take up a large portion of this section 2 which neither the committee of the Senate nor the Senate itself ever saw, and insert it into the sundry civil bill, when it was never considered, creating a new officer who is called the director of the geological surveys, at a salary of $6,000, who is to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and gives him the entire direction of the geological surveys, the classification and examination of the public lands, and abolishes altogether all the propositions for surveys under the War Department and discontinues them from the 30th day of June, 1879, and requires them to turn over all of their work and deposit it in the National Museum. They appropriate $100,000 for this purpose.

Then they created a commission composed of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Director of the United States Geological Surveys they have themselves appointed, and three civilians to be appointed by the President, who are to receive $10 a day while engaged and their expenses. They are to go over the country and look up this whole matter and make reports. It may be a very good system, perhaps it is; it may be better than the old one; but it was deliberately resolved by the Senate that they had no time to examine into the new system whether good or bad, and they would not do it. Yet the conference committee on the part of the Senate, although they never saw it on the sundry civil bill and did not have this bill before them when considering it, and although the Committee on Appropriations deliberately advised the Senate not to look into this new system and the Senate agreed with them, bring it all back and have the conference committee tell us that the whole bill must be defeated or this system be adopted right or wrong. I insist that it is bad legislation.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, the joint commission on the reorganization of the Army was appointed and for several months gave its attention to framing a bill for the reorganization of the Army. That bill was printed and was laid on the tables of Senators during the whole session of Congress; certainly ever since the recess Senators have had free access to it. Senators have said here, and I am bound to say justly, because they are the best judges of their own views about things, that they would not act upon that bill because they had not time to give it attention. Therefore the bill has gone over. I will not say that that action was not wise, but let the bill go over until the next Congress. But that was done after a committee of the two Houses had given an entire vacation between the two sessions to the work. Now we are called upon here to-night to act upon one of the most important changes in legislation in the very last hours of the session without any kind of consideration. I think it is an insult to the intelligence and independence of this body to ask them to act upon this amendment to-night changing the whole system of surveys at the dictation of a subcommittee of the House, if I have a right to refer to such a thing as that in debate. I say it is an outrage and the Senate ought not to submit to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say one word more with reference to the amendment numbered 41. I do not wish to embarrass this bill or to prevent such consideration as will enable it to pass at the present session of Congress. If I supposed for a single moment that any Secretary of War would exercise in the slightest degree the power conferred upon him by that amendment I would not consent to the passage of this bill under any circumstances. Here is a water-power, estimated by the Army officer in charge of it as worth from $300,000 to $500,000 per annum when developed, proposed to be leased, not in competition, not to those who will pay the most for it, but to a corporation organized by the State of Illinois, and the very corporation who surrendered this water-power originally to the Government of the United States for a large consideration, that consideration partly in perpetuity, because we have agreed in our contract with that company to develop this water-power and to maintain it in perpetuity, giving them one-fourth of it. But I feel certain that the Secretary of War will not exercise the power conferred upon him, and therefore I am not willing to waive the objections I have to this amendment in deference to other gentlemen who are equally interested with me in the development of this arsenal.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Has the Senator any assurance that the Secretary of War is going to live until the next session and that some new Secretary of War may not come in who would be disposed to exercise this power?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that I have no special assurance on that subject.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not suppose the Senator has.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Iowa should also consider that this goes into the statute-book as a permanent statute. It will be for all time.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It can be repealed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is much easier to refuse to pass it.

Mr. DAWES. It would not be as easy to repeal it as to enact it probably, and I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, who has had some knowledge of Fort Snelling and divers other large properties of the United States disappearing like a morning mist, that the first thing he will know this water-power at Rock Island will disappear.

Mr. DORSEY. As every Senator here knows, this great bill reaches the Senate in the very last days of the session. It is necessarily referred to three or four Senators, who alone are charged with the duty of investigating the character of the provisions which the House sent to us. The committee charged with that duty in this case have devoted as much time to it as the late day in the session would allow. They have tried to investigate it as faithfully, as earnestly, as they were capable of, and the result of that we have presented to you, after having passed the House, the conference report which the Senator from Vermont asks the Senate to disagree to. I do not believe that it is possible for any three Senators of this body to take this great bill, with its mass of amendments, with the innumerable number of diverse interests it involves, and arrive any nearer a right conclusion than the report which lies now on the table.

I certainly hope, Mr. President, that this bill will not be returned to the House; that this conference report will not be rejected, because I feel almost certain that if it is the bill will fail, for the reason that there is not time between now and to-morrow noon to have a new conference go over this ground again; and for the further reason that the Senate is already too much exhausted, I think, upon that subject to go over the Moline water-power matter. The provision made here only grants a discretion to the Secretary of War which he need not exercise, and if it is going to militate against the interests of the United States he surely will not exercise it; and if it is found that it works against the interests of the United States, at the next session of Congress it will be a very easy thing to repeal it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can Congress repeal it after the lease is made?

Mr. DORSEY. There is no lease to be made except in the discretion of the Secretary of War. I hope the conference report will be concurred in.

Mr. McDONALD. What difficulty is there in striking out that part of this report which never has been considered in either branch of Congress?

Mr. DORSEY. If you strike out one word of the report it will strike out the whole of it.

Mr. McDONALD. I think we had better do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report must be dealt with as an entirety.

Mr. SARGENT. If the report is rejected it should be done at once, unless it is the purpose not only to reject the report but to cause the bill to fail. There is a chance that by the conferees working industriously, for the House is still in session, I am informed, so that they may appoint other conferees, the bill may become a law and that which is pointed out as objectionable be eliminated; but another half hour spent in debate will simply sacrifice the bill. I hope the question will be taken. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I second the demand for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 35, nays 24; as follows:

J. Adams, said test to be made under the supervision and direction of said Adams, but without compensation to said Adams for his services: And provided further, That such test shall not be made until the right shall be secured to the United States to use said flume in the event of the favorable result of said test, upon terms satisfactory to the Secretary of War."

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN H. REAGAN,

JNO. E. KENNA,

JAY A. HUBBELL,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

EDUCATION OF THE BLIND.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. No. 4228) to promote the education of the blind.

Mr. McDONALD. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me to call up a resolution which I offered before the recess. It will take but a moment, and it has to go to the House.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I cannot yield. This bill was before the Senate by unanimous consent on one occasion, and it has been postponed from time to time. I insist upon the consideration of the bill unless a majority of the Senate refuse to take it up.

Mr. McDONALD. I am sure the matter I desire to have considered will not take any time at all.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I cannot yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the bill.

The bill was read by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill has once been read at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read again for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read at length.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4228) to promote the education of the blind; and it was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is considerable fitness in passing this bill perhaps just at this time, but I am not able to perceive how the Constitution of the United States warrants the passage of such a bill at all, and I am not able to perceive where the money is to come from, unless it is to come from the same great stream that flows out of the Treasury where no stream flows into it. I shall content myself simply with asking for the yeas and nays on the third reading of the bill, which will settle the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 40, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Anthony,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,
Bailey,	Dennis,	Jones of Nevada,	Oglesby,
Beck,	Dorsey,	Kellogg,	Patterson,
Blaine,	Eustis,	Lamar,	Plumb,
Booth,	Ferry,	McCreery,	Rollins,
Bruce,	Garland,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Shields,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Matthews,	Teller,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Maxey,	Wadleigh,
Chandler,	Howe,	Mitchell,	Whyte,

NAYS—7.

Davis of Ill.,	Edmunds,	Kirkwood,	Merrimon,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hereford,	McDonald,

ABSENT—29.

Allison,	Dawes,	Morrill,	Thurman,
Barnum,	Eaton,	Paddock,	Voorhees,
Bayard,	Hamlin,	Randolph,	Wallace,
Butler,	Hill,	Ransom,	Windom,
Chaffee,	Hoar,	Sargent,	Withers,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,
Conkling,	Johnston,	Sharon,
Conover,	Kernan,	Spencer,

So the bill was ordered to a third reading.

It was read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say one word on this bill. I notice that the bill appropriates $250,000 to provide for the issuing of Government bonds to support a printing house for the blind, which is a very charitable and a very proper object. My opinion, however, is that we have no right whatever to appropriate money from the Treasury in that way. I wish to make this explanation simply why I voted nay on the third reading.

Mr. HOAR. I think perhaps it is proper to say, before this bill passes, that it contains one clause which in my judgment is clearly beyond the constitutional authority of the United States to pass, and that is a provision that certain persons shall be added to a Kentucky corporation. I think it ought to be put upon record that the bill is passed with the expectation that the assent of that corporation and of the Legislature of Kentucky will be obtained to the act before any other action is taken under the bill. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is not his assurance that that will be done?

Mr. BECK. It is, both by the corporation and by the Legislature, immediately.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2518) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the schooner Don Pedro; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask the present consideration of House bill No. 4318. The bill (H. R. No. 4318) to provide for the organization of the Mississippi River improvement commission, and for the correction, permanent location, and deepening of the channel and the improvement of the navigation of said Mississippi River, and the protection of its alluvial lands, was read by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. The Senator from Mississippi asks that it may be brought before the Senate. It will be reported and objections asked.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there amendments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the bill has not yet been taken up. I should like to vote on the question of proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been reported at length. The Senator from Mississippi asked unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to vote upon it. He has a right to move it.

Mr. KELLOGG. It does not require unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asked unanimous consent.

Mr. BRUCE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to suggest several amendments to the bill, and as they are marked on a paper, I will ask the Clerk to report them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. On line 5, section 1, it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

That there is hereby created a commission, to be called the Mississippi River improvement commission, to be composed of seven persons.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to hear further how the commission is to be appointed before that amendment is agreed upon.

Mr. WINDOM. They are to be appointed as provided for by the bill. The amendment does not change the manner of appointment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that I understand the number is five in the bill now as read, three from the Engineer Corps, and two civilians. If you add two, how are they to be appointed; in what proportion?

Mr. WINDOM. That will be stated in a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let all the amendments be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All the amendments proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

Mr. BRUCE. Is not this amendment to be acted upon now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is; but all the amendments will be reported. The Secretary will report all the amendments proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

The Secretary read the proposed amendments, as follows:

Page 1, section 2, line 2, strike out "five" and insert "seven."

Section 2, line 3, after "commissioners," insert "one of whom he shall designate as president of the commission."

Line 5, section 2, strike out the word "Army."

Line 6, section 2, after the word "corps," insert "of the Army, one officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

Strike out all of lines 6 and 7 after the word "corps," except the word "and" in the seventh line.

Page 2, line 8, after the word "two," insert "eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States, and one."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest that section 2 be now read as it is proposed to amend it.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Secretary will pass the list of amendments back to me I will state to the Senate precisely what those amendments mean in a moment. Perhaps that is the better way. The amendments are all meant to carry out one purpose.

The first amendment is to strike out "five" and insert "seven," and after "commissioners" to insert "one of whom shall be designated as president of the commission." The amendments to section 2 are, in line 2, before the word "commissioners," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" after "commissioners" to insert "one of whom he shall designate as president of the commission;" in line 5, before the words "Engineer Corps," to strike out "Army," and after "Engineer Corps" to strike out "one of whom shall be designated by the President of the United States as president of the commission," and insert "of the Army, one officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey;" in line 8, after the word "two," to insert "eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States, and one," and to strike out the word "persons" and insert "person."

As the bill now reads, it is:

SEC. 2. The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint five commissioners, and shall in like manner fill any vacancy or vacancies which may occur in said commission. Said commission shall be composed of three officers of the Army Engineer Corps, one of whom shall be designated by the President of the United States as president of the commission, and two persons from civil life, who shall be familiar with the navigation of said river, and with the effect of the overflow of said river upon the alluvial lands of the Mississippi Delta.

The amendments proposed are to make it read as follows:

The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint seven commissioners, one of whom he shall designate as president of the commission, and shall in like manner fill any vacancy or vacancies which may occur in said commission. Said commission shall be composed of three officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army, one officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, two eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States, and one person from civil life, &c.

* It is simply to add these civil engineers to the present Army Engineers, and a person from civil life. That is the entire object of the amendment, and all the other amendments following that are to carry out that purpose, so that the Senate will understand in a moment what it means.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator whether he provides for compensation?

Mr. WINDOM. That is contained in the original bill, and I was not present when it was read. I only desire that if the bill shall pass, it pass with this amendment. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, I believe, as the bill is reported by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE,] is the amount appropriated.

Mr. COCKRELL. The provision is:

And for the services and duties hereinafter prescribed, the said Army officers shall receive no other or additional pay or compensation than is now allowed them by law, and the other two commissioners shall receive as pay and compensation each the sum of $3,000 per annum.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there a report with the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report, as the Chair understands.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is a House bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire that the amendments offered by me should be reported by the Secretary and acted on now, since the object has been stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 2, at line 2, by striking out "five" and inserting "seven;" line 3, after the word "commissioner," insert "one of whom he shall designate as president of the commission;" in line 5, section 2, strike out "Army" before "Engineer Corps," and after "Engineer Corps" strike out "one of whom shall be designated by the President of the United States as president of the commission," and insert "of the Army, one officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey;" in line 8, after the word "two," insert "eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States, and one," and in the same line strike out "persons," and insert "person;" so as to make the section read if amended:

SEC. 2. The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint seven commissioners, one of whom he shall designate as president of the commission, and shall in like manner fill any vacancy or vacancies which may occur in said commission. Said commission shall be composed of three officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army, one officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and two eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States, and one person from civil life who shall be familiar with the navigation of said river and with the effect of the overflow of said river upon the alluvial lands of the Mississippi Delta. And for the services and duties hereinafter prescribed, the said Army officers shall receive no other or additional pay or compensation than is now allowed them by law, and the other two commissioners shall receive as pay and compensation each the sum of $3,000 per annum. Said commissioners appointed as above shall remain members of said board, subject to removal by the President of the United States.

In section 3 insert at the beginning of line 12 the words "and the Secretary of the Treasury respectively," and in line 13, after the word "Army," insert "or from that of the Coast and Geodetic Survey;" in line 16, before the word "control," insert "their respective," and before the word "deemed," in line 17, insert the words "by the commission;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of said commission to direct and complete such surveys of said river, between the city of Alton, in the State of Illinois, and mouths of said river, as may now be in progress, and to make such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations, hydrographical and topographical, as may be deemed necessary by said commission to enable it to perform its duties and to carry out the objects of this act with the greatest advantage to the public interests, and to enable said commission to complete such surveys, and to make such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations; and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury respectively shall, when requested by said commission, detail from the Engineer Corps of the Army or from that of the Coast and Geodetic Survey such officers and men as may be necessary, and shall place in the charge and for the use of said commission such vessel or vessels and such machinery and instruments as may be under their respective control and may be by the commission deemed necessary; and the said commission may, with the approval of the Secretary of War, employ such additional force and assistants, and provide, by purchase or otherwise, such vessels or boats and such instruments and means as may be deemed necessary.

In section 4, line 16, strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States."

In section 5, line 4, after the word "shall," insert "by direction of the President of the United States;" in line 7 strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. If such plans and estimates, or such plans, shall be approved by the Congress of the United States, then the construction and completion of said works according to such plans shall, by direction of the President of the United States, be conducted and carried on by the Secretary of War; and said commission shall annually, prior to the commencement of each regular session of Congress, make and submit to the President of the United States, to be by him submitted to the Congress of the United States, full and detailed reports of their proceedings and actions, and of all works and improvements done, and the cost thereof, and of the progress and effects of such works, and of estimates of the necessary amounts of appropriations for successfully and efficiently carrying on the construction of said works and improvements, and also for the completion of such works and improvements according to the said plans.

In section 6, line 4, strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" in line 6 strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" in line 17 strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States."

In section 7, line 5, strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" in line 7 strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" in line 11 strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" in line 16, after the word "thereupon," insert "the President of the United States shall direct;" and in line 17, after the words "Secretary of War," strike out "shall" and insert "to;" so as to read:

And thereupon the President of the United States shall direct the Secretary of War to contract and let said work, &c.

In the same section, line 37, strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States."

In section 8, line 1, strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" in line 2, after the words "United States," insert "or from the Coast and Geodetic Survey;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. The President of the United States may detail from the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States, or from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, any officer who may be selected and recommended by said commission, or a majority thereof, to act as secretary of said commission.

In section 9, line 1, strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" and in line 2 strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

SEC. 9. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $225,000 for the payment of the salaries herein provided for, and of the necessary expenses incurred in the completion of such surveys as may now be in progress, and of such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations as may be deemed necessary, and in maturing and perfecting and reporting the plans and estimates, and the plans, specifications, and estimates contemplated by this act, as herein provided for; and said sum is hereby appropriated for said purposes out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HEREFORD. I should like the attention of the Senator from Minnesota, who has given this bill some attention. As I have shown by my votes, I am willing to make very liberal appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River, but I desire the bill to be more guarded, so that we may know what we are about. What I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to is whether under this bill this commission or the Secretary of War has the power to make any contract or contracts for the improvement of the river?

Mr. WINDOM. I want to say to the Senator from West Virginia, and all others, that I did not report this bill; I did not have it in charge. I have only desired to offer the amendments which I have submitted. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] or the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BRUCE] can explain fully my parts of the bill. I can explain the amendments I have offered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will answer the question the Senator from West Virginia propounds.

Mr. HEREFORD. I have not propounded my question yet; the Senator will wait a moment. I desire to call the attention of the gentlemen who have the bill directly in charge and of the Senate to whether this bill taken as a whole gives this commission or the Secretary of War the power to enter into contracts and thereby bind the General Government before an appropriation is made therefor. It seems to me that they would have that power almost ad libitum, and that there is but one restriction on it. I will read the seventh section:

SEC. 7. When said commission shall have so prepared and matured such plans for and estimates of the cost of a general system of works for the purposes aforesaid, and shall have so reported and submitted the same to the Secretary of War, and the same or said plans shall have been so approved by the Congress, as herein provided for, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War—

Now this is the particular part to which I call attention—to cause said works and improvements to be constructed and completed as rapidly as the appropriations made by Congress therefor shall justify.

It seems to me that under that they would have a right to go on and make contracts prior to the appropriation. I do not believe that the friends of this bill designed any such thing. If that is not the wish of the friends of the bill they will vote for the amendment which I propose to offer, to come in after the word "justify," in section 7, line 10, as follows:

Provided, That no contract shall be let before an appropriation shall be made therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it an amendment to any of the amendments offered by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEREFORD. No, sir; it is an additional amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Senator from Minnesota are first in order. After that the Chair will recognize the Senator from West Virginia. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just one moment. I desire to state, in answer to the Senator from West Virginia, that while I regard the bill as guarding specifically against the exercise of a power which he fears the Secretary of War or the President may undertake, yet I am perfectly willing for his amendment to go in.

Now I will call the attention of the Senate to the third section, which provides what this commission shall do; that they shall take examinations and surveys already made, and "make such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations" as will enable them to complete a plan for the improvement of the river. Then, in section 4, they are to do certain things; and that section says that their action must be reported to Congress and approved by Congress. Then, section 5, which explains section 7, says:

If such plans and estimates, or such plans, shall be approved by the Congress of the United States, then the construction and completion of said works according to such plans shall be conducted and carried on by the Secretary of War.

Now I hold that under this bill as it is, not one solitary contract can be made for the improvement of the river or the construction of any works; but I want the bill carried, and therefore I will accept the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia; that is, I will make no objection to it when it comes up in its time. This bill is for a survey of the river, a completion of the survey, and the devising of a plan, a system, to be reported to Congress before a dollar is expended in pursuance of that plan. That is the object of it; that is the intention of it; we want nothing more; and therefore the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia will not be opposed, because we want the approval of Congress to whatever plan may be determined on.

Mr. FERRY. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he succeeds in obtaining the approval of Congress, does it not follow that Congress will make an appropriation to carry out whatever may be reported by the commission?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. FERRY. Is it not binding on a future Congress when the approval is made?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. It is precisely like every other river or harbor improvement in the United States; not one dollar can be contracted or expended without an appropriation.

Mr. FERRY. That is true; but the fact of a survey implies the following fact of an appropriation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. I am astonished to hear the Senator from Michigan make such a statement as that. We have hundreds and thousands of surveys made by the Engineer Corps of the Army where no appropriation follows.

Mr. FERRY. I have had some experience in that respect, and I think the river and harbor bill reveals the fact I am stating that preceding appropriations are generally surveys. When a survey has been made an appropriation generally follows. Now, if this is a proposition to survey the whole river and adopt a system of improvement, it involves substantially the improvement of that river, and the Senate must judge as well as myself of the magnitude of the enterprise.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all very true; but I desire to know if the Senator is unwilling to improve that great inland sea.

Mr. FERRY. I reply to the Senator that I am willing. I have shown a liberality beyond that of many Senators on this floor in regard to the improvement of harbors; but I question the propriety of appropriating for all the rivers of the country because I take into consideration the size of the purse of the nation, and the Senator can with myself judge of that. Are we prepared to go into a general system of the improvement of that river which will involve more than the nation can contend with under its present financial condition.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it contemplates nothing of the kind. It is to know why and for what purpose appropriations are made, for what object they are expended, and whether the object is being attained or not. It is to save the annual appropriations which are made for the improvement of the river. Those interested in that river desire a system for it just as you have plans and systems for the improvement of your harbors, of your smaller streams, of your single harbors upon the lakes and the ocean. We desire that the plan shall state what work is to be done; the probable cost of the work, and what will be accomplished when the work is done. Then we shall ask Congress to make a reasonable appropriation, if that plan is approved, to start that work, and each year we shall have a report and then we shall know whether the appropriation is doing good or not, and if the expenditure of the money is not accomplishing what was planned, what was intended to be accomplished, Congress will certainly stop the appropriation.

Now, as to all the harbors you have a plan, you have a system. You commence a work to accomplish a specific thing. You have reports each year as to how that work is progressing, and what is being accomplished. When you find that the system, the plan, the method that you are pursuing is not accomplishing what you want, you abandon it and take another. But we have had no system, no plan for the Mississippi River, the great inland ocean. We want a plan which does not involve—and I speak knowingly, and I know the facts whereof I speak when I say it does not involve the expenditure of forty or fifty million dollars, nor of $30,000,000.

I desire to say to the Senate that there are only about fifteen places between Cairo and the mouth of the river where there is shallow water; and all in the world that we ask of the Senate now is to give us a plan for deepening the channel, improving the navigation of the river. Let us have that grand stream confined in execution of its own laws. Let us construct works over these shoals which will give the channel of the river the same uniform width that is above and below, and we know that the river will scour out its own depth and give good navigable water.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. How much appropriation does this bill provide for in order to make this survey?

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill provides for $250,000, and that we reduced by the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to $235,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. We passed the river and harbor bill here.

Mr. COCKRELL. And not one solitary dollar in it for the survey of the Mississippi River.

Mr. MITCHELL. We passed the river and harbor bill here last Sunday, yesterday, and the sum total appropriated for surveys, if I remember aright, was $165,000 or $175,000, all told, for the survey of all the rivers and all the harbors in this country. Why was not this made a part of the river and harbor bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will explain to the Senator from Oregon why it was not. Take your Book of Estimates and you will find over $150,000, my recollection is $158,000, recommended for the completion of the surveys of the Mississippi River. It was entirely omitted in the bill. I offered an amendment providing for an additional appropriation, but the committee did not put it upon the bill; and, as this separate bill was pending, I did not insist upon the amendment to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. What committee was this reported from?

Mr. COCKRELL. From the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River.

Mr. FERRY. Now the Senator from Missouri will allow me a word. He has a very fascinating way of inviting us to the support of this proposition by the initiative step of a survey, which as I now repeat involves finally an appropriation, and the Senator has disclosed the magnitude of the enterprise by saying that the banks of the Mississippi are to be protected, to what extent he does not tell; but to the fullest extent must necessarily follow in order to make the appropriation effectual. I think Congress has been very liberal in regard to the mouth of the Mississippi River, and I as a member of this body have been ready to vote with the Senator from Missouri to appropriate a sufficient amount for the improvement of that river. It was only yesterday in framing the river and harbor bill that we began to modify the contract with Captain Eads to enable him not only to go on with his contract but to pay him more liberally than the original agreement with him provided. We have been ready to vote an amount exceeding $5,000,000 for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi. Now I say to the Senator from Missouri, after that having been done by Congress, to invite us to larger contributions for the purpose of improving that vast river is an enterprise before which I hesitate, liberal as I have been in regard to appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Mr. COCKRELL. We simply want just what the Senator from Michigan has up at the springs which start the Mississippi River. He asks for surveys, he asks for plans. We want to know what system shall be introduced in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. We have had appropriations of $50,000 and $75,000, but we have had no system, no plan. It is the fault of Congress. We want a survey now, we want these gentlemen to say to Congress what system will improve the navigation of the river, what system will deepen the channel and afford deeper water. Now, give us the system, give us the estimates, and a statement of what will be accomplished by it. That will be submitted, and then if Congress approves of that it will make annual appropriations sufficient to construct the works and see whether they will accomplish the end intended.

Mr. EATON. Will my friend permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. I am very anxious, as I said last year, to join with all the Senators from the valley in the support of a proposition of this character; but I desire to say to my friend from Missouri, and to all the Senators who are interested in this matter, that this bill is a very defective and incorrect one in my judgment, and I will proceed to state in a word why.

As I understand from my friend from Missouri, all that he desires, and certainly all that the Senate can contemplate, is the institution of a commission, and an appropriation of money, as much as may be necessary, one or two or three hundred thousand dollars, to accomplish a particular purpose; and now what is that purpose to be? That purpose should be to report to Congress at the next session, if possible, the plans that are necessary to carry out this work, with all the estimates accompanying them. Therefore there is no necessity for the machinery in this bill which provides for contracts or which provides for the Secretary of War letting any contracts. That is not the way to proceed. It is beginning at the wrong end of the steeple to build it at the top; you had better begin at the bottom.

Now let this bill be so amended as to do exactly what my friend desires, no matter what the amount of money may be, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to effect exactly what he desires, to examine the delta, to examine the river, to make plans and submit estimates to the Congress of the United States, and then we shall know whether either to defeat those plans or carry them out. That, if I understand the Senator from Missouri, is exactly what he desires.

Mr. COCKRELL. And precisely what the bill does.

Mr. EATON. Oh, no, Mr. President. It goes on to say that the Secretary of War may make contracts with A, B, C, and D.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator excuse me? He has certainly no such authority in the bill, as I have already agreed to accept the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD,] a proviso that shall put in a positive prohibition of any contract of any kind.

Mr. EATON. But there is no such machinery as this necessary in the bill; it does not belong to a bill of this character. I cannot vote for these sections; it is impossible that I could do it.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask a question?

Mr. EATON. I am now trespassing upon my friend from Missouri. I shall be glad to answer with his permission.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. This bill provides for a survey, for plans and specifications of certain improvements. It also authorizes certain officers to ascertain what sort of plans can be made. But before one dollar can be expended, before one shovel of earth can be removed, before any work, however small, or any liability to pay for work, however small the amount may be, can be contracted, it must be approved by the Secretary of War and reported to Congress, and my friend from Connecticut and all of us will sit in judgment upon the propriety or the impropriety of making the contract that is recommended by this board and by the Secretary of War. I do not think the bill could be better guarded than it is, because a contract can never be made so as to be binding upon any one until my honorable friend has had an opportunity of searching it and determining whether it is proper or not.

Mr. EATON. I am at a great loss to see where the question comes in. [Laughter.] The argument of my friend from Tennessee is quite weighty; but I supposed he desired to ask me a question.

Mr. HARRIS. If my friend will pardon me, I will ask the question. Is he not willing to have this additional safeguard of the Secretary of War passing his judgment on it, and submitting not only the plan but submitting also information as to the character of the contracts to be made? That is the question that I had intended to ask, and thought I had asked of my honorable friend.

Mr. EATON. That is a question, and a question which I will answer with a great deal of pleasure. I say no. I do not desire any contracts entered into. I do not desire any jobs entered into by anybody. I desire just exactly with regard to the Mississippi River what I would require in regard to any harbor or river improvement in my own section of country, for it is all my country. Your valley is mine as much as it is yours, and in its prosperity I have as great an interest as you and an equal interest with you. Now, then, appropriate as much money as may be necessary, and I will vote for it; appropriate as much money as may be necessary to make these examinations of the river; have your accomplished engineers, as many as may be required, and let the estimates of cost be made, and let all that be reported to the Congress of the United States, and not to the Secretary of War, but let the report come here; let us know what is about to be required at our hands to be expended in order to perfect this navigation. If they desire, as my friend does, red-tape, red-tape be it, and let the report be made to somebody else; but I cannot vote for any bill that would look like a letting of contracts.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut is advocating this bill in every one of its features. The Secretary of War can do nothing until Congress has acted, and where the words "Secretary of War" occur in the bill the Senator from Minnesota has proposed to strike them out and insert the "President of the United States."

Mr. EATON. That does not help it any, in my judgment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Look at section 4:

And when so prepared and matured and approved by the president of said commission, to make and submit to the Secretary of War a full and detailed report of their proceedings and actions, and of such plans and estimates for the purposes aforesaid, to be by him transmitted to Congress.

Mr. EATON. That is an amendment that I do not know anything about.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not an amendment, it is in the bill.

Mr. EATON. I thought you said it was an amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, it is in the bill; and I say that every solitary thing which the Senator from Connecticut has advocated as proper is already in this bill. Everything has to be submitted to Congress and approved by Congress before anything can be done. I want to prove that to my friend. Go to section 4, and everything has to be reported to the President and by him submitted to Congress. Now, go to section 5:

If such plans and estimates or such plans shall be approved by the Congress of the United States, then the construction and completion of said works according to such plans shall, by direction of the President of the United States, be conducted and carried on by the Secretary of War.

Now, go to section 6, and it says:

And if such plans, specifications, and estimates shall be approved by the Congress of the United States, then the President of the United States—

Shall do so and so.

Then go to section 7:

And the same or said plans shall have been so approved by Congress as herein provided for, then it shall be the duty, &c.

Not one step can be taken in the construction of any work, in the execution of any plan or any system or method of improvement until Congress has approved it and made the necessary appropriation. When Congress has approved it, it will make the appropriations which it thinks are necessary. There are works to-day under construction where the cost is estimated at $10,000,000 that was the surveyed estimate. Now, Congress does not bind itself because it has a survey and estimate of $10,000,000 as necessary to complete the work to appropriate all that money. Not at all.

Mr. BLAINE. I will tell how I think my friend from Missouri can improve this bill, to which I feel very well disposed. The defect in the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sections is in attempting to lay down by law what Congress will do in case it approves something at a future day. If you leave it open so that when Congress comes to the point of making the appropriation it can then determine by law what shall be done, instead of attempting to-night to determine by law what Congress will do four years hence, it will make the bill more lucid and remove a great many of the objections that I think my friend will point out.

Mr. COCKRELL. We do not desire to bind anybody. I am sure my friend from Connecticut coincides with my ideas of precisely what I understand this bill accomplishes.

Mr. EATON. I do not so understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is the difference. It is a difference in the understanding of the bill. I say it means what the Senator wants.

Mr. EATON. I say it does not.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is the difference of opinion; yet we both want the same object.

Mr. EATON. Then place it exactly as my friend from Maine has suggested. Perhaps I was obtuse and did not make myself thoroughly understood; but he certainly has made my views of this matter understood. Let us confine ourselves now to the appropriation necessary for all these estimates and go no further, but let a future Congress determine in regard to the work.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion in the way of promoting the economy of time. While the Senators are conferring on the amendment conceded to be necessary I ask unanimous consent to let the matter be laid aside informally not to lose its place, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will not lead to debate.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope we shall come to a vote immediately upon this bill, and not lay it aside. It need not provoke debate to any extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee to object to the proposition.

Mr. HARRIS. No, I do not want to object; but I want to have some disposition made of the pending bill. I had hoped the Senate would come to a vote on this bill in a very short time. If that cannot be secured, of course I shall not stand in the way of the wish of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the pending measure be laid aside informally not to lose its place, in order that a measure may be taken up.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We want to have some information as to what the measure is.

Mr. HOWE. You will know in a moment. It will be reported from the desk. It will not lead to any debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin state the title of the bill.

Mr. HOWE. It is a bill for the relief of Henry T. Fuller and others, sureties upon the official bond of William H. Waterman, a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make no objection if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BRUCE] will make no objection to laying aside the levee bill temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has already been done.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will call it up when we have an opportunity.

Mr. BRUCE. I presume the bill called up by the Senator from Wisconsin will not be debated.

Mr. HOWE. Certainly not.

WILLIAM H. WATERMAN'S SURETIES.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5822) for the relief of Henry T. Fuller and others, sureties upon the official bond of William H. Waterman.

Henry T. Fuller, Thomas Dickenson, Albert G. Knight, H. T. Taylor, John Elkins, and the estates of John Heath and Thomas Falvey, deceased, and each of them, are by the bill released and discharged from any and all liability as the sureties upon the official bond of William H. Waterman, formerly superintendent of Indian affairs for Washington Territory, and upon the judgment rendered and docketed on the 4th of January, 1879, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin, in favor of the United States of America, plaintiff, and against the parties named as defendants, for the sum of $5,662.92 damages, and $32.05 costs as taxed; the release and discharge to take effect upon the payment of the legal costs as taxed in the judgment.

Mr. GARLAND. Is there a report accompanying this bill?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to have the report read, or perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin can explain the matter.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senate will allow me, I will state the grounds on which this bill is recommended by the Judiciary Committee. The report was presented by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.] There are three grounds: first, that the principal on this bond died within ten days after he resigned his office, and could not superintend the settlement of his own accounts; second, that the sureties had no notice of his death until nearly a year afterward, and had no notice that any deficiency was claimed in his accounts until many years afterward, when several of the co-sureties were either dead or insolvent; and, third, that upon an inspection and re-examination of Waterman's accounts it is as palpable as anything in accounts can be that instead of his being in default the Government owes him a thousand or two of dollars.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand the Senator to say that the bill comes from a committee and is on the Calendar?

Mr. HOWE. It passed the House and comes from the Judiciary Committee, being reported by the Senator from Illinois, and has been on the Calendar for some time.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. F. WHITMAN.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 4564, which was reported by the Committee on Finance, may be taken up and disposed of. It is very short and will occupy but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4564) for the relief of A. F. Whitman, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Kimbro and E. V. Kimbro, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to A. F. Whitman, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Kimbro, deceased, and administrator of E. V. Kimbro, deceased, $3,414, in full payment of a draft drawn by the Treasurer of the United States in favor of the intestate of Whitman, on the First National Bank of Washington, District of Columbia, for $3,414, dated March 9, 1867, and which has not been paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. ROLLINS. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order, which was laid aside informally.

Mr. BRUCE. I insist on the regular order. Let us go on with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Missouri insist on the regular order being proceeded with. The bill for the organization of the Mississippi River improvement commission is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DORSEY. I am as anxious as the Senator from Missouri to secure the passage of the pending bill; but it seems to me if the friends of that measure propose to debate it all night, they are sure to defeat it. There is other pressing business that a great many Senators desire to bring before the Senate; and I give notice that unless the vote be taken on the bill pretty soon I shall move to lay it on the table, though I am for it just as earnestly as the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am very thankful for the advice of the Senator from Arkansas. I have consumed less time of this Senate than any other member of the body, and I do not propose to consume time to-night. I now desire to call the attention of the Senate to the suggestions and amendments offered by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Maine. The committee will agree to striking out sections 5, 6, and 7.

Mr. EATON. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then if there be no objection the proposition is to strike out sections 5, 6, and 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But there are amendments already pending, being those of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. COCKRELL. This will be an amendment to those amendments, because it is perfecting the text. It is striking out certain provisions that he proposes to amend. One will not interfere with the other.

Mr. EATON. This will not interfere with the previous amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection is made, the Chair will first state the question on the motion of the Senator from Missouri which is the most convenient form. It is to strike out sections 5, 6, and 7.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say a word about this bill. I have no special objection to striking out these particular sections; but after that is done, the bill to my mind is a very objectionable measure. It proposes the establishment of a commission composed of ten persons I believe, as amended by the Senator from Minnesota—

Mr. KELLOGG and others. Seven.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Well, seven, styled the Mississippi improvement commission. The third section provides:

It shall be the duty of said commission to direct and complete such surveys of said river, between the city of Alton, in the State of Illinois, and mouths of said river, as may now be in progress, and to make such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations, hydrographical and topographical, as may be deemed necessary by said commission, to enable it to perform its duties and to carry out the objects of this act with the greatest advantage to the public interests, and to enable said commission to complete such surveys, and to make such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations; and the Secretary of War shall, when requested by said commission, detail from the Engineer Corps of the Army such officers and men as may be necessary, and shall place in the charge and for the use of said commission such vessel or vessels and such machinery and instruments as may be under his control and may be deemed necessary; and the said commission may, with the approval of the Secretary of War, employ such additional force and assistants, and provide, by purchase or otherwise, such vessels or boats and such instruments and means as may be deemed necessary.

To accomplish that purpose the bill proposes to appropriate "$250,000 for the payment of the salaries herein provided for, and of the necessary expenses incurred in the completion of such surveys." The proposition, therefore, is after these sections are eliminated to appoint a commission to complete surveys already commenced, and to make such additional surveys and investigations in relation to the improvement of the Mississippi River as this commission may judge necessary and proper; and we are now, perhaps to enable them to carry out that scheme, to appropriate for the purpose of these surveys a quarter of a million of money. After placing, I had almost said, the entire Army at their command, authorizing the Secretary of War to put in their hands such vessels procured by purchase, or otherwise, as may be necessary to enable them to make these surveys, we appropriate $250,000 in less than twelve hours after having passed a river and harbor bill, appropriating some $9,000,000 out of the public Treasury!

I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury stating that there is apprehended a deficit of $27,000,000 in the revenues of this country for the next fiscal year, giving a detailed statement of what will be the receipts into the public Treasury, what will be the expenditures, already provided for; and yet with that full knowledge, with that information coming from the head of the Treasury Department that revenues of this country are to be deficient the next twelve months $27,000,000, we, after having passed a river and harbor bill appropriating $9,000,000 as I understand, gravely propose now to supplement that with another river and harbor bill appropriating $250,000 for the investigation of what improvements are necessary in one particular river.

The Mississippi is a great national highway and I understand that there are very large appropriations in the bill which passed this morning or last night, some two or three million dollars if I am correctly informed, appropriated for improvements upon that river and its tributaries; and yet we now propose to complete a survey there to find out where we may spend money. That river is a very important river, one of which the whole American people are proud, one of the greatest rivers on the globe. No one denies the importance of it to the general commerce of the country. But is there to be no limit to our appropriations? Are we to go on and take from the public Treasury money after money for the purpose of improving one particular natural highway when there are other and almost innumerable natural highways in the country which deserve attention?

Why is it that the great Susquehanna River, running through the State of Pennsylvania, the very bowels of which are filled with mineral wealth, receives no appropriation to improve its navigation, to take the rocks out of its bed and set commerce afloat from the New York line down through the States of Pennsylvania and Maryland until it gets into the Chesapeake Bay? Why is it that the headwaters of the Delaware River are not improved so that a stretch of river some three or four hundred miles long, which is now comparatively useless to commerce, may be utilized? Why is it that the Columbia River, second only to the Mississippi I believe, is only navigable some one hundred and fifty miles from its mouth because of obstructions, and we only appropriate $100,000 to the building of a canal through the Cascades, so that the Upper Columbia River, with its immense treasures of wealth, running nearly two thousand miles from its mouth cannot have the great commerce of that country flow down its current? We appropriate money to build a canal through the Cascades seven miles long, those Cascades being one hundred and fifty miles from the mouth of the Columbia, and we allow the mere pittance of $100,000. And yet in this bill we propose for a mere survey, in order that we may find out where we may spend money, the sum of $250,000 for one river, and appoint a board. Ah, I am afraid of these boards; I am afraid of all these commissions. I want to see no other offices created in this Government of this character. We have tried these commissions and these boards in this city. They are an expensive luxury.

We ought to pause in view of the present condition and the apprehended condition of the Treasury and not put our hand deeper down into it. Every dollar that we take out of the Treasury is put there by taxation of the people. There is not a single dollar that goes into the Treasury, except, perhaps, occasionally a small pittance from the sale of some public land, but what is drawn from the pockets of the people by taxation. I say to you, Mr. President, that the people of this country have borne the yoke almost long enough. I fear the day will speedily come when we shall hear the tocsin of a readjustment of the public debt, when the honor of your country may be involved on account of the extravagances which are being indulged in at present. I ask Senators to pause, and not to squander away the sweat from off the brow of the people that has been extorted by taxation and placed in dollars in the public Treasury. Let us have some regard for the men we represent.

Why, sir, there is more than one-half of the people of this country to-day that can scarcely raise the money necessary to pay the taxes that are imposed upon them. There are hundreds and thousands of families that are now taxed to contribute to the public Treasury who can scarcely obtain the necessities of life, and have to stint and limit themselves; and will no voice in the Senate be raised in behalf of them? Shall we go on recklessly squandering the money which they pay into the public Treasury? I hope we shall at least, within a few hours of the adjournment of the Senate of the United States, come to the conclusion that we have spent enough at present, and that the people shall have a little rest from this continual drain on their resources.

I will not trouble the Senate further with this matter at present. I hope the Senate will not consider this bill one of such a character as to demand the hasty action that is now required upon it.

Mr. McDONALD. I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi to give way for a moment, to enable me to have a joint resolution considered that has come from the House.

Mr. BRUCE. If this bill can be called up as soon as that is disposed of, I shall not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must insist on the regular order. It will only take a minute now. The Senator from Connecticut, in line 2, section 9, proposes to insert:

Or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. EATON. The usual limitation.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 9, line 2, after the word "dollars," insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary." That amendment is accepted. Now let us have a vote on the amendments proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri to strike out sections 5, 6, and 7?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them be stricken out. I thought the vote had been taken on that.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am very glad the vote has been taken on striking out sections 5, 6, and 7. I desire now to improve the bill by striking out sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, and 9; and then we shall have a bill for which I think all Senators can vote. [Laughter.] This is a bill not to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River; it is a bill to reclaim what are known as the delta lands of the Mississippi River. It speaks of the survey of that river. Mr. President, if there is one inch of the Mississippi River from its entrance into the Gulf to two hundred miles above the Falls of Saint Anthony that has not been surveyed, I do not know where that inch lies; and not only has it been surveyed, but resurveyed and surveyed over again.

This morning we voted, I think about $4,000,000 for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi and its branches; and now on the same day we are asked to appropriate $250,000 to resurvey the Mississippi River, which, to my certain knowledge, (for I have been on the Committee on Commerce, and was its chairman for fourteen years,) has been surveyed and resurveyed over and over again, so far as navigation is concerned, from year to year.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, this bill is for the reclamation of the lands of the delta of the Mississippi River; and what about those lands? Thirty-two million acres of those delta lands have been donated by this Government to the States wherein they lie, and now, after the Government has given these lands to the States, they come with great modesty and ask us to make the lands we have given them valuable by protecting them. Sir, we gave them the lands for the very purpose of building these levees. Putting those lands at $10 an acre, we have already donated to them $320,000,000 to build the very levees that they now ask us for $250,000 to survey. I might as well come here and ask Congress to pay for the ditches on my marsh farm. It would be just as proper a petition to make to this body as to ask money to reclaim the lands that this Government has donated to the States for the very purpose of building these levees.

I move, sir, that what is left of this bill lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the bill do lie on the table.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. For what purpose does the Senator from Louisiana rise?

Mr. EUSTIS. I desire to correct a statement made by the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana can proceed only by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the motion, if the gentleman wishes to make any statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, of the lands which the honorable Senator tells the Senate are to be reclaimed under the provisions of this bill, by the creation of this commission, not one acre, where they are on the Mississippi River, is of lands which were donated by the United States Government to the State of Louisiana. Those lands are not situated on the Mississippi River.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let us vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us vote on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CHANDLER. I renew the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] who is detained by sickness.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote to lay this bill on the table.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Anthony,	Ferry,	Matthews,	Sanders,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendments proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. BRUCE. I hope the vote will now be taken on the pending amendment and the bill be disposed of. It has been discussed sufficiently, I think. Besides, there is much legislation coming from conference committees, and I should be very glad to have this bill disposed of and out of the way. I accept the amendments offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi, who has charge of the bill, accepts the amendments offered by the Senator from Minnesota. Does the Senate give its consent to the amendments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear them reported, and I should like to vote on every amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects to the incorporation of the amendments as part of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will only take a minute to put the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the first amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 5, it is moved to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

That there is hereby created a commission, to be called "The Mississippi River improvement commission," to be composed of seven persons.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to call attention to the relations of the amendment to this bill. As it came from the House it creates a commission of three engineer officers and two civilians, and as it is proposed to be amended it puts in two civilians and takes out the feature which makes one of the engineer officers the president, and allows the president to be appointed from any member of the board. I have no objection to a board entirely of civilians or entirely of engineer officers, but I have some objection to mixing up things in this way, because I am satisfied that this is done for a purpose, and some such purpose as has actuated action heretofore in reference to other bills. The Engineer Corps of the Army have charge of surveys of the rivers and harbors, and we of the East ask for no commission. We are satisfied with the surveys that the Engineer Corps have made. We consider that that corps is composed—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island will suspend until the rules of the Senate are observed. Gentlemen standing in the rear of Senators' seats will be seated.

Mr. BURNSIDE. It does not disturb me at all. I will try to speak loud enough for everybody to hear me; but if gentlemen do not want to hear me they may talk, and it will not disturb me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Persons on the floor of the Senate should observe its rules and preserve order.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Engineer Corps is composed of men who are educated at the expense of the Government; it is a corps kept up at considerable expense to the Government now, and the officers of that corps are recognized all the world over as intelligent, scientific, industrious men, well fitted for the duties for which they were educated, and well fitted for the duties which they are performing; and no people in any section of this country that I know of demand any other officers to attend to such duties as are contemplated in this bill but those officers. They have already made surveys of the Mississippi River, and can make just as many more as Congress will order, or as the President of the United States or the Secretary of War may order. They are ready for that kind of work, and fully capable of performing it. Now, they do not come here into the lobbies of the Senate and button-hole members of Congress with a view of getting appropriations for work they are upon; they act as soldiers and as gentlemen, and remain about their duties at their posts or in their offices; and when Congress appropriates money to make surveys they go to work and make them. The Senate will remember that at the Congress before this, when we were asked to relieve a certain lot of capitalists that formed what is called the Eads Jetty Company by a donation of $500,000, I said at that time that that would not be the last time we should be called on, that the precedent would be similarly followed by other and other demands on Congress; and we have another demand this very session to the extent of one and three-quarter million dollars, or what will ultimately result in that, if not at once.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that Congress has made no donation to Captain Eads. It is true that a payment which, according to the terms of the original contract, was to be paid to him when he had attained a certain depth and width of channel, was by the act of last June anticipated a short time and only a very short time. Captain Eads did not ask any donation.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if Captain Eads does not receive all the money that is due him for performing all the work that he agreed to do? I ask that question.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Captain Eads does not receive any more money than Congress by the original act agreed to pay him.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Is Captain Eads required to do the work which he agreed to do for that money?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He is required to do the work he agreed to do for that money.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Is Captain Eads required to have a channel of thirty feet width such as the contract contemplated with him?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is another question altogether.

Mr. BURNSIDE. No; it is not another question. If I agree to shovel out a million cubic yards of earth for so many dollars, and my employer comes to me and says "I will give you those dollars if you have shoveled out seven hundred and fifty thousand cubic yards," I say he has made a donation to me for the two hundred and fifty thousand cubic yards that I have not done. That is exactly what Congress has done with Captain Eads; I predicted it. Here a bar had formed at the mouth of the Mississippi. You agreed with Captain Eads to take that out. He is not able to take it out. The men who have put this money into their pockets, dividing their interests, should have been made to carry out the contract; they were capitalists; they agreed to do this work for the Government of the United States, and before it was done they found there was a deficit and that they had paid out many millions and showed it to Congress, and they said that we had finished that work, and we need relief. That was the great work at the mouth of the Mississippi. I am not going to depreciate it in the least degree. I do say, and I say it without fear of contradiction, that the Government of the United States agreed to pay Captain Eads for a depth of channel which is not procured, and a width of channel which is not procured, and which is in the original contract.

I am perfectly convinced—I think every Senator on this floor will be convinced, if he examines this subject—that the Engineer Corps is amply able and capable of doing the very work contemplated in this bill. They are educated for that purpose; they are paid for that purpose, and can be detailed by the President of the United States to do that work without any additional pay. It is work that belongs to their corps. I told General Humphreys the other day if he did not look out, and come up here to Congress and button-hole and log-roll, he would find himself high and dry, with nothing to do, in ten years' time.

We have here an amendment on the sundry civil bill that I never saw before; I never heard it read; I never had time to discuss it. It has never been before the Senate in a proper way; it has never been considered by any committee, to my knowledge. I certainly never have considered it. Yet Senators complained that a little Army bill of eighteen pages was too long to discuss and must be put off until next winter, after it had been handled by men who considered themselves experts at least during the whole summer. That had to be put off until next Congress; but at the very last hours of the session a committee of three members of this Senate and of three members of the House can meet together and attach to the sundry civil appropriation bill one of the most important measures that has been passed this whole session. I will not say anything about pressure or anything of that kind; but at any rate, under the spur of the moment I will say it has passed, and we have to sit here with our tongues silent in our mouths and let it pass.

I do not propose that this measure shall pass without my protest and without my prediction that it is simply an entering-wedge to have a bill which authorizes a certain amount of work to be done. You form this commission with three engineers of the Army corps and two civilians. You put in two more civilians, take away the presidency from the Engineer Corps, organize a commission, and put in a man cut and dried who hangs around the lobby. Then you will have inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill two lines to the effect that the survey of the Mississippi River improvement commission is approved, and all the money necessary to carry it out is appropriated within three or four days of the close of the session, and those three lines will cost millions of dollars. I say the whole thing is a piece of management to say the least of it. It came in here by arrangement.

Mr. WINDOM. Has the Senator any reason for asserting that Captain Eads ever appeared in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not know what he did. I know he has appeared in other things, and I am afraid he will appear there; and I know he will if you pass this provision. I have nothing to say against Captain Eads except that I would like him better if he would keep away from lobbying and keep his agents away. They do not come to me much. They tried it when I first came here; and they are very respectable lobbyists, too, I can tell the Senator from Minnesota. It is necessary to speak plainly because the time is short. I would be more civil if I had two or three days to discuss this matter and an opportunity to make another speech, but I have got to speak plain sense. I say this measure ought not to pass. There is plenty of time next winter to consider this proposition. You put off the Army reorganization bill, and you can put this off and take it up next winter and discuss it. I say it is unfair to the American people to pass a measure of that kind here in the last hours of the last session.

Mr. WINDOM. I have nothing to say as to the passage of this bill and very little to say in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island. He has been wandering over a wide territory considering that he felt himself so limited as to time. If he had confined himself to any one subject or class of subjects, the limited time he had at his command would have enabled him to discuss it as he says in a somewhat more courteous manner than he adopted. He has chosen to go back into the matter recently enacted on the sundry civil bill. I am entirely prepared to discuss that subject if the Senate desires it. I did not discuss it when it was before the Senate for the reason that I admitted that through inadvertency an amendment had been placed on the bill which was not strictly in accordance with the rule, and that there was a technical objection to it. I admitted that it was through an inadvertency that it was placed there so that it did violate the rule; but that it is an amendment in which there is the slightest danger, that it was an amendment which the Senate had not before it and had not time to read, is not true.

Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island says that he had not read it. I will guarantee that he has not read one bill in twenty that have passed the Senate during this session. I will guarantee that not one in a hundred bills has the Senator from Rhode Island read which have passed the Senate; and yet, because a measure was brought in here and was under discussion by the Senate, printed, and laid on our tables, on the sundry civil bill and on the legislative bill, and the Senator from Rhode Island did not see proper to read them, he comes here and makes a charge against the committee of conference that they have done a very wrong thing; and because the Senator from Rhode Island did not see the clause of which he complains and read it, therefore the bill ought not to pass, and Captain Eads is a skunk! Mr. President, the Senator's logic is about as defective as his courtesy. I have nothing more to say on that subject. I am perfectly willing to discuss that matter that has gone by. I am perfectly willing to stand upon it. The Senate has agreed to the conference report, agreed to it without any urgency of mine; and I did not urge it, simply because of the technical rule which had been violated by mistake. I think it is not proper for the Senator from Rhode Island to drag that matter again before the Senate for debate, when we are so limited for time in discussing the question under consideration.

As to what Captain Eads has done in the improvement of the Mississippi River, as to the amount of money that has been paid him, I stated the other day, and I restate in the presence of the Senator from Rhode Island, that Captain Eads has saved this Government from twelve to fifteen million dollars by the contract he took. We should have entered upon the construction of a canal that would have cost under the engineering service of this Government—and the expenditure would have been made under it—from twelve to fifteen million dollars before it would have been completed, and we should not have had as good a channel to the Gulf to-day as we have by paying a little less than $4,000,000.

This is the sort of jobbery of which the Senator from Rhode Island complains. This is the result of the lobby which, as he says, is hanging around these halls. I have never seen anybody as lobbyist in that matter connected with the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River. Captain Eads, as I said a day or two ago, came before the Senate when this matter was under consideration by the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard and presented the plan he had prepared for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River. It was adopted by the Congress of the United States, and by its adoption the Government has saved from ten to twelve million dollars. That is all there is in that case.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota if the amendment of which I spoke had been attached to any bill prior to its attachment to the sundry civil bill?

Mr. WINDOM. Every one of the amendments to which the Senator refers was either in the sundry civil or in the legislative bill and before the Senate.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I speak of the amendment with reference to the transfer of the surveys.

Mr. WINDOM. The amendment with reference to the transfer of the surveys—every one was in one or the other of those bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And had been struck out of both of them.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Vermont says that it had been stricken out of both of them. That is true; the amendment was stricken out at the instance of the Committee on Appropriations, and yet it was before the Senate precisely as every other amendment is which is stricken out, and yet it is the subject of settlement in the conference committee. It cannot be said not to have been brought to the attention of the Senate, any more than any other proposition which has been struck out and has been upon our tables in any other bill, so that the Senator cannot say he had not had a chance to read it. It had been reported, passed by the House of Representatives, laid upon his table, so that if he did not read it it was his own fault.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Senator from Minnesota is quite right in saying I do not read every bill presented and considered in the Senate. He is quite right as to that. I exercise probably as much industry as any other Senator in reading bills and in looking after them. If this amendment was before the committee and considered in the committee and stricken out, very likely I did not read it. It certainly was not brought before the Senate and discussed and brought to my attention. I do not read all portions of bills stricken out in committee. The Senator is right to that extent, and I am willing to say I am wrong; but I insist that it was not before the Senate, and I was not called upon to act upon it in any way, because it was stricken out by the committee.

With reference to my decorum, I am perfectly willing to leave that to the Senate. In fact I checked myself when I found my language was becoming too strong. I have felt very strongly about methods of legislation sometimes, and I think I have a right to express myself strongly, but I do not confess at all in the least degree that I have been discourteous to the Senator or anybody else. I am perfectly willing to leave that to the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator himself spoke of a lack of time for compelling him to speak in that way, and I was referring to that.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Not lack of time compelling me to speak discourteously. That I beg to say I have never done with reference to any Senator on this floor in open session.

Mr. WINDOM. Not intentionally, but still the same in effect in the mode in which the Senator referred to the action of the Senate.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg pardon. If I ever said anything discourteous to any Senator, I simply beg pardon for it.

Now, I was speaking of this amendment in the second section. When it comes to the other amendments I propose to speak to them. I made my objection to this, and simply drew a parallel to the legislation. That was all I did. I simply desired to warn the Senate by referring to an accident of legislation of the danger of amending these sections in that way. That is what I did, and I think I have a right to draw parallels and I have a right to make an instance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it desirable and indispensable that there should be a short executive session, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The question being put, it was declared that the yeas appeared to prevail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I shall not vote.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—16.
Anthony,	Chandler,	Edmunds,	McMillan,
Booth,	Conover,	Ferry,	Plumb,
Burnside,	Davis of Illinois,	Hamlin,	Sargent,

Conkling,	Kernan,	Randolph,
Davis of W. Va.,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] in line 5 of section 1, to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

To be composed of seven persons.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EATON. Is this perfectly satisfactory to the southern Senators?

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the amendment will not prevail. I think as good a commission could come from the War Department as we have now.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.] If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. McDONALD, (when his name was called.) On this bill I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—26.
Bailey,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ferry,	Shields,

Harris,	Kirkwood,	Paddock,	Wadleigh,
Howe,	McCreery,	Patterson,	Wallace.
Ingalls,	McDonald,	Randolph,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the next amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. TELLER. I think as we go along we ought to have an amendment to the next section. I do not know whether or not it is intended to go through the bill regularly; if not, I will offer an amendment.

Mr. EATON. Let the other amendments of the Senator from Minnesota be voted on and perfect the bill in this particular before we consider other amendments.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the amendment has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota offered several amendments, all designed to carry out one purpose.

Mr. TELLER. Then I shall wait until we get through with those amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 14, noes 20; no quorum voting.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6362) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 393) for the relief of the widows and heirs of Rodrick Shelton and others;

A bill (S. No. 934) for the relief of H. M. Billingsley;

A bill (S. No. 959) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits;

A bill (S. No. 1087) to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on the public lands;

A bill (S. No. 1685) to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 31) approving the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the claim of Anna M. Clarke.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4318) to provide for the organization of the Mississippi River improvement commission, and for the correction, permanent location, and deepening of the channel and the improvement of the navigation of said Mississippi River, and the protection of its alluvial lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) On the motion to amend the bill in the second section the vote discloses no quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Since which we have received a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRUCE. There is evidently a quorum present. I suggest that the vote be again taken by a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the Chair to ascertain whether there is a quorum here, since it appears that we had no quorum and received a message from the House of Representatives and are proceeding to debate. I wish the Chair would count the Senate or do something to have it appear that a quorum is present, if it is of any constitutional consequence.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. HARRIS. House bill No. 4579, that has just been returned from the House of Representatives—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last vote disclosed the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands unanimous consent was given to taking the vote again.

Mr. MAXEY. Let the amendment be reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is on page 1, section 2, line 2, to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

Mr. MAXEY. That has been already adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was adopted on a yea and nay vote.

Mr. EATON. No; that has not been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to amend the bill in the second section. No action has been taken on that amendment.

Mr. EATON. I simply desire to say to the members of the Senate that, having adopted the amendment changing the word "five" to "seven," in line 5 of section 1—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate proceeds by unanimous consent. The last vote taken disclosed the absence of a quorum. Unanimous consent has been given to a new division for the purpose of ascertaining the presence of a quorum.

Mr. EATON. I hope the Senate will allow me to state the fact—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will proceed, no objection being made.

Mr. EATON. I simply wish to state that if the Senate are disposed to keep in the amendment they have already made in the first section, they will proceed to vote as they did before for the amendment in the second section, for it merely makes the commission consist of the same number of officers named in the first section. That is all. It is the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the second section.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for a call of the Senate.

Mr. GORDON, (to Mr. HARRIS.) Call for the yeas and nays. That is better.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is manifestly a quorum present. I think if the Senate will divide again and Senators be called on to vote, it will develop a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it in order to demand the yeas and nays on this question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee demands the enforcement of the rule, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the rule required that the Chair should call the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to ask for the yeas and nays on this motion at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and fifty-two Senators answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the second section the yeas and nays are demanded, the Chair understands.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to present at this time a report, not for debate, but to go on the files.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HILL. There was an intention of the Senate some time ago to pass all the bills removing disabilities; but there was one omitted. I should like to ask unanimous consent to take it up and pass it. It is the bill (H. R. No. 5333) for the removal of the political disabilities of John McIntosh Kell, of Georgia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Georgia after the Senator from Vermont.

BENJAMIN P. RUNKLE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, which was instructed by a resolution of the Senate of the 10th of January, 1878, to inquire into certain questions of law relating to one Benjamin P. Runkle and his connection with the Army of the United States, to return the resolution with the report and sundry papers, that I have sent to the Secretary's office, as they are too bulky to present here. I ask that the report and accompanying papers be printed and placed in the files.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report and the accompanying papers will be printed and placed in the files.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to state in connection with the report just made that it is made by a majority of the committee. There were members of the committee who did not agree to the report.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BECK, it was Ordered, That C. P. Birkett have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case subject to the rules of the Senate, the matter having been referred to the Court of Claims.

DISTRICT STREET RAILROADS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the levee bill which we have had under consideration will be completed. It will only take a few moments to pass it.

Mr. HILL. It will only take a few moments to consider the disability bill I have referred to. I do not know how long the Senator's bill will take.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to a privileged question. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 4579 have agreed on a report, and the report has been concurred in by the House. I ask the Senate to disagree to the report, further insist upon its amendments, and ask for a new conference, for the reason that I find the clerk of the committee has made a mistake in the lines at which certain amendments should come in, and it is necessary that the report should be corrected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be laid before the Senate. The Secretary read the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to sections 1 and 2, and the Senate recede from its amendment to section 3, with the following amendments:

Section 3, line 20, after the word "same," insert the word "proportionate."

Section 3, line 20, strike out the words "or less."

Section 3, line 20, after the word "charged," insert the following: "or may hereafter be charged."

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
E. H. ROLLINS,
A. S. MERRIMON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILLIAM CLAFLIN,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
G. W. HENDEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee to ask the Senate to disagree to this report, that the House may be advised of the fact of disagreement and a new conference appointed.

Mr. HARRIS. The chairman of the committee of the House is already advised of the fact and desires that we should disagree and ask for a new conference in order that we may correct the mistake that has been made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call attention to what I heard read there in the form in which the action of the committee is put, where the Senate recedes from its own amendment and agrees to it in a different form. That, I submit to the honorable Senator from Tennessee, is entirely irregular and undoubtedly it was an accident in making up the report. The statement should be, if you wish to accomplish the object, that the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment and agrees to it modified so and so; but the Senate cannot recede from its own amendment and agree to it in some other form. I dare say that also is a mere accident of the clerk.

Mr. HARRIS. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely call attention to it at this time because the report has to go back.

The report was non-concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall a message be sent to the House of Representatives with a request for a new conference? The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4318) to provide for the organization of the Mississippi River improvement commission, and for the correction, permanent location, and deepening of the channel and the improvement of the navigation of said Mississippi River, and the protection of its alluvial lands. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] in line 2, section 2, to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

Mr. COCKRELL. I only desire to say that the adoption of this amendment will be in consonance with the amendment already adopted. It will put into this commission two civil engineers. I hold in my hand a communication from the most eminent civil engineers in the United States, addressed to the chairman of the committee reporting this bill, [Mr. BRUCE,] suggesting substantially the identical amendments which have been proposed by the Senator from Minnesota. This letter is signed by Thomas Doane, Isaiah S. P. Weeks, Edward S. Philbrick, Albert H. Howland, George L. Rice, Ernest W. Bowditch, and Joseph P. Davis, the engineers who constructed the Hoosac tunnel, and the consulting engineers of the city of Boston and State of Massachusetts, and it is no reflection upon the Army engineers; it is simply for the Army engineers and the Coast Survey to complete the work, and the civil engineers to aid them in devising the plan, in approving the plans and details of their work, and in making suggestions, and there is no conflict with and no reflection upon the Army engineers. I hope the Senate will now vote and adopt these amendments of the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is in section 2, line 2, to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McDONALD, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL.] If he were present, I should vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. SARGENT, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this bill with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. McDONALD, (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called.) My colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] My colleague is detained at his room by illness.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] I do not know how he would vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota the yeas are 25, the nays are 12. No quorum has voted.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Is my vote recorded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I voted "yea."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that my vote be recorded. I vote "nay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot receive votes. The vote has been announced.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Excuse me.

Mr. SARGENT. Does not the vote of the Senator from New Hampshire make a quorum?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does not.

Mr. SPENCER. May I vote, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is too late.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the roll be called again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the roll was called through on this question and the result announced, disclosing no quorum. There is evidently a quorum here.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Two or three Senators have come in since the vote was taken. There can be no objection to their voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I made the objection, because I do not believe in this notion of sporadic voting, and if you do it in one instance you will in another. I think it is well, even on the last day of the session, to pay some slight regard to the rules of procedure.

Mr. SARGENT. The friends of the bill are so much in favor of it that they have paired with those who are disposed to stay here and do the business of the Senate. I am unable to vote because some friend of the bill who wanted to go off has paired with me, and I think there are other Senators in the same position.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is not a quorum of the Senate present according to the last vote.

Mr. GARLAND. I move a call of the Senate to see whether there is a quorum here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called for that purpose.

The Secretary called the roll, and forty-six Senators answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McDONALD, (when his name was called.) On this bill I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The Secretary resumed and concluded the calling of the roll.

Mr. McDONALD. That there may be a quorum I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SARGENT. I will vote as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] would vote if he were here. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Bailey,	Eustis,	Kernan,
Barnum,	Garland,	Lamar,
Beck,	Gordon,	McPherson,
Bruce,	Harris,	Maxey,
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Merrimon,
Coke,	Hill,	Paddock,
Conover,	Jones of Florida,	Patterson,
Dorsey,	Jones of Nevada,	Sargent,
Eaton,	Kellogg,	Shields,

NAYS—10.

Anthony,	Conkling,	McMillan,	Teller.
Booth,	Edmunds,	Matthews,
Burnside,	McDonald,	Rollins,

ABSENT—33.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution directing the Clerk of the House to make a correction in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, in the clause relative to the transportation of the mails by railroad; and also directing him to correct the conference report on said bill to conform therewith.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4872) granting a right of way across Water Shops Pond in Springfield, Massachusetts, to the Springfield and New London Railroad Company, reported it without amendment.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DORSEY. I present the report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas rises to a privileged question, the report of the conference committee on the Post-Office appropriation bill; which will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 16, and 18.

And agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Add at the end of said amendment the following: "Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, may send and receive through the mail free all public documents printed by order of Congress; and the name of each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House shall be written thereon with the proper designation of the office he holds, and the provisions of this section shall apply to each of the persons named herein until the first Monday of December following the expiration of their respective terms of office."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$425,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$90,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$9,150,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$5,457,376.10."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

SEC. 3. The Postmaster-General shall, in all cases, decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed.

SEC. 4. That all cars or parts of cars used for the railway mail service shall be of such style, length, and character, and furnished in such manner, as shall be required by the Postmaster-General, and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, and lighted by and at the expense of the railroad companies.

SEC. 5. That the Postmaster-General shall deduct from the pay of the railroad companies, for every failure to deliver a mail within its schedule time, not less than one-half of the price of the trip, and where the trip is not performed, not less than the price of one trip, and not exceeding, in either case, the price of three trips: Provided, however, That if the failure is caused by a connecting road, then only the connecting road shall be fined. And where such failure is caused by unavoidable casualty, the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, may remit the fine. And he may make deductions and impose fines for other delinquencies.

SEC. 6. That the Postmaster-General shall request all railroad companies transporting the mails to furnish, under seal, such data relating to the operating, receipts, and expenditures of such roads as may, in his judgment, be deemed necessary to enable him to ascertain the cost of mail transportation and the proper compensation to be paid for the same; and he shall, in his annual report to Congress, make such recommendations, founded on the information obtained under this section, as shall, in his opinion, be just and equitable.

SEC. 7. That mailable matter shall be divided into four classes:

- First, written matter;
- Second, periodical publications;
- Third, miscellaneous printed matter;
- Fourth, merchandise.

SEC. 8. Mailable matter of the first class shall embrace letters, postal cards, and all matters wholly or partly in writing, except as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 9. That on mailable matter of the first class, except postal cards and drop-letters, postage shall be prepaid at the rate of three cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof; postal cards shall be transmitted through the mails at a postage charge of one cent each, including the cost of manufacture; and drop-letters shall be mailed at the rate of two cents per half ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and one cent for each half ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established. The Postmaster-General may, however, provide by regulation for transmitting unpaid and duly certified letters of soldiers, sailors, and marines in the service of the United States to their destination, to be paid on delivery.

SEC. 10. That mailable matter of the second class shall embrace all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals, and as frequently as four times a year, and are within the conditions named in sections 12 and 14.

SEC. 11. Publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at two cents a pound or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law.

SEC. 12. That matter of the second class may be examined at the office of mailing, and if found to contain matter which is subject to a higher rate of postage, such matter shall be charged with postage at the rate to which the inclosed matter is subject: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit the insertion in periodicals of advertisements attached permanently to the same.

SEC. 13. That any person who shall submit, or cause to be submitted, for transportation in the mails, any false evidence to the postmaster relative to the character of his publication, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500.

SEC. 14. That the conditions upon which a publication shall be admitted to the second class are as follows:

First. It must regularly be issued at stated intervals, as frequently as four times a year, and bear a date of issue, and be numbered consecutively.

Second. It must be issued from a known office of publication.

Third. It must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

Fourth. It must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and having a legitimate list of subscribers: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation or for circulation at nominal rates.

SEC. 15. That foreign newspapers and other periodicals of the same general character as those admitted to the second class in the United States may, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, on application of the publishers thereof or their agents, be transmitted through the mails at the same rates as if published in the United States. Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to allow the transmission through the mails of any publication which violates any copyright granted by the United States.

SEC. 16. That publishers of matter of the second class may, without subjecting it to extra postage, fold within their regular issues a supplement; but in all cases the added matter must be germane to the publication which it supplements, that is to say, matter supplied in order to complete that to which it is added or supplemented, but omitted from the regular issue for want of space, time, or greater convenience, which supplement must in every case be issued with the publication.

SEC. 17. That mail matter of the third class shall embrace books, transient newspapers, and periodicals, circulars, and other matter wholly in print, (not included in section 12.) proof-sheets, corrected proof-sheets, and manuscript copy accompanying the same, and postage shall be paid at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fractional part thereof, and shall fully be prepaid by postage-stamps affixed to said matter. Printed matter other than books received in the mails from foreign countries under the provisions of postal treaties or conventions shall be free of customs duty, and books which are admitted to the international mails exchanged under the provisions of the universal postal union convention may, when subject to customs duty, be delivered to addressees in the United States under such regulations for the collection of duties as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 18. That the term "circular" is defined to be a printed letter, which, according to internal evidence, is being sent in identical terms to several persons. A circular shall not lose its character as such when the date and the name of the addressee and of the sender shall be therein written, nor by the correction of mere typographical errors in writing.

SEC. 19. That "printed matter" within the intendment of this act is defined to be the reproduction upon paper, by any process except that of handwriting, of any words, letters, characters, figures, or images, or of any combination thereof, not having the character of an actual and personal correspondence.

SEC. 20. That mailable matter of the fourth class shall embrace all matter not embraced in the first, second, or third class, which is not in its form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise damage the contents of the mail-bag, or harm the person of any one engaged in the postal service, and is not above the weight provided by law, which is hereby declared to be not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof, except in case of single books weighing in excess of that amount, and except for books and documents published or circulated by order of Congress, or official matter emanating from any of the Departments of the Government or from the Smithsonian Institution, or which is not declared non-mailable under the provisions of section 393 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of July 12, 1876, or matter appertaining to lotteries, gift concerts, or fraudulent schemes or devices.

SEC. 21. That all matter of the fourth class shall be subject to examination and to a postage charge at the rate of one cent an ounce or fraction thereof, to be prepaid by stamps affixed. If any matter excluded from the mails by the preceding section of this act, except that declared non-mailable by section 393 of the Revised Statutes as amended, shall, by inadvertence, reach the office of destination, the same shall be delivered in accordance with its address: Provided, That the party addressed shall furnish the name and address of the sender to the postmaster at the office of delivery, who shall immediately report the facts to the Postmaster-General. If the person addressed refuse to give the required information, the postmaster shall hold the package subject to the order of the Postmaster-General. All matter declared non-mailable by section 393 of the Revised Statutes as amended, which shall reach the office of delivery, shall be held by the postmaster at the said office subject to the order of the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 22. That mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, mark, or sign thereon or therein in addition to the original print, except as herein provided, to wit, the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent, and index figures of subscription-book, either written or printed, the printed title of the publication, the printed name and address of the publisher or sender of the same, and written or printed words or figures, or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end. Upon matter of the third class, or upon the wrapper inclosing the same, the sender may write his own name or address thereon, with the word "from" above and preceding the same, and in either case may make simple marks intended to designate a word or passage of the text to which it is desired to call attention. There may be placed upon the cover or blank leaves of any book or of any printed matter of the third class a simple manuscript dedication or inscription that does not partake of the nature of a personal correspondence. Upon any package of matter of the fourth class the sender may write or print his own name and address, preceded by the word "from," and there may also be written or printed the number and names of the articles inclosed; and the sender thereof may write or print upon or attach to any such article by tag or label a mark, number, name, or letter for the purpose of identification.

SEC. 23. That matter of the second, third, or fourth class containing any writing or printing other than indicated in the preceding section, or made in the manner other than therein indicated, shall not be delivered except upon the payment of postage for matter of the first class, deducting therefrom any amount which may have been prepaid by stamps affixed to such matter; and any person who shall conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class in that of a lower class, and deposit, or cause the same to be deposited, for conveyance by mail, at a less rate than would be charged for both such higher and lower class matter, shall, for every such offense, be liable to a penalty of $10; Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent publishers of the second class and news-agents from inclosing in their publications, bills, receipts, and orders for subscriptions thereto; but such bills, receipts, and orders shall be in such form as to convey no other information than the name, location, and subscription price of the publication or publications to which they refer.

SEC. 24. That the Postmaster-General may prescribe, by regulation, the manner of wrapping and securing for the mails all packages of matter not charged with first-class postage, so that the contents of such packages may be easily examined; and no package the contents of which cannot be easily examined shall pass in the mails, or be delivered at a less rate than for matter of the first class.

SEC. 25. That publications of the second class, one copy to each actual subscriber residing in the county where the same are printed, in whole or in part, and published, shall go free through the mails; but the same shall not be delivered at letter-carrier offices, or distributed by carriers, unless postage is paid thereon at the rate prescribed in section 13 of this act; Provided, That the rate of postage on newspapers, excepting weeklies, and periodicals not exceeding two ounces in weight, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, shall be uniform at one cent each; periodicals weighing more than two ounces shall be subject, when delivered by such carriers, to a postage of two cents each, and these rates shall be prepaid by stamps affixed.

SEC. 26. That all mail matter of the first class upon which one full rate of postage has been prepaid shall be forwarded to its destination, charged with the unpaid rate, to be collected on delivery; but postmasters, before delivering the same, or any article of mail matter upon which prepayment in full has not been made, shall affix, or cause to be affixed, and canceled, as ordinary stamps are canceled, one or more stamps equivalent in value to the amount of postage due on such article of mail matter, which stamps shall be of such special design and denomination as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, and which shall in no case be sold by any postmaster nor received by him in prepayment of postage. That in lieu of the commission now allowed to postmasters at offices of the fourth class upon the amount of unpaid letter-postage collected, such postmasters shall receive a commission upon the amount of such special stamps so canceled, the same as now allowed upon postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and newspaper and periodical stamps, canceled as postages on matter actually mailed at their offices: Provided, The Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, prescribe instead such regulation therefor at the offices where free delivery is established as, in his judgment, the good of the service may require.

SEC. 27. That any postmaster or other person engaged in the postal service who shall collect, and fail to account for, the postage due upon any article of mail matter which he may deliver, without having previously affixed and canceled such special stamps, as hereinbefore provided, or who shall fail to affix such stamp, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of $50.

SEC. 28. That any person who shall use, or attempt to use, in payment of postage, any canceled postage-stamp or postage-stamps, whether the same have been before used or not, or who shall by any means remove, or attempt to remove, or assist in removing, marks from any postage-stamp or postage-stamps, with intent to use the same in payment of postage, or who knowingly shall have in his possession any postage-stamp or postage-stamps canceled, with intent to use the same, or from which such cancellation marks have been removed, or who shall sell or offer to sell any such stamp or stamps, or who shall use or attempt to use the same in payment of postage, or who shall remove the superscription from any stamped envelope or postal card that has once been used in the payment of postage, with intent to again use the same for a like purpose, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each offense, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 29. The provisions of the fifth and sixth sections of the act entitled "An act establishing post-routes, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, for the transmission of official mail matter, be, and they are hereby, extended to all officers of the United States Government, and made applicable to all official mail matter transmitted between any of the officers of the United States, or between any such officer and either of the Executive Departments or officers of the Government, the envelopes of such matter in all cases to bear appropriate indorsement containing the proper designation of the office from which the same is transmitted, with a statement of the penalty for their misuse. And the provisions of said fifth and sixth sections are hereby likewise extended and made applicable to all official mail matter sent from the Smithsonian Institution: Provided, That this act shall not extend or apply to pension agents or other officers who receive a fixed allowance as compensation for their services, including expenses for postage.

SEC. 30. That section 3955 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "The Postmaster-General, whenever he may deem it consistent with the public interest, may accept or require new surety upon any contract existing or hereafter made for carrying the mails, in substitution for and release of any existing surety."

SEC. 31. Any person performing the duties of postmaster, by authority of the President, at any post-office where there is a vacancy for any cause, shall receive for the term for which the duty is performed the same compensation to which he would have been entitled if regularly appointed and confirmed as such postmaster; and all services heretofore rendered in like cases shall be paid for under this provision.

SEC. 32. That so much of this act as is embraced in sections 4 to 30, both inclusive, shall take effect from the 1st day of May, 1879; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. President, the conference report that the Secretary is reading is precisely the bill that was passed by the Senate and reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I suggest that the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this is a very extraordinary conference report; it is either introducing an entire new scheme from that which was in the Senate amendments, or else the report itself is stranger than any one I ever heard. I do not think that we ought to have any such headlong haste that we shall not know what the conference put in in that way. Whether what is now being read was in the bill before in that form, I do not know. The Senator from Arkansas says that part of it was there and part of it is left out. I think it would not be perhaps asking too much before we swallow it, that we should hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to have it read.

Mr. FERRY. There is here nothing more than was passed by the Senate. I reiterate what was stated by the Senator from Arkansas. It is simply the classification. The registration has been stricken out; the provision for compensation to railroads upon space instead of weight has been stricken out in order to accord with the House, so that it leaves simply the classification of mail matter.

Mr. DORSEY. That is left exactly as the Senate passed it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we could put the conferees into the Journal so as to have the everlasting proof of this fact, then it would do. As it is, I should be glad to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 24. That the Postmaster-General may prescribe, by regulation, the manner of wrapping and securing for the mails all packages of matter not charged with first-class postage, so that the contents of such packages may be easily examined; and no package the contents of which cannot be easily examined shall pass in the mails, or be delivered at a less rate than for matter of the first class.

SEC. 25. That publications of the second class, one copy to each actual subscriber residing in the county where the same are printed, in whole or in part, and published, shall go free through the mails; but the same shall not be delivered at letter-carrier offices, or distributed by carriers, unless postage is paid thereon at the rate prescribed in section 13 of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know if the bill about which this report is being read is in possession of the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was not sent up with the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I make the point of order that we cannot agree to the report until we have the bill, so as to see whether we can recede.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point of order is that we cannot agree or disagree to this report until the bill is in our possession.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the papers are in the possession of the House of Representatives for enrollment.

Mr. BLAINE. So far as this is concerned, the printed bill will answer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see the record upon which we are voting, if that is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is entirely in order. No principle of parliamentary law is better settled than that every Senator is entitled to have that read upon which he is called to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what easy ways we have fallen into in the last days of this liberal Congress that we have got to a point that we are not permitted even to have the bill in possession of the body to vote upon, and dispense with the reading of the report that the committee make upon it when we have not got the bill. I do not wish to be very particular; but we should have some semblance of observance.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course this part is not in the bill now; it is proposed to add this to the bill. If the Senator from Vermont had the bill on his desk it would not facilitate his understanding of what is being read. It is not in the bill at all.

Mr. FERRY. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. BLAINE. Not originally, not in the postal bill that came from the House. You propose to add this to the bill.

Mr. FERRY. This is in the Senate bill.

Mr. BLAINE. But not in the engrossed bill of the House.

Mr. McMILLAN. If there is nothing before the Senate, I have a bill—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is something before the Senate, the consideration of a conference report.

Mr. FERRY. Do I understand that the Senator from Vermont insists upon the bill being present, or insists upon the reading of the report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist upon the bill being present. I make the point of order that it is entirely irregular to proceed with the reading of this report without the bill being in the possession of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that we may know how the conference committee has agreed, and what has been done with the bill.

Mr. HOAR. What is before the Senate? If the point of order be well taken, that ends this conference report.

Mr. BLAINE. We are waiting for the bill to come in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If Senators will be seated the Chair will state what is before the Senate.

Mr. DORSEY. I fear that it is now utterly impracticable to get this bill enrolled to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The engrossed bill is called for; and in the mean time the Senate will resume the consideration of the matter upon which it was engaged when this conference report was made.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4318) to provide for the organization of the Mississippi River improvement commission, and for the correction, permanent location, and deepening of the channel and the improvement of the navigation of said Mississippi River, and the protection of its alluvial lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to the bill as reported by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BRUCE] from the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 3 of section 2 it is proposed to insert the words "one of whom shall be designated as president of the commission;" so as to read:

The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint seven commissioners, one of whom shall be designated as the president of the commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

The SECRETARY. In line 6 of section 2, after the words "Engineer Corps," it is proposed to insert the words "of the Army, one officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 8 of section 2, after the word "two," it is proposed to insert the words "eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States, and one;" so as to read:

Two eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States, and one person from civil life.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to amend by inserting after "United States" the words "or a contractor;" so as to read:

Two eminent civil engineers not in the employment of the United States or a contractor, and one person from civil life.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. Before the question is put I should like to inquire if that would exclude Captain Eads from serving on this commission? If it does, I object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As amended, will the Committee of the Whole agree to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, section 3, it is proposed to insert the words "and the Secretary of the Treasury respectively;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury respectively shall, when requested by said commission, detail, &c.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me another amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Coast Survey is under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. This section puts the entire War Department under the control of this commission, and I should certainly think it would be proper to also put the Navy under its control. If they have control of the War Department, they ought to have control of the Navy. In line 11 you will notice it is provided that—

The Secretary of War shall, when requested by said commission, detail from the Engineer Corps of the Army such officers and men as may be necessary.

Then follows:

And shall place in the charge and for the use of said commission such vessel or vessels and such machinery and instruments as may be under his control and may be deemed necessary.

I think that the amendment is exceedingly proper; but if this commission are to have entire control of the Army they also ought to have entire control of the Navy. I think the friends of the bill have been a little remiss in regard to this provision. This commission is established now in perpetuity. There is a good fair sum appropriated, $250,000, for salaries and fees, and I think they ought to have something to do. If the proposition is now to put the Army, the Engineer Corps, the rank and file, and everybody under the control of this commission, I want the whole thing done magnificently and properly, and I want the Navy put under it, and also the Treasury Department, and everything else. I am for this amendment, and if its friends wish to insert any other provision that will increase the power of this commission, it strikes me we ought to put it in without any hesitation.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The engrossed Post-Office appropriation bill having been returned from the House of Representatives, the Secretary will resume the reading of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me take the bill and see it. [The bill was handed.] Before the Secretary proceeds I should like to say a word, because it may facilitate the final disposition of this matter, which I wish to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Following this conference report, and with the message by which the House of Representatives announced its agreement to the report of the conference committee, comes this resolution from the House of Representatives for the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, be directed to enroll the clause of said bill making appropriations for the transportation by railroad of the mails so as to read as follows:

"For transportation by railroad, $9,150,000; of which sum $150,000 may be used by the Postmaster-General to maintain, secure," &c.—

From railroads necessary transportation, and then certain things about clerks and so on, entirely different, of course, and as I am told by the chairman of the conference committee, from the report of the conference committee that the House of Representatives has agreed to and that the Senate is asked to agree to, because it is stated that the conference report has not been made up in the way that the conference intended, or in the way that the House wanted it.

Mr. President, in my humble judgment this is entirely irregular. If the Senate wishes to agree to this conference report making this appropriation $450,000 instead of $150,000 of the nine million, which does not take any more money but in its distribution, then it is agreed to. I shall object to the present consideration of this resolution, and it must lie over for a day, which of course ends that, and the bill will go as it is passed. I make this apparent difficulty in order that the Senator having charge of the bill may take the regular course, if he desires it, of having these papers returned to the House of Representatives, that they may take such action as they see fit, by reconsideration and recommitment, to correct this error. This is altogether too irregular and too loose to be tolerated.

Mr. DORSEY. This is undoubtedly irregular.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the question of order raised by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not raise any question of order at this moment, because we are on the question of agreeing to the conference report, which is perfectly straight; but I gave notice as I thought I ought to do, in order that the Senate might not lose time, that this resolution from the House of Representatives to change the report supposed to have been agreed upon by both Houses so as to allow the bill to be enrolled differently from the form and substance in which it was passed, is irregular, or if not irregular, as I think it is, it is a resolution which under our rules on one objection must lie over for one day. I give notice that I shall make that objection in order that the mistake may be corrected in the proper way.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not often agree with the Senator from Vermont on points of formality, but I think there is a great deal of substance in that objection, and that this attempt ought to be met on the threshold with disapproval. There is nothing in the shape of committee power so great as a conference committee. They ought certainly to include in their report all that is to be submitted to the body and let us vote upon it squarely.

Mr. DORSEY. I am glad that the Senators from Maine and Vermont have discovered that error. For six years I have been here and there never has been a session when errors of this sort have not been corrected by a joint resolution. This is an error of the clerk in making up the conference report. These errors occur in many bills at nearly every session, but this was not discovered in time.

Mr. BLAINE. I doubt the statement that errors occur in every bill.

Mr. SARGENT. There were two at the last session in one night.

Mr. DORSEY. It is not doubted at all. Looking over the conference report on my desk I discovered this error. The House had acted on the conference report, and were ready to transmit it to this body. Notice was immediately sent to the chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the House, and a joint resolution was passed by that body and brought to us. It is a matter of convenience to save time and to expedite the public business. I ask that the conference report be read and acted upon either favorably or rejected. If the Senator from Vermont wants to carry out his proposition to object, let him do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly shall.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over on objection.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask that the conference report be read and acted upon by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the order of business, and it is being proceeded with.

Mr. BLAINE. The course suggested by the Senator from Arkansas takes what he desires to have considered as a conference report outside the limits of privilege. The Senator from Vermont can object, of course, and I have known him sometimes, when he did object, to stick to it.

Mr. SARGENT. That is the whole amount of it.

Mr. BLAINE. We are passing as a conference report that which has not been agreed upon, and which the resolution shows has not been agreed upon; in other words, we are consenting to alterations in the bill which were never made, and the conference report does not present what was done by the committee of conference.

Mr. FERRY. I ask the Senator from Maine how he can make the last statement in the face of the statement of the chairman of the conference committee who makes the report that this is simply a correction of an error, and simply restoring the fact agreed upon by that committee?

Mr. BLAINE. I say until that resolution is agreed to you do not get before the Senate what you actually agreed to in conference. Am I not right in that?

Mr. FERRY. That is a different statement.

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I state. We vote to agree to the conference report, and we vote to agree to that which is imperfect and which does not represent what the conferees did. Then the conferees tell us, "You will get it exactly as we agreed upon it provided you pass the resolution;" but the resolution is not privileged, and the Senator from Vermont says "I object," and where are we? You have a conference report agreed upon which does not represent what the conferees agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. There is no possible evidence of what the conferees agreed to except their written report. The oral statement of the chairman of the committee of conference is not evidence before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. But they have prepared a resolution showing that there was an omission.

Mr. FERRY. The resolution declares there was an error, and the resolution and the report are nothing more than one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks they are two independent, distinct documents, and that the discussion of the resolution is premature.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Chair will allow me to say one word, I submit that the resolution does not show that there is any error in the conference report; it does not purport to say so. It chooses to direct the Clerk of the House to enroll a different bill from the one that the conferees of the two Houses have agreed upon; it does not recite that there is any error. I do not think it would be quite right to the House of Representatives that we should proceed to agree to this report, and thus bind them when we cannot agree to the resolution, because it is objected to, and we cannot agree to that. I believe it is too irregular to proceed in this way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is not before the Senate for its action.

Mr. BLAINE. I know that, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report of the conference committee is before the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. But in view of the fact that we know it is in our presence and on our table I make this motion, and anybody may object to it if he will, that these papers be returned to the House with a message that in the judgment of the Senate this method of correction is irregular or undesirable, in order that they may recommit it and have the error corrected in the right way.

Mr. DORSEY. I suggest that the better way to do to correct this matter speedily is to reject the report of the committee of conference and return it immediately to the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that would be the better course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a better suggestion. I withdraw my suggestion. That made by the Senator from Arkansas is much better.

Mr. SARGENT. Those of us who think it is much better not to lose the Post-Office bill, if we are not compelled to reject it, should have the privilege of voting to concur in it. I object to any general understanding that it shall be rejected. I intend myself to vote to sustain this report if I can get the opportunity.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the regular order of proceeding is to consider this conference report independent of the resolution.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the reading of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the report will be resumed.

Mr. DORSEY. To save time, I suggest that action be taken without reading. I ask unanimous consent to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent that the vote be taken on this conference report without further reading?

Objection was made, and the Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as given above.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to say a word. I wish to appeal to the fair duty that I think the Senate owes to the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives taking their resolution that we know exists here have evidently fallen into an error in supposing that the corrections which they think ought to be made will be, and have sent the conference report here agreed to with that understanding. I do not think it would be right toward the House of Representatives to agree to this report when a single objection, that we know will be made, will prevent them from having the error corrected as they desire to have it, if our conferees are willing to agree to have it in that condition. Therefore I hope as a duty of fair dealing to the House of Representatives, that we shall disagree to this report.

Mr. SARGENT. If we agree to the report, and then if the Senator sees fit to prevent the correction of this error in the very proper way the House of Representatives proposes to us to do, it is his fault and not the fault of the Senate. I trust the Senate will save this bill and agree to this report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. A single question. Is the question now to agree to the report as it stands?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As it stands, independent of the resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. I want the Senate's attention. Does the Senator from California wish that report agreed to with positive certainty that the resolution cannot be agreed to?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that anybody has a right to get up and threaten the Senate that he will take some course or another on the resolution, in order to overawe us to vote down this report. I am not influenced in my vote by any such threat. I am a Senator with equal rights with any other Senator; but I will make no threat as to my course. I simply think it is right to adopt the report; and I think it is right then to adopt the resolution; and if I have a chance I shall vote for both.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will observe that in the proper order the resolution should come first, because if you adopt the resolution first, then when you adopt the report you have a perfect account of what has been done; but if you agree to the report first, and the resolution is not adopted, you have not got a correct record.

Mr. SARGENT. It is a matter of taste. I am in favor of adopting both the report and the resolution, and shall vote for the one I have an opportunity of doing first.

Mr. FERRY. According to the statement of the Senator from Vermont (and he was correct in that respect) the report now before the Senate is a privileged question and comes first. The resolution is another matter, as stated by the Senator from Vermont, to which he proposes to make exception.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands and has stated it repeatedly. They are independent propositions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to say a word in reply to the good-natured observation of the Senator from California about my supposed attempt to overawe the Senate. It is an attempt to deal fairly. Supposing the House had not sent that resolution here at all and we had been told by our own committee that the report as presented contained a statement that had not been agreed upon in the committee, that it had been agreed upon differently but was written out and sent in not according to the truth but differently from the truth, and that the House of Representatives had acted upon that not knowing that fact, is there any Senator who would vote to adopt the report of the conference committee, agreeing to it under such circumstances? And yet that is the exact truth which appears here except that the House had information of the fact and thought they would try to correct it in a particular way. But the House of Representatives understand that this conference report that they have adopted does not contain the thing they want to have the law. We now understand, independent of that entirely, the resolution not being before us, that this conference report is not made according to the truth of the agreement of the two committees; and yet the Senator from California talks about people being too objective and overawing, when the Senate is asked not to agree to what is not according to the truth. The two committees, it is confessed, have never agreed to the provision as it stands in the conference report written, and that the Senate is asked now to agree to.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Vermont does not state precisely the fact. As stated by the Senator from Arkansas, the report proper states the truth as far as it goes; it is just what the conference have agreed to; but it does not state the whole truth, and the resolution added covers the whole truth. So far as the report is concerned, it is precisely what the conference agreed to as far as they went, and the resolution is a part of the report correcting the error that occurred, not adding matter that the conference did not agree to, but only correcting the report so far as to complete the expression of what the conference did agree to.

Mr. BLAINE. Then my friend from Michigan merely makes it that this is a sin of omission and not of commission. Here are ten sections, two of which are left out, and he says this is a true report as far as it goes, but the trouble is it does not go far enough. Nobody has intimated that something has been interpolated in the report that the conferees did not agree upon. The only point urged is that something which they did agree upon has been left out of the report, and therefore it is just as much a change as though something false had been put in, and it changes, as the Senator from Vermont well suggests, the entire character of the report. My honorable friend from Michigan will of course see at once that to omit is just as bad as to commit; and the report is far from being a truthful report of what the conferees agreed to do.

Mr. FERRY. I take exception to what the Senator states. I say that a point of omission corrected by resolution is far different from a statement in the report that was not agreed to by the conference; using the words of the Senator, an act of commission in that respect would be entirely irregular, because it would be stating what the conference committee had not agreed to. So far as the report proper is concerned, the conference committee have agreed to it. Now there has been an omission, not an omission of agreement, but a clerical omission, and the resolution is to correct the clerical omission, so that the two cover all that has been agreed to by the conference committee.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no; the Senator apparently fails to observe the offense against what is correct. It is just as great in the case of an omission as a commission. What was done last year in the case of the Hot Springs amendment was that they left it out; they did not put anything in; they just dropped out a sheet; that was all.

Mr. FERRY. Let me say to the Senator that did not vitiate the report so far as it went.

Mr. BLAINE. But it vitiated the legislation.

Mr. FERRY. It only left the report incomplete; it made the report contrary to the fact.

Mr. HOAR. They only left the "nots" out of the commandments. [Laughter.]

Mr. DORSEY. I hope in order to expedite the public business that this conference report will be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 7, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—7.
Dawes, Ferry,	Hamlin, McDonald,	Maxey, Sargent,	Shields.
NAYS—43.

So the report was non-concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the House of Representatives be advised of this fact, a new conference be solicited, and the same conferees appointed on the part of the Senate? To these several propositions the Chair hears no objection, and they are adopted.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senate—

Mr. BRUCE and others. Regular order!

Mr. WINDOM. I present the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

WM. WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. D. C. ATKINS,
M. J. DURHAM,
CHAS. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, the conference would have been able to agree on all the items of appropriation in the bill; the point of disagreement was the legislative provisions, those (to state them very briefly) relating to the test oath of jurors and the election laws or the appointment of deputy marshals and supervisors. With reference to these legislative propositions contained in the bill the conference was unable to agree, the conferees on the part of the House taking the position that the only condition upon which an agreement could be had was that the conferees on the part of the Senate should recede from all of its disagreeing votes on those points. The conferees on the part of the Senate could not accept those conditions.

I will say with reference to the condition of the public business so far as the appropriation bills are concerned, that all the bills have now been agreed to and passed by both Houses except the legislative bill, now pending, and the Army bill.

Mr. DORSEY. And the Post-Office bill.

Mr. WINDOM. And the Post-Office bill, of the condition of which the Senate is aware.

Mr. SARGENT. It perhaps will not pass now.

Mr. WINDOM. I presume there will be little difficulty in passing it. The Senate will observe that all the items of appropriation, all those portions of the bill relating to the money to carry on the Government have been agreed to or can be agreed to. The only ground of disagreement therefore is contained in the legislative provisions of this bill, and I believe that a similar disagreement has been made on the Army bill, and which is based wholly on the legislative provisions there.

Mr. CONKLING. What are the legislative provisions in the Army bill?

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] can state that more accurately than myself; he had charge of the Army bill. He will state it in a few minutes, as I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate only a moment longer.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the legislative bill. I do that for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate upon that subject. The conferees on the part of the Senate do not believe that it is possible to reach an agreement upon the legislative provisions, and therefore move to insist upon the amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE. One moment. I am not at liberty to report, because the first report is due in the House of Representatives, and it has not come from there. But I hold in my hand the second disagreeing report of the conference committee on the Army bill; and in answer to the Senator from New York I will state for the information of the Senate that the only point on which there was an irreconcilable difference was section 51 of the bill, and I will send that to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. EATON. I understand the bill the Senator from Minnesota has in hand is the legislative bill. I hope they will not be mixed up.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not proposing action. I only ask to have it read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota; but the Senator from Maine wants a section of the Army bill read for information.

The Secretary read section 51 of the Army appropriation bill, as follows:

SEC. 51. That section 2002 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States."

And that section 5529 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years."

Mr. BLAINE. The change this makes in the statutes, well known to the Senate, is that at the end of each of the provisions quoted they strike off the words "or to keep the peace at the polls." The conferees differed on that. The House insisted that they would not go on with any question of organization or with anything else unless assured that we agreed with them on that section. Of course I did not feel authorized to speak definitely for the Senate without bringing it hither to have a review and decision if desired. I offered in the conference that I would take the liberty of receding if the House conferees would produce the name of a single man in the United States who had ever been hindered, obstructed, or in any way interfered with in his right to vote by the Army of the United States. The conferees on the part of the House admitted that there was no practical trouble, though it had been there sixteen years. They anticipated no practical trouble; but theoretically and sentimentally they would not agree to have it there under any condition whatever. I thought I was representing the Senate in saying that if that was the spirit of it the Senate did not see the necessity at this particular moment, the last week of the session, and now the last day of the session, of suspending appropriations for the Army of the United States upon a peremptory demand to change a statute sixteen years old at the dictation of one branch upon the other, which nobody had suffered from, and which they said they did not anticipate anybody would suffer from.

Mr. EATON. May I ask my friend from Maine whether that great principle of English law which has obtained wherever the language has been spoken for the last one hundred and fifty years, except here within the last sixteen years, ought to continue the law of the land? I suppose that was the claim of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senate conferees maintained that that great principle of English law which we had inherited ought also to be maintained, that voting should be without intimidation and free everywhere, and that the Government ought to be strong enough to see that it was so.

Mr. EATON. This Senate nor its conferees have ever undertaken to say, I apprehend, that there was not some other way to maintain that great principle of English and American law without the use of armed soldiery.

Mr. WITHERS. I can say that a portion of the conferees on that committee believed that the presence of armed men at the polls was itself incompatible with the freedom of elections.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator from Virginia mean to be understood that this section gave permission or does now give permission for troops to be at the polls in the sense of their being there when matters were going on peaceably, or that in any case except of the rarest and most exceptional character there has ever been intimidation by troops at the polls anywhere?

Mr. WITHERS. I mean to intimate simply that the presence of armed soldiery at the polls during the progress of an election is itself incompatible with the freedom of election, and itself and of itself constitutes intimidation.

Mr. BLAINE. The exception is that the Army of the United States may be present to repel the armed enemies of the United States. Do you propose to leave that in?

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly; that is a case which no person desires to interfere with; but it is well known to the Senator from Maine and to every other Senator on this floor that there is no difficulty at all in securing a pretext to keep the peace at the polls when it may be desirable to have soldiery there.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator mean to imply that pretexts of that sort have been sought?

Mr. WITHERS. I do.

Mr. BLAINE. Where?

Mr. WITHERS. I have brought it before the attention of the Senate in one case in my own State.

Mr. BLAINE. And just one.

Mr. WITHERS. And just one.

Mr. BLAINE. Just exactly the Petersburg case; and according to the theory of the Senator, if Petersburg had been in possession of an armed mob and the city in conflagration in the hands of an armed mob, he would not have permitted soldiery to appear there to command the peace and save property and preserve life.

Mr. WITHERS. I believe that would have been a much less evil than the recognition of the principle that the Government has the right at any time, upon an allegation that the peace may be in danger at the polls, to march its soldiers there and dominate the people in exercising the first privilege of a free people.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator states an imaginary case, one that for sixteen years under the operations of the law for that period has never occurred, and it is certainly not likely to occur; and as we are on the very eve of a Congress, democratic in both branches, holding probably the sentiments the Senator does, we did not feel exactly as though the crisis was so imminent just at this moment that we must surrender at the dictation of the House.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind Senators that the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota in relation to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I was one of the conferees on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill when two earnest efforts were made to agree, but we found it impossible. The Senator from Minnesota has stated correctly that upon all questions pertaining to the appropriations, the great probability is that we could have agreed, though I believe we did not finally agree even as to them. He is also correct in stating that the House conferees insisted upon retaining that portion of the bill to which he has alluded, but it was also equally certain that the majority of the Senate conferees with equal pertinacity insisted upon the Senate amendments and maintained that each and all the provisions inserted by the House should be stricken out. There was no attempt at any division of the subjects and no proposition looking to any modification was considered. Not desiring to revive any political animosities or any discussion at this late hour, I will only state very briefly what seemed to be the condition of things: the House insisted that the armed soldiers of the United States should not be allowed to approach the polls for the mere purpose of keeping the peace, that there should be an honest jury obtained in the courts of the United States in all cases where the rights and liberties of citizens were involved, and that the States should be allowed to conduct their own elections in their own way, free from all Federal interference, and the democratic conferees on the part of the House seemed determined that unless those rights were secured to the people in the bills sent to the Senate they would refuse, under their constitutional right, to make appropriations to carry on the Government if the dominant majority in the Senate insisted upon the maintenance of these laws and refused to consent to their repeal.

They seemed further to agree, and I agreed with them, that if an extra session must be called, much as it is to be regretted, the very moment it is called the committees of both Houses would be organized and separate bills would be framed and passed as soon as possible asking the President of the United States to agree with the representatives of the States and people in repealing all laws that authorize the soldiers of the Republic to be sent by any authority whatever to the polls at State elections under the pretense of keeping the peace, and in repealing all laws that prevent men who are by intelligence and interest in the public welfare fit and competent to do justice between citizens and between the United States and citizens in the jury-box from exercising that right, thus depriving the courts of the benefit of fair jurors, and they will promptly pass another bill declaring that the United States shall not, either through supervisors, marshals, or deputy marshals, interfere with the States in conducting the elections held within the States. We insist that those matters pertain solely to the States and are part of their absolute right and that they are perfectly competent to attend to them fairly and honestly. When these three laws are submitted to the President for his approval, as they will be, and are approved by him, as they ought to be, the next Congress will in my opinion be ready to pass every appropriation bill, just as it is now, adjourn, and go home without attempting before next December to perfect any further legislation. If, however, the President of the United States, in the exercise of the power vested in him, should see fit to veto the bills thus presented to him, which I repeat will simply be, to keep soldiers from the polls, to allow proper jurors to serve who will try cases honestly, and allow the States to control their own elections, then I have no doubt those same amendments will be again made part of the appropriation bills, and it will be for the President to determine whether he will block the wheels of government and refuse to accept necessary appropriations rather than allow the representatives of the people to repeal odious laws which they regard as subversive of their rights and privileges. We have the undoubted right to repeal them in any form and on any bills we choose. Most of them were imposed upon the country as parts of appropriation bills. Whether that course is right or wrong, it will be adopted, and I have no doubt adhered to, no matter what happens with the appropriation bills.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like, if he will allow me, to understand one matter to which he alludes. What is the section of the Revised Statutes which the Senator has in mind, standing in the way of men sitting upon juries who ought to sit there?

Mr. BECK. Sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the number of the section repealed by the bill which on the Senator's motion was taken up and passed some weeks ago?

Mr. BECK. Section 820.

Mr. CONKLING. The section then to which reference is now made is that which commits to the discretion of the court on the motion of the prosecuting attorney power to exclude in certain cases certain persons. Is it to that section the Senator refers?

Mr. BECK. My recollection is that section 821, which was not repealed, gives the district attorney the power to apply an oath to jurors, independent of the acts specified in section 820.

Section 820 was repealed by the Senate on the last day before the recess in December. Section 821 was not repealed, and on motion of the district attorney it still authorizes that oath to be required, although the section which includes the men who cannot take it was repealed.

If the Senator will look at the two sections he will observe, I think, that I have stated them correctly. I have endeavored to do so.

Mr. CONKLING. Section 821 provides that:

At every term of any court of the United States the district attorney, or other person acting on behalf of the United States in said court, may move, and the court, in their discretion, may require the clerk to tender to every person summoned to serve as a grand or petit juror, or venireman, or talesman, in said court, the following oath or affirmation.

Then follows the oath.

Any person declining to take said oath shall be discharged by the court from serving on the grand or petit jury, or venire, to which he may have been summoned.

That is one section to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BECK. Section 821.

Mr. CONKLING. That is 821.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will observe section 820 would seem to make that oath improper, because no man can be excluded from the jury, even if he cannot take that oath, if section 820 is repealed.

Mr. CONKLING. To apprehend the Senator exactly, I will read section 820 of the Revised Statutes, before referring to section 821. I read now section 820, a section already repealed by the Senate:

SEC. 820. The following shall be causes of disqualification and challenge of grand and petit jurors in the courts of the United States, in addition to the causes existing by virtue of section 812, namely, without duress and coercion to have taken up arms or to have joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States; to have adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort; to have given, directly or indirectly, any assistance in money, arms, horses, clothes, or anything whatever, to or for the use or benefit of any person whom the giver of such assistance knew to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States, or whom he had good ground to believe to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms the execution of the laws of the United States; or to have counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion, or to resist with force of arms the laws of the United States.

That section, if I understand aright, declares that the reasons it recites shall be absolute grounds of challenge to jurors; so that, a challenge being interposed the only issue is the truth or falsity of the challenge, and every man found to have done any of the acts denounced, must necessarily be excluded from the jury.

Section 821 is quite different. It is as follows:

SEC. 821. At every term of any court of the United States, the district attorney, or other person acting on behalf of the United States in said court, may move, and the court, in their discretion, may require the clerk to tender to every person summoned to serve as a grand or petit juror, or venireman or talesman, in said court, the following oath or affirmation.

This section vests a certain discretion in the courts.

Mr. GARLAND. "The court in their discretion."

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, the district attorney has power, if he thinks it his duty to do so, to move at any term of a court, or, speaking of the petit jury, when any particular cause is moved, that the jury in that cause or at that term shall be required to take a certain oath, and the court is clothed with discretion to pass upon that motion; in other words to decide that in that particular instance, the prescribed oath ought or ought not, as the court shall for cause shown, determine, to be administered. The Senator from Arkansas as clearly as any Senator, will see the wide distinction between the repealed section, and the section about which he now inquires; the first section making either of the causes specified an absolute ground of challenge, which ground, being supported in fact, the challenged jurors must all stand aside, no discretion, no proceeding being permitted to leave them in the panel; the other committing to the court the discretion, on hearing, by motion in open court, for reasons assigned, to determine whether in that particular instance a particular oath should be administered or not.

Mr. BECK. Section 822 is not sought to be repealed by the House bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I need not read it.

Mr. BECK. Sections 820 and 821 are the sections to be repealed.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator must remember that we have already repealed section 820.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; it was repealed by the Senate and never by the House. What is running in the Senator's mind, I presume, is that in 1870 it was repealed by both Houses and the repeal approved by the President, but inadvertently it was replaced in the Revised Statutes after being repealed.

Mr. CONKLING. Surely the Senator from Kentucky and myself will understand each other and will not differ on this point if he will hear me. Section 820 is the section repealed by a bill which some time ago at the present session, on the motion of the Senator himself, was adopted by the Senate. Am I not right?

Mr. BECK. It was repealed by the Senate, sent to the House, but the House has never been able to act on the Senate bill.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Kentucky anticipates me, but he does so by a statement not warranted I think, and to which, on reflection, he will not adhere. The Senator who was long a distinguished member of the House, understands the rules of that body, and he will not on reflection repeat that the House, thereby meaning a majority,

"has not been able," during the days and weeks which have elapsed since the Senate passed the bill, to act upon it. The Senator from Kentucky will hardly say that. On the contrary he will be compelled to say simply that the House has not acted upon it—that his party friends have not chosen to act.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will allow me to remark that I believe I am correct in saying they have not been able to do so, because the Committee on the Judiciary endeavored to do so several times, and on motion to suspend the rules, in order to do so, they failed to get two-thirds. The effort has been made in the House on several occasions.

Mr. CONKLING. It is not in order, probably it would not be profitable, for the Senator from Kentucky or for me to assume to inform the Senate of the efforts which have been made or professed by motions or otherwise in the House to reach a particular result; I venture however to restate, and as positively as I can, that the Senate will not and cannot believe, that no Senator on reflection will insist, that during the two months, if it be two months, and I will ascertain that in a moment, which have elapsed since the Senate passed a bill—a bill so brief as to be read in one minute, the House of Representatives has not been able to act upon it. The House has not acted, and that fact will, I think, yet play a larger part than it is likely to play at this moment, should an extra session be brought about with section 820 as one of its pretexts. As I understand the posture of these two bills, to one of which this amendment is attached, the House of Representatives means that one of three things shall occur: either the wheels of Government shall stop, or the Senate shall forthwith surrender its convictions of duty, or an extra session shall be forced at which the Executive shall be summoned to succumb to party majorities in the two Houses as the condition on which the Government shall be allowed to proceed. These if I understand the Senator from Kentucky are the only alternatives, and I cannot hear and think of their pretexts without amazement at their audacity, and wrong. Long ago the law-making power enacted in substance that there should be committed to the courts of the nation a discretion under which men who had levied war against the Government of the United States might in a given instance, and for good cause shown, be excluded from a jury. Years have since elapsed, and one Congress after another has met and finished all legislation deemed wholesome and needed, and has never disturbed this enactment, and now a democratic majority in the House of Representatives, boldly tells the Senate that unless this discretion is instantly taken from all courts, and men lately in rebellion allowed to sit as jurors to try any and every cause, it will refuse to pass a bill to maintain the Army, and another bill to maintain the courts and the executive department; and the Senator from Kentucky with rather a deprecating bluntness, partly probably in justification, and partly, perhaps in apology,—I know not,—tells us that if an extra session is brought on, the House aided by a Senate which will be democratic also, will present to the Executive for signature a bill separately demanding a repeal of this statute; and he says, if I understand him, that unless the Executive submits, the two Houses will refuse to allow appropriations without which the operations of the Government must cease. The Senator informs us that the same course will be adopted touching the law under which piracies of the ballot-box are punished, a law without which there would not have been a fair election or a count of votes approaching honesty in the larger cities of the State in which I live since that law was enacted. It was enacted to guard the ballot-box in the city of New York, and the returns of elections from the thugs and the thieves of Tammany Hall, and it has in large measure guarded the ballot-box from these marauders.

Mr. President, at this moment I shall not stop to discuss the question whether some commissioner or officer or functionary with the powers of a police magistrate has ever issued a warrant, or process in a case in which he should not have issued it. Blunders, or overzeal, or even bias in administering a law, prove nothing against the law itself. If any Senator could point out an instance in which the election law has been strained or perverted in its administration, or an instance in which it has been executed with unwarranted rigor, he would not advance one step in proving that it ought to be repealed.

Do you know, Mr. President, anything human which has not been abused? Does any Senator know a law intended to curb the conflicts of men which individuals have not tried to evade or twist? I know of none; and it is not pertinent to my purpose to inquire whether either of these laws has ever been subjected to an attempt to pervert or overstrain it. When that question is pertinent, I shall be ready, however, to discuss it, and to deny some at least of the allegations we have heard. It is not pertinent now.

We are told that unless these wholesome needed laws are repealed, no more of the appropriation bills shall pass at this fast-ebbing session, and that at the next session a majority of the two Houses will virtually take the Government by the throat and refuse to let it breathe unless these safeguards are surrendered. Mr. President, for one, now and here in this presence, and hereafter in presence of the people, I am ready to meet such an issue. There will be no repeal by my vote, and especially under such affronting duress, be an extra session brought on or not.

Mr. GARLAND. Will section 820 not be repealed by the vote of the Senator from New York?

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I should not have forgotten to speak again of section 820 if the Senator had not reminded me to do so, and as he wishes me to do it at this moment, I will comply with his wish. When called upon to render an account of my stewardship in resisting this usurping attempt, I shall be sure to remember section 820. I shall not find it necessary to argue that section 820 should be maintained as a statute, or even to vindicate its original enactment; I shall find better employment for my time. I shall be able to state that the Senate, with a supposed republican majority, did weeks ago repeal section 820, and did, at the same time, by a separate vote on the same day, record its judgment that section 821 ought not to be repealed; that the act repealing section 820 went forthwith to the House—if either of the gentlemen at the desk can tell me from the Journal the day on which it went, I should like to state it now.

Mr. BECK. The 21st day of December, 1878.

The SECRETARY. The 20th day of December, according to the Journal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It passed on the 20th, the Journal shows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The Secretary has the Journal, which shows the 20th of December.

Mr. CONKLING. The 20th day of December, 1878. Making no account of the residue of December and deducting the holiday recess, January and February passed, during any day of which the democratic majority in the House, had it chosen so to do, could have insured action upon the bill, and during these months the House has acted finally on many bills, and bills reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, to either of which it would have been competent to move the bill in question as an amendment, which amendment would have been concurred in by the Senate, as everybody knew, because the judgment of the Senate stood recorded. And having all the time the power to remove from the statute-book this obnoxious section that, too, is made by the House one of the make-weights and pretenses to justify this revolutionary proceeding.

Mr. MERRIMON. What revolutionary proceeding?

Mr. CONKLING. The revolutionary proceeding prefigured by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, and which has in part passed before our eyes; that revolutionary proceeding of which any majority, any coalition, any combination, in either House, is guilty, whenever it dares to say that the wheels of the Government shall be blocked, that appropriations required by the Constitution to carry on the Government shall be refused and prevented unless the other House and the Executive under menace and dictation surrender convictions and rights. That is revolutionary, and destructive, and a plain attempt at anarchy, and disorder.

Such a conspiracy is more flagrant and astounding when its purpose is to uncover and expose the ballot-box to violence and fraud, and by striking down just barriers to open a way to wrest the Government of the country from the hands of honest and rightful majorities in the States.

It will be the more memorable because it is an act in the drama to clutch the National Government in all its branches and to subdue it to the purposes and dominion of those who by dint of fair and free elections would be baffled in the future as they have been in the past. It will be more than revolution—it will be triumphant and successful revolution when the way to dominance and empire shall be paved with just laws trampled down by the usurpation of a congressional majority.

The proceeding is an assault by main force upon the rights, and the very existence of constitutional authority.

Mr. President, he who now wields the powers deposited by the Constitution with the executive branch of the Government was not the nominee of the democratic party; he was the nominee of the republican party. If he was sincere or honest, he incarnated the creed and the purposes of the republican party. He accepted a nomination from a delegated party convention. He stood upon the declaration of principles announced by that convention, and in accepting such a nomination, he took upon himself plain, unmistakable, and high obligations. They were not technically formulated in a written contract. The more sacred obligations of man are commonly not set down and signed and sealed. The requirements of honor and trust are not those usually stated in agreements in writing, attested by a subscribing witness, stamped with a revenue-stamp, drawn technically so as to be good within the statute of frauds, and so as to leave no hole to creep out of.

The more cherished and revered duties are unwritten and taken for granted; they rest in the conscience, the honor and the understanding of those concerned. The trust assumed by one who accepts the nomination of a political organization having a creed and a faith, is of the nature I have mentioned—it is a plain and sacred trust. Whoever cannot subscribe to the creed of a party is bound to say so, and to refuse to become its exponent and representative.

If the nominee of the republican party concealed nothing, betrayed nothing, he held its tenets, and he pledged his faith to maintain them. He incarnated the principles of that organization, and those who voted for him voted against the policy, the purposes, and the doctrines of the democratic party so-called, and voted for the policy, the purposes, and the doctrines of the republican party.

Mr. EATON. "So called!"

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend from Connecticut knows that no such qualification is needed in speaking of the republican party. To be sure the republican party from the beginning has preserved among its principles all that was valuable and patriotic of the creed of the old and genuine democratic party, but being the only party now extant which cherishes such principles and traditions nobody can possibly take it for anything but itself.

Mr. EATON. I do not think anybody can.

Mr. CONKLING. There I knew we should agree. He must be young or untaught indeed who does not know the emergency of which that party came. Its history is too great, its achievements too many and too recent, its record too unlike that of latter-day democracy, to leave it possible for any one to confound it with any other political organization, last of all with that which having discarded the substance of democracy still trades upon its name. If anything was understood in 1876, or is understood now as inwrought in the principles and purposes of the republican party, it is every citizen's right and liberty to vote and have his vote counted, it is the equality of all before the law, it is protection of the political and legal rights of every man high or low—in one word it is in the privileges and rights guarded and defended by laws which the democratic party so-called has now marked for destruction at any cost, and any peril.

Mr. GARLAND. Sections 820 and 821?

Mr. CONKLING. My friend is, like Polonius, "still harping on his daughter." [Laughter.] Section 820! If that section were really dead, I could understand why its ghost should constantly haunt the honorable Senator from Arkansas; but the statute still lives, because a democratic House will not let it die a natural death. The Senate has repealed it, but a democratic House keeps it alive and stores it up as one of the makeshifts, one of the pretexts, one of the chief items of the sum it presents as its excuse for inflicting an extra session of Congress upon the country. No, Mr. President, I am not talking about section 820.

Mr. GARLAND. What is it then?

Mr. CONKLING. I thought I had indicated that I am speaking now of the election laws as they are called, the same laws spoken of by the Senator from Kentucky. I was in act to say that when these two Houses pass under the sway of democratic majorities, and they summon the executive branch to help prostrate these laws, they will insultingly ask the Executive to say that the people who nominated and voted for him were deceived into believing that his election would establish during his term in respect of his acts the creed, the purposes, the principles of the organization which chose him to bear its standard. Could I suppose that the present Executive will surrender at such a dishonoring summons, could I believe it possible that after the 4th of March has ended this Congress and its successor comes in, he will submit to the affronting behest of a majority in the two Houses and consent to the overthrow of these statutes as a condition on which the Government may proceed and its officers be paid, I should feel that we stood only on a narrow neck of time, on an isthmus hardly wider than a hair, and that the difference would be paltry between witnessing this degrading sacrifice of principle and of right now, or postponing it for a few days.

I shall reject such foreboding. I shall act in the belief that a majority of two-thirds—that being the majority necessary to set at naught the executive power—that a majority of two-thirds in both Houses representing the ideas of the democratic party will be necessary to overthrow these statutes, and therefore that the next Senate and the next House of Representatives attempting such proceedings as the Senator from Kentucky has foretold, will be arrested by the fact that the Constitution has deposited with the President of the United States one-sixth part of the law-making power of the nation. The question, therefore, is not for a day, not a question of mere temporary expediency; it is the broad question, the whole question whether the representatives of the republican party which placed upon the statute-book the provisions now in question, shall submit to their destruction, not when they are compelled to, but when they have a right to expect and believe that they will have the power ultimately to save them from overthrow.

Mr. President, for one, much as on many accounts I should deplore an extra session of Congress, I have no apprehension of it in respect of the game, for such it is, of politics, ambition, and power in which this rash and daring experiment is to be tried. As to political and party results, republicans need not fear to go to the country upon the issue which will then be made up. That a special session of Congress, called some time in the indefinite future, called to occur after the end of the fiscal year, will inflict great injury upon the country, I know too well not to deplore it. Such an arrangement is a provision for uncertainty, suspense, disquiet, perturbation—a provision for derangement in commerce, paralysis in enterprise and industry, and therefore it is to be deeply regretted—still more to be regretted if a call is to be postponed until autumn or mid-summer. But, be it early or be it late, I have no hesitation for my own part in taking up the gage which has been flung down. I have no hesitation in sitting here day after day and night after night, inconvenient as it is, objectionable as it is, owing to the haste of legislation incident to such sessions; I have no hesitation in remaining here until the gavel falls under the direction of the Constitution, ready to vote for all fair accommodations, for all reasonable arrangements, for all honest adjustments in making up the appropriations necessary to carry on the Government. When all such efforts fail, when I have done all things intended by the Constitution and the laws, I will stand, and refuse under threat to debase the statutes of the land, in order that by usurped legislative power a discredited political party may be assisted to regain the sword and the purse of the nation. Whatever may be the attitude of others, and even if a Senator or a committee can point out an example of the abuse of existing laws, still I will stand by those laws—stand by them first because I believe they are right, and second because did I believe they needed modification or deserved repeal, I would not be driven to consider them on appropriation bills under unlawful duress and menace. And there, Mr. President, I will stand, there I am willing for the present to leave this ill-judged and baneful proposition.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, this Congress expires at twelve o'clock to-day, and it is now nearly three. Many votes have yet to be taken on important bills. I have nothing more to add to what I have already stated except this: reference having been made to the bill that passed here on the 20th of December, the day before the recess, repealing section 820, I am advised by a very well-informed member of the House that it went at once to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House; that committee has never been called from that day to this, and, therefore, has been unable under the rules of the House to report it back. Twice on Mondays, when alone motions can be made to suspend the rules, the republicans have had enough members in that body to prevent the democrats from obtaining the necessary two-thirds to suspend the rules. Therefore that bill has not been acted on.

I desire to say that my information is equally reliable that while section 821 could not properly be applied to any citizen if section 820 was repealed, yet the practice, at least in Louisiana, is, and it is being done every day, to exclude jurors who cannot take that oath. I am told that Mr. Leonard, district attorney in the city of New Orleans, a few days ago in a case where forty-five persons were charged with an offense applied it, and the jurors were driven from the box because they could not take this test oath, although section 821 had been repealed as early as 1873 and was illegally inserted in the Revised Statutes as every judge and district attorney in the United States well knows, and every Senator and Representative in Congress knows it equally well. Yet it is maintained and enforced contrary to law and justice.

As to the revolutionary measures that it is said may be attempted if an extra session is had, I have said what I believe will be done. I only speak for myself. I know nothing positively as to what the democratic Congress will do. But after they have fairly tendered to the President, as they have the undoubted right to do, acts repealing the sections that authorize soldiers to go to the polls to keep the peace, and that authorize deputy marshals to order them to go there under any pretense, and acts repealing all the test oaths in reference to jurors, so that men can have honest juries before whom to try their cases, and acts repealing the authority given to the marshals and supervisors at the polls to control the elections, if the President, in the exercise of his constitutional authority, shall see fit to veto measures so just and so fair, so necessary to free government as those laws are, then I for one would again make them part of the appropriation bills and let him exercise his veto power if he determines to perpetuate these wrongs on the bills that appropriate the money necessary to maintain the Government, and let him be responsible by his veto for stopping the wheels of the Government, as he would be if he determines that such measures as these are sufficiently important to keep on the statute-book for partisan purposes to block the wheels of Government. Then the Executive and his aiders and abettors would be responsible to the country, and not the Congress that gave him the opportunity to attach his signature to necessary appropriation bills. I will not occupy the time of the Senate any longer.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I wish the Chair would state what is the question now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senate insist on its amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to inquire whether a motion to recede from one or more of the amendments made by the Senate would not now be in order and take precedence of the motion to insist?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would.

Mr. THURMAN. So I supposed. I move that the Senate recede from the amendment by which it struck from the bill of the House the two clauses beginning on line 2170 and ending on line 2203. There are two clauses in that matter which the Senate struck out; one relates to juries, the other relates to the election law; the one in relation to juries ends with the word "repealed," in line 2194. The other clause relates to the appointment of supervisors and deputy marshals to exercise authority and power at elections. I move that the Senate recede from its amendments striking out those lines from the House bill.

Mr. President, I regret very much that the fatigues of night session after night session have rendered me almost, if not totally, unfit to discuss this question. I quite agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] that it is a question of the very greatest importance. Perhaps no greater question in the form we are brought to consider it was ever considered by the American Congress in time of peace; for it involves not merely the merits or demerits of the laws which the House bill proposes to repeal, but involves the rights, the privileges, the powers, the duties of the two branches of Congress and of the President of the United States. It is a vast question; it is a question whose importance can scarcely be estimated; it is a question that never yet has been brought so sharply before the American Congress and the American people as it may be now. It is a question which sooner or later must be decided, and the decision must determine what are the powers of the House of Representatives under the Constitution, and what is the duty of that House in the view of the framers of that Constitution according to its letter and its spirit.

Mr. President, I should approach this question, if I were in the best possible condition to speak and to argue it, with very grave diffidence, and certainly with the utmost anxiety, for no one can think of it as long and as carefully as I have thought of it without seeing that we are at the beginning perhaps of a struggle that may last as long in this country as a similar struggle lasted in what we are accustomed to call the mother land. There the struggle lasted for two centuries before it was ultimately decided. It is not likely to last so long here, but it may last until every man in this Chamber is in his grave. It is the question whether or no the House of Representatives has a right to say "We will grant supplies only upon condition that grievances are redressed. We are the representatives of the tax-payers of the Republic; we, the House of Representatives alone have the right to originate money bills; we, the House of Representatives, have alone the right to originate bills which grant the money of the people; the Senate represents States; we represent the tax-payers of the Republic; we, therefore, by the very terms of the Constitution, are charged with the duty of originating the bills which grant the money of the people. We claim the right, which the House of Commons in England established after two centuries of contest, to say that we will not grant the money of the people unless there is a redress of grievances."

This course of the House of Representatives, should it continue, has been styled revolutionary. I think that every one who knows me knows that I am not disposed to extreme measures, but at the same time I am not alarmed, I have never been alarmed at the word. I shall not be frightened out of my propriety by the term "revolutionary." I shall not be frightened out of a calm, just consideration of this subject by loud words, much less by denunciation; and, therefore, I approach this question as coolly as I can possibly consider it, and I say once more the question is whether or no that power which the House of Commons has exercised for now centuries gone by can be exercised by the House of Representatives, modified to some extent only by the Constitution of the United States. Let us see if it is not a great power, and let us see what liberty owes to the exercise of that power.

Mr. President, when that great change came over the governments of Europe which resulted in making every one of them a despotic government but England alone, England was saved from despotism and an absolute monarchy by the exercise of the power of the House of Commons to refuse supplies except upon conditions that grievances should be redressed. When France became consolidated into an absolute monarchy, while Germany and Spain and Italy became in like manner absolute governments, England preserved liberty, and the only liberty that was found in the Old World, by the exercise on the part of the House of Commons of this right to say "We will not grant the money of the people of England except upon condition that grievances shall be redressed;" and, Mr. President, so firmly, so boldly, so persistently did the House of Commons insist on that right, so far did it carry it that not only the monarchs that ruled that land but the House of Lords too were compelled to submit. It is a mistake to suppose that it was a fight simply between the Throne and the Commons; it was equally a fight between the Lords and the Commons; and the result of two centuries of contest in England was the rule that the House of Lords has no right to amend a money bill. It must take it in toto or reject it in toto. It was not simply a fight between monarchy on the one side and the people on the other, but it was equally a fight between aristocracy and privilege on the one side and the people on the other. And so to this day does it stand in England, that the House of Lords has not the power even to amend a money bill from the House of Commons, but must take it entire or reject it entire.

That is somewhat changed by our Constitution, for we have followed the British constitution only so far as this: we have said in our Constitution that bills for raising revenue (which now by universal interpretation mean all money bills) shall originate in the House of Representatives; but we have not said, as it is said in England, that such bills shall not be amended in the other House of the Legislature; on the contrary, our Constitution has expressly provided that they may be amended by the Senate. The provision is this:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

That is all the change that our Constitution has made; it has secured to the Senate a right to propose amendments to such bills when passed by the House; it has provided that the Senate may concur with amendments in such bills; and in all other respects it has left us the precedent of the English Parliament as our guide; and, Mr. President, upon a necessity almost or quite as great as that which existed in England, and which led to the long contest to which I have referred.

Now, Mr. President, I agree that the Senate of the United States is not a precise counterpart of the House of Lords; I agree that the Senate of the United States is in many respects a representative body to a far greater extent than is the House of Lords; and yet there is a marked distinction between the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives, a distinction almost as broad as that between the Lords and the Commons. The Senate of the United States represents the States of the Republic. So emphatically and clearly does it represent those States that the smallest State in the Union has the same representation as the largest; Rhode Island has the same representation with New York, and no one wishes to change that; that is, no one who reads the history of this country rightly and thinks clearly wishes to change it. But while the Senate represents the States, the House of Representatives represents the numerical majority of the people of the United States. The House of Representatives, therefore, is the more complete representative of the tax-payers of the United States. The two Senators from Rhode Island, as I said, represent a small State with a population of one hundred thousand or so, while two Senators only on this floor (the same number that sit here from Rhode Island) represent the great State of New York, with more than four million tax-payers. This being the case, the Senate is not and never can be, so long as the Constitution remains what it is, such a representative of the tax-payers of the United States as is the House of Representatives. That fact was known to those who framed the Constitution; and those who will look into the history will find that when the formation of the Constitution almost failed because the small States insisted upon equal representation in the Senate, it was said in behalf of the small States that the majority of the people in the large States, the people themselves, would be protected by the power that was vested in the House of Representatives to originate all money bills; that there was no danger that the tax-payers of the country could be oppressed by this unequal representation in the Senate, because all money bills must originate in that House which represented the mass of the American people, the tax-payers of the land.

This thing was not done in a corner; this thing was not done without consideration. It was perfectly foreseen that to allow each State equal representation in the Senate was to give great advantages to the small States. It was perfectly foreseen that such a thing as that without some countervailing influence or power might result in great oppression to the majority of the people of the United States. But that countervailing influence, that countervailing power, was supposed to be found in the fact that all money bills must originate in the House of Representatives; that that House should hold the purse-strings, and should say, as our forefathers in England had said to the lords and to the king, "We will only grant supplies upon condition that grievances are redressed."

Mr. President, if there is anything revolutionary in that I fail to see it. I grant it may be an extreme measure for the House or Representatives to affix upon an appropriation bill such provisions as are contained in this bill, such provisions as have been affixed again and again upon appropriation bills, although it is no more revolutionary than it was for the Senate to affix, if my memory is not at fault, a portion, ten or eleven or twenty or twenty-one of these very sections here proposed to be repealed, in the hours of midnight, in this Senate of the United States, upon an appropriation bill. I do not see that this is that revolutionary measure which it has been described to be. And, therefore, I do not fear the result. I believe, on the contrary, that within the years that shall roll on this power of the House of Representatives to demand a redress of grievances as the condition on which it will grant the substance of those whom it represents is more likely to grow than it is to diminish.

Mr. President, it would not have been doubted, I think, seventy years ago that the House of Representatives exercised the influence in this country which the House of Commons exercises in England. We all know that according to the expectation of those who framed the Constitution, and according to the history of this Republic, in the early years of the Government the House of Representatives had the predominating influence in American legislation and with the American people. The Senate for eight or nine years sat with closed doors, even when considering legislative business, if my memory is not at fault, and I do not think it is, and it was not until the Senate opened its doors and considered legislative business in public that the great ability of its members began to give it an influence in the politics of America that it never before had possessed. The influence of the Senate went on increasing by means mainly of the extraordinary array of genius that sat in the Senate Hall, until the influence of the House of Representatives became dwarfed and amounted at last to very little in comparison with that of the Senate. I think I have seen in the last eight or ten years or more that the ancient power of the House of Representatives is being gradually restored, and the people of this country are beginning once more to look upon it as the House of Commons, the people's house in the Republic of the United States. I think it is likely to continue so to do, and that this power of the House, which has so seldom been exercised heretofore, is more likely to be exercised hereafter than it ever has been heretofore. Nor do I think that any danger is likely to result from its being so exercised. On the contrary, I think that it is much more likely to make this Government acceptable to the people, to make it a government of the people, to make it a government administered in the interest of the people, than it would be for the overshadowing influence of the Senate to continue to grow and the powers of the House continue to be diminished and dwarfed.

Now, Mr. President, having made these observations, and with no little pain to myself, for the reason I have mentioned, at this late hour of the night, I wish now to look for a moment at what it is that is proposed by the House; and first in regard to jurors. We have three sections in the statute-book on the subject of jurors, sections 800, 820, and 821. Section 800, not to detain the Senate by reading it at length, requires that jurors in the Federal courts shall be drawn as nearly as practicable in accordance with the laws of the States providing for the drawing of jurors in the State courts. Section 820 makes it a principal cause of challenge in a suit on a bill of exchange drawn yesterday and payable at sight, drawn between two partners, drawn by a partner upon a partner, drawn by a subject of Great Britain upon a subject of Great Britain, or drawn by a citizen of New York upon a citizen of New York, drawn by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNESIDE] who sits before me there, and whose service in the preservation of the Union his people have delighted to honor and to reward, upon my equally distinguished friend who sits on my right here, [Mr. SHIELDS,] who also shed his blood in defense of the Union, and who is here as a reward for his valor—on that bill drawn by the one of those men upon the other, if a suit be instituted, any man who was engaged in aiding or comforting, any man who gave to a hungry and suffering confederate soldier a crust of bread or a drink of water, is disqualified to sit on the jury. That is section 820. That bare fact, having in any way whatsoever aided rebellion, is made a principal cause of challenge which either of the parties may insist upon, and may thus drive from the jury-box a man who is called, and against whom the objection lies. That is section 820.

What is section 821? Mark it. Section 820 creates a principal cause of challenge. How can that be taken advantage of? Only by one of the parties to the suit. It only authorizes one of the parties to the suit to insist on that principal cause of challenge; but what is section 821? Section 821 provides that a person who is no party to the suit, a person who has no interest in the suit whatsoever, may intervene and may call on the judge to drive from the jury-box one man, not simply in that particular case to exclude a man from the jury-box, but to exclude from the grand-jury room and from the jury-box of the petit jury in all cases whatsoever every man who has given any aid or comfort to the rebellion against the United States; and, therefore, in the case I have supposed that my friend from Rhode Island has drawn his bill on my friend from Missouri and a suit is brought on that bill anywhere in the United States, in Rhode Island, in Missouri, in Virginia, in Louisiana, anywhere, and twelve men are called to sit as the jury, and both the parties, these two distinguished Union soldiers, are perfectly content with that jury, want the case tried by that jury, against their will, against their protest, a district attorney of the United States may ask the court to exclude from that jury-box, not only in that case, but for the whole term, every man who had given a crust of bread or a drink of water to a confederate soldier in the late rebellion. That is section 821, that a person not a party to the suit, in no wise interested in the suit, in a civil action, the cause of which accrued but yesterday, may ask a court to drive from the court-house every man who gave a crust of bread or a drink of water to a hungry or thirsty confederate soldier, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen years ago.

Mr. President, is that a law that ought to stand on this statute-book? Is that a law that any man in the world can defend with any shadow of propriety? I think not; and, until I shall hear some defense of it, I shall assume that such a law as that is a disgrace to our statute-book and a disgrace to our civilization.

But, Mr. President, suppose section 820 and section 821 were repealed? there would still be no security that impartial juries would be obtained in the Federal courts. And now I speak to be understood not alone in reference to the Southern States, but also in reference to every State in the Union; and I speak not simply in reference to the disqualifications contained in sections 820 and 821, but I speak in reference to matters that have nothing in the world to do with the rebellion. When I say that the repeal of those two sections will not remedy the evil, why do I say this? If Senators will do me the favor to listen to me for a few minutes, I think I will make it apparent to every one.

I said there were three sections relating to jurors, sections 800, 820, and 821, and that section 800 provided that juries in the Federal courts should be drawn, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the laws of the several States. That, of course, is a general provision. Now, how is that executed, how has it been executed in any State ever since that law was passed? In Ohio the State system of providing juries is one of the most admirable that exists anywhere in the world. Each county in Ohio is divided into what are called townships; in New England they call them towns. Each township has a board of trustees to discharge certain duties of local administration and government in that township. Once a year the trustees in each township send up to the clerk of the court of common pleas the names of certain citizens having the qualifications of electors in that township to serve as jurymen during that year. It is considered a great honor to be selected as one of those jurymen, and the township trustees are extremely careful to send up the names of the very best men in the township. Those names are placed by the clerk in a box, and from that box he and the sheriff in public draw the names of fifteen persons to serve as grand jurors at each term of that court, and twelve persons to serve as petit jurors, or, if two or more panels are required, then on the order of the court they draw the number necessary to constitute those two or three panels. In that way perfectly fair juries are obtained throughout the length and breadth of the State of Ohio. But how does the Federal court follow that example? The Federal court has no machinery by which it can select eight to ten men in each of the townships of the State of Ohio in each of the seventeen, eighteen, or nineteen hundred townships and wards of cities in the State of Ohio. It has no right to take the names out of the State boxes. What then did the Federal court do under the original of section 800 when it was enacted many years ago? They said, "We will follow it as nearly as practicable, but the only way in which we can follow it is to authorize certain persons to be named by order of the court who shall put in a box the names of a sufficient number of persons to constitute the grand and the petit juries in this Federal court," and consequently it was provided by order of the court that the marshal of the United States and the clerk of the court should once every year place in a box the names of a certain number of electors of the State of Ohio, and that from the names thus placed in the box they should at each term draw a grand jury, and also one or more petit juries as might be required. And that is the order and that is the procedure down to this day.

Very much that example has been followed so far as I know in almost every State of this Union. The Federal courts have supposed that that was the only way in which they could provide for a jury, in a mode as nearly as practicable like that provided for juries in the State courts by the State. That course is pursued down South as well as in the North, and what is the consequence? The consequence is that the constitution of the jury is absolutely dependent upon the will of the marshal of the United States and the clerk of the court; just such names as they place in the jury-box are drawn out of the jury-box and none others, and none others can be, for none others are put in it.

How is this power exercised? It is but two days ago that I received a letter from one of the most distinguished lawyers in the North telling me that a case in which I used to be counsel is about to come on for trial and asking me if possible to come on and assist at that trial, and saying that the only fear in the world that he had about that case was that the plaintiff was high in office as a distinguished republican, the defendant was a distinguished democrat, the judge was a republican judge, and that every man on the jury was a republican jurymen, because no other sort of jurymen were drawn from that jury-box, no names but the names of republicans were put in that jury box.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator refer to the late trial in the Federal court in the northern district of Florida?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; I said a Northern State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the Senator was referring to the abuses under this law in the trial of the democratic fraud in Brevard County, Florida, where I am told the jury was made up of men of different politics and contained a due proportion of prominent democrats, and by whom under this law as it stands democratic perpetrators of fraud against one of the most sacred rights of liberty were found guilty,—although the Senator says that under this law no democrat can get on a jury in a Southern State.

Mr. THURMAN. I have not said that, but the fact stated by the Senator from Vermont shows that they can trust honest and honorable democrats.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And it shows that they can get them, so far as that statute goes.

Mr. THURMAN. But they do not get them. I could give the Senator instances to show that they do not get them, if we were to go into particulars. But if the Senator can show ever so many cases in which the juries have been fairly constituted under this law, it is a sufficient objection to the law that the power exists to make the jury partisan. That power should not exist at all, and should be taken away.

Here unfortunately we have had partisan feeling running extremely high. We have had it running so high that I have lived to see what would have absolutely amazed me beyond the power of expression some years ago, under a view that was then entertained by every lawyer in the United States of the powers of the Federal and the State governments. I have lived to see State judges indicted and drawn up in a Federal court and subjected to trial upon an alleged failure to perform their duties as judges of States.

Mr. President, that is the state of the case. Repeal section 820, repeal section 821, and you have only removed the disqualification of having aided the rebellion; but you have still left it in the power of a political judge, who may be one of the bitterest partisans, and I can name some who are, of a corrupt marshal and a corrupt clerk, to place no names in the jury-box but the names of partisans, and to make the drawing of an impartial jury absolutely impossible.

What is it that the House of Representatives ask of the Senate? Nothing else in the wide world but that we shall join with them in providing a mode by which a fair and a non-partisan jury can be obtained.

Mr. CONKLING. Do they propose to repeal section 800?

Mr. THURMAN. They propose to amend section 800. They propose to repeal sections 820 and 821.

Mr. ALLISON. And section 800.

Mr. THURMAN. And section 800, too, I hope; if not they have made a mistake.

Mr. ALLISON. They have.

Mr. THURMAN. They ought to have done so, for they have provided a fair mode, perhaps not the best that could have been devised by long study, but a perfectly fair mode, as far as it goes, for obtaining a jury fairly. What is the mode they have proposed? They have proposed that there shall be a jury-box in each Federal court; that not less than three hundred names shall each year be placed in that box; that one hundred and fifty of them shall be placed in the box by the clerk of the court; that the other one hundred and fifty shall be placed in the box by a commissioner of different politics from those of the clerk of the court, who shall be appointed by the court.

Mr. President, I was right in saying that section 800 is not proposed to be repealed by the House. On the contrary what the House proposes is simply to compel an observance of the true spirit of section 800. Section 800 contemplated that fair juries would be obtained by requiring the juries to be drawn as nearly as practicable according to the State laws. We know very well that in no State in this Union perhaps can a partisan jury be constituted under the State law. It was the meaning of section 800 that there should be no partisan jury in this country; and it was supposed the object would be effected by requiring the juries in the Federal courts to be drawn as nearly as practicable in accordance with the State law. But experience has proved that that section is not sufficient for that purpose, and therefore the House proposes simply to amend that section by providing machinery by which the spirit and object of the section shall be enforced.

I want to know what objection any fair-minded man can make to this provision that comes from the House. Here is a provision which declares that the names placed in the jury-box shall be placed, one-half of them by the clerk of the court, the other half by a jury commissioner to be appointed by the court, and that these two individuals shall be of different politics. Is the fact that it is provided that they shall be of different politics an anomaly in our laws? Not at all. This very clause in the law which is proposed to be stricken from the statute-book, this supervisor and deputy marshal clause recognizes the existence of opposite political parties in the country and requires supervisors to be appointed from the different political parties. There is scarcely a State, or at least I know that in very many States the same things exist. In my own State we have a provision requiring the judges of election to be of different political parties. You cannot ignore the fact that there are political parties in the country, and it is therefore perfectly correct legislation to provide that persons shall be from the different political parties. There is no anomaly in that; there is nothing strange in that; there is nothing dangerous in that.

Then, Mr. President, I say I am willing to go before the country upon this issue. The Senator from New York has expressed his willingness to go before the country upon it. I am perfectly willing to go before the country upon the question whether or no the people of the United States want their cases to be tried by honest non-partisan juries or by packed juries. I am perfectly willing to go before the people on that.

So much for the jury question. The other branch of the measure proposed by the House is to repeal sections 2011 to and including section 2031 of the Revised Statutes, the sections that relate to supervisors of election and to deputy marshals. As I said before, if I am not mistaken those very sections were placed on an appropriation bill in this body. The Senate set the example of placing them on an appropriation bill in the dead hours of the night if my memory is not at fault, if I am referring to the proper occasion. I never shall forget that night. We were under the five-minute rule, when these sections and some others were moved as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. CONKLING. What sections does the Senator now speak of?

Mr. THURMAN. Sections 2011 to and including 2031.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean the election sections?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes. I think they were placed on an appropriation bill. That is my recollection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its amendments to the twentieth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, still further insisted on its disagreement to certain other amendments of the Senate, and still further insisted upon its disagreement to certain sections of the twentieth amendment of the Senate to the said bill insisted upon by the Senate, and agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT of Georgia, Mr. HESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOHN H. BAKER of Indiana, managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield to me to make a conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DORSEY. I submit the conference committee report on the Post-Office appropriation bill. I ask that the report be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators concurring in the report will say "ay."

Mr. CONKLING. I hope we shall not concur in that report quite so quickly. I should like to know one or two things about it myself. There was a defect in the report as it came before, touching a direction given in reference to a certain $150,000. I assume that has been corrected. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether the report which we now have is the same in all other respects with the report we had, and if not in what respects it is different.

Mr. DORSEY. It is not precisely the same. One paragraph has been added in regard to postal cards; a paragraph which had passed in the bill in the Senate and had gone to the House and the House had refused to concur, so that it is entirely in order for it to remain in the bill. That paragraph has been added.

Mr. SARGENT. May I inquire what new light was shed upon that subject, and why the conferees agreed so readily upon that provision?

Mr. DORSEY. I do not know that I can say any new light was shed on the subject. The Senate has been steadily for it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senate conferees gave it up before.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senate conferees gave it up before, and the House conferees now agree to waive their objection to it.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to hear it read and see how it will sound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section of the report called for will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 32. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to take the necessary steps to introduce and furnish for public use a letter-sheet envelope, on which postage-stamps of the denominations now in use on ordinary envelopes shall be placed. And the Postmaster-General is also authorized to introduce and furnish for public use a double postal card, on which shall be placed two one-cent stamps, and said card to be so arranged for the address that it may be forwarded and returned, said cards to be sold for two cents apiece; and also to introduce and furnish for public use a double-letter envelope, on which stamps of the denominations now in use may be placed, and with the arrangement for the address similar to the double postal card; said letter-sheet and double postal card and double envelope to be issued under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe: Provided, That the appropriations for postal cards and letter envelopes for the years ending June 30, 1879 and 1880, shall be available for the purchase of said letter-sheet envelopes, double or return postal cards, and double-letter envelopes: And provided, That no money shall be paid for royalty or patent on any of the articles named.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to inquire if the chairman of the conference committee knows whether on the double-card arrangement there is a patent? Is there any patent for it?

Mr. DORSEY. I understand not, and if there was the section particularly guards any payment to be made for a patent. This provision simply authorizes the Postmaster-General to issue these cards at his discretion; it does not require him to do so at all. If it is for the benefit of the Government and the interest of the Government to do so he can issue them; if not, he probably will not do it. I hope now the report will be concurred in.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like also to inquire whether the report went back to the committee of conference, in order that this might be fixed, or in order that the other matter might be fixed? I should like an answer to that question if it can be given.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator was in the Senate at the time the conference report was rejected, and he knows quite as well as I do the reasons for its rejection. I cannot go into the motives of the Senators who voted to have it sent back.

Mr. SARGENT. If the question is inconvenient I shall not insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. THEODORE F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM CLAFLIN of Massachusetts, Mr. J. C. S. BLACKBURN of Kentucky, and Mr. EPPA HUNTON of Virginia, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

DISTRICT STREET RAILROADS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to sections 1 and 2, and that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments to section 3, with the following amendments:

Section 3, line 21, after the word "same" insert the word "proportionate."
Section 3, line 21, strike out the words "or less."

Section 3, line 21, after the word "charged" insert the following words: "or may hereafter be charged."
And the Senate agree to the same.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
E. H. ROLLINS,
A. S. MERRIMON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILLIAM CLAFLIN,
J. C. S. BLACKBURN,
EPPA HUNTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the report of the committee of conference upon the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill, upon which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I may have been mistaken in saying that those sections were placed on an appropriation bill; but I never shall forget the amendment to those sections that was placed upon an appropriation bill and the scene that occurred in the Senate on the night of the 6th of June, 1872, when the Senator from Louisiana who sits on the opposite side of the Chamber [Mr. KELLOGG] moved an amendment to an appropriation bill extending the provision of the election laws, which were then confined to cities of twenty thousand inhabitants and upward, to every district in the United States. When that was ruled to be in order, then, acting as we were under the five-minute rule, we who were in the minority at first scarcely knew what to do, what we could have the time to say in opposition to that proposition to which we were so much opposed, until fortunately it occurred to me that I could move the indefinite postponement of the bill and then the five-minute rule would not apply. I did move it and then we debated it until, if my recollection is right, the broad sunlight came through that door the next day. But it does not matter and I do not want to state upon surmise whether these sections were placed upon an appropriation bill or not. That is not the thing that I wish to discuss at all. I do not wish to stick in the bark. That is leather and prunella. I want to go to the substance of the thing; and that is, ought these sections to stand on the statute-book?

I gave the other day reasons why they ought not to stand, and I do not want to weary the Senate with repetition. I showed the Senate the other day from the reports from the Department of Justice that the money expended for these supervisors of elections and these deputy marshals, instead of being expended to protect the poor freedmen of the South in the exercise of the elective franchise, were in effect used as a bribery fund at the North to carry elections; that of $202,000 expended (not two million as some of the papers got it in reporting my remarks) in the year just gone by $110,000 were expended in the single State of New York; $40,000 in the State of Pennsylvania; seven or eight thousand dollars, if my memory is correct, in the State of New Jersey, and five or six thousand dollars in one single county of the State of Ohio. And what was the result? The result was a gain of fourteen or fifteen republican members in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONKLING. Will not that always happen at an honest election?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; it will not happen in an honest election, for the very testimony that I read the other day shows how this money is used. What I read the other day from the testimony taken in one of the contested elections from Missouri is but a sample by which you may know all the others. Ex uno disce omnes. What did that testimony show? The marshal of the United States at Saint Louis did not see fit to exercise this power himself. He placed it in the hands of a man named Bernard, a noted partisan; and how did Bernard exercise this power of appointing deputy marshals? He sent for democrats whom he supposed to be corruptible, and asked each one of them as he came, "If I appoint you deputy marshal and give you the compensation provided by law, will you work for the republican party and the republican nominee?" If the man said "yes," he was appointed; if he said "no," he was turned off. Thus ten hundred and twenty-odd marshals were appointed in the city of Saint Louis by one deputy marshal. To preserve the purity of elections? No, sir, to corrupt the election, bought up with the money of the United States. What was the result? That was in 1876. The result was that the republicans carried three districts in that State that were unmistakably, and always had been at every fair and honest election, democratic districts.

I say, and I say it in the utmost seriousness, with not the least disposition in the world to exaggerate, that the sections of the law which the House proposes to strike out simply provide an immense bribery fund, used to corrupt the elections and not to preserve the purity of elections. I do not see fit to go now, I have not the time to do it, into the transactions in the city of New York last November. I will wait until the report is made in the other House by the committee appointed to investigate that subject, and until a report is made, perhaps, by the committee appointed by this body, if it shall ever investigate that subject, as I hope it will. Its attention has been called to it enough, and I hope it will investigate it. Then we shall have something authentic upon which we can speak: but we do know by the petition that was presented in the House of Representatives unmerously signed by respectable men, and I know by affidavit after affidavit to the number of ten or twenty which I myself sent to our committee, that there never was such a system of oppression and villainy inaugurated in any election in this country as was perpetrated in New York last November, if those affidavits tell the truth; not simply oppression, but barbarity. Talk about bulldozing, talk about intimidation, talk about preventing the poor colored man down South from exercising the free suffrage in this country, when in the greatest city in this land, the city that is the pride of the nation, the city that boasts itself as the exemplar of the civilization of America, such acts were done as never in the worst times, never in the highest party feelings, disgraced the annals of history.

Mr. President, I have much more that I could say upon this subject, and not a little evidence that I could lay before the Senate, but it is four o'clock in the morning. Eight hours from now this Congress will come to an end. I shall not weary Senators already fatigued by occupying more of their time. I thank the Senate most sincerely for the attention they have paid me under such adverse circumstances and at so much expense of time.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to correct—

Mr. SARGENT. I was going to ask the Senate for a few moments' executive session. We can come out in five minutes.

Mr. BLAINE. As long as I am on my feet I will make this correction. There has been a good deal said to-night about the fact that section 820 in regard to the jury law, and I am addressing myself now particularly to the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] which passed the Senate on the 20th of December, from some cause or other could not be passed in the House, and that is the reason why, not being able to pass it in the ordinary mode of legislation, they were justified in putting it on this bill.

Of course such comment on the proceedings in the House is not quite in order, but as it has been pretty freely indulged in I may be pardoned for stating that correctly which has been stated incorrectly.

I have here the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. On the 25th of January, nearly five weeks after this bill passed the Senate, there was an entire evening of four hours given to the Judiciary Committee of the House. They had the entire evening given to them, and almost every member of that committee reported bills at length. There was not one solitary word heard about section 820 relating to the jury law. This section, to get rid of which the Senator from Ohio says a kind of revolution in our Government would be justifiable, the Judiciary Committee had five weeks before them, and had an entire evening given up to them, and they never even reported it back.

I beg the honorable Senator from Kentucky, who I know would not intentionally misrepresent anything, to observe that he has been led into an error on this subject, and that for some motive I know not what, and I do not pretend to say, they deliberately withheld and suppressed this bill. More than that, when this was reported on the sundry civil appropriation bill a Representative from Maine, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, stated that there was no need of incorporating it in the appropriation bill, because nobody objected to passing it. Now those are the facts.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to say a word?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. Having no knowledge of the facts personally, I relied upon a statement made to me by a member of the House, while I was speaking, as to the report. If I am in error, of course I stand corrected.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not impute the slightest intentional mistake, as the honorable Senator knows, to himself, but I was only correcting an error.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. GARLAND. As I expect to address the Senate upon this matter, I want to submit a question to the Senator from Maine in advance. As this section was repealed by a republican Congress and afterward found its way into the Revised Statutes by a republican reviser, why was it that the republican Congress did not hasten itself to repeal it at once?

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, I cannot tell you, but I know that that fact was also mentioned by Mr. HALE, of Maine, as an additional reason why nobody would object to its repeal.

Mr. ALLISON. Why did not the democratic House do it?

Mr. BLAINE. Why did not the democratic House do it? They have had a democratic House for four years, and for more than two years nobody objected.

Mr. GARLAND. I will take care of that.

Mr. BLAINE. I merely wanted to state the fact.

Mr. GARLAND. I merely wanted to state the fact, too.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] tells us, with a new interpretation of Government, that he has come to the conclusion that the House of Representatives has the right to put whatever they choose upon an appropriation bill, and that we have got to take it because the power to originate money bills belongs to the House, and that as it has been in the Kingdom of England so it must be in the Republic of the United States; that a redress of grievances must be had upon money bills. The analogy is splendid. When the Commons were fighting a hereditary monarch with whose choice to the throne they had nothing to do, but who came to them through generations of descent, there was pith and point in this; but to the representatives of a people who have also chosen the President, and through the State governments have chosen the Senators—to that one branch you give the right when they reach Washington to coerce the other two, and the representatives of the people will say if it does not suit the Senate and the President to do exactly what they want there shall not be any Army.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask my friend, if I do not interrupt him, which President he means? I know that the people chose one. Which one does he mean?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not mean the President who had his agents all through the South trying to buy up colored electors.

Mr. EATON. You mean the one who did buy them.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the one I do not mean. But I must say this is a most extraordinary presentation from a great constitutional lawyer, that the Representatives of the people will refuse to support the people's Government if some other agents of the people, deriving their authority from the same people, do not give in just as soon as the former ask them to put any amendment they may choose to attach to an appropriation bill, and upon the very principle which we have derived from the course of the Commons, although the Commons were compelled to it in order to extort something from a hereditary monarch. It is a new construction.

More than that, Mr. President, and I beg the attention of the Senator from Ohio to this, there is no justification whatever to be derived from the present attempt to force this through Congress from the fact that it was put on an appropriation bill when enacted. I believe I can show the difference. When this bill, or a part of it, was put on the act of 1872, there was a republican Congress, republican in the Senate, republican in the House, and a republican President, all three desiring it. It was the legitimate process adopted by the majority to secure itself against the filibustering of a minority. It is a very different question. When the House of Representatives of one shade of politics assumes to coerce a Senate of a different view of politics, it presents a wholly different question. The Senator from Ohio will find no analogy between what was done in 1872, what was done by concurring political majorities in harmony with the Executive availing themselves of an appropriation to legislate in an orderly and just manner, and the attempt of a House of Representatives governed by one political party to thrust upon an appropriation bill a measure obnoxious to another, and then to say, as the Senator from Ohio says they have the right to do, "If you do not give up your convictions, if you do not agree to misrepresent your States, if you do not agree to prove false to your trusts, if you do not agree to violate your oaths, if you do not agree to surrender your principles, this Government shall stop and there shall be no Army and no Navy." That is the constitution which the honorable Senator from Ohio chooses to uphold.

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to refresh his recollection?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. WHYTE. The republican party, to which he belongs, in its incipency taught the democratic party the very tactics that they are performing in the other House.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no, they only tried; they did not succeed.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, they were beaten at the game, that was the only difference. In 1856, as the Senator well knows, the House of Representatives put upon the Army bill a provision that the Army should not be used to keep the peace in Kansas, and tried to force the democratic Senate to come to their views, and Congress adjourned, leaving the Army without a dollar of pay for the soldiers and the officers who were on the frontier. They taught the democrats in the House to do the very thing that they are doing to-night.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator think it was right?

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I want to know.

Mr. WHYTE. No, I do not think it is right. It is the effect of the bad example which you set to them in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONKLING. Rather I think it is proceeding in the face of an awful warning, according to the Senator.

Mr. WHYTE. On the contrary, you were so badly whipped when Pierce called you back that the warning does not follow.

Mr. BLAINE. And the honorable Senator having, as he says, conquered the republicans by resisting it, proposes now to conquer them by adopting it. The honorable Senator reminds me of what was said of a great premier of England, that when he was engaged in a game of chess, and was cornered and nearly conquered, his opponent was called to look out the window and take a fresh breath of air, and he quietly turned the table around, and when the game was renewed he sat with the advantage which his opponent had enjoyed a moment before.

Mr. WHYTE. Precisely. We want to try, therefore, whether the republicans will not retreat from their position on these laws precisely as they retreated from their position on that law.

Mr. BLAINE. You will not find them retreating an inch; that is all.

Mr. WHYTE. And there is another example set by the illustrious Henry Winter Davis later, when he, with a band in the House of Representatives following him, put upon the Army bill the clause that no man should be tried by a military court, and tried to force the Senate—republican then—to come to their conclusion, and Congress adjourned without being able to pass the Army bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, all the Senator calls by way of precedent is abortive attempts. It was tried in 1856, and disastrously failed; it was tried in 1865, and again failed; and now, the honorable Senator thinks out of two failures he can make one success.

Mr. WHYTE. I have made no such proposition. I have only ridiculed what the republican party did; that is all. I have only held you up to show that this is a hypocritical denunciation of the act of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand that the honorable Senator, differing from his political associates, is opposed to doing this thing?

Mr. WHYTE. I was opposed to doing it, I do not deny.

Mr. BLAINE. Are you now opposed? Do not use the imperfect tense. You say you were opposed.

Mr. WHYTE. I am now opposed to it.

Mr. BLAINE. I am glad we have got one recruit. The majority will be one greater by the Senator's statement.

Mr. WHYTE. I am opposed to it because I think we can accomplish our purpose without doing this, in due time.

Mr. BLAINE. I congratulate the honorable Senator. I hope we shall have recruits from that side of the Chamber.

Mr. WHYTE. But my friend cannot beg the question. I only wanted to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that this virtue is assumed and is not real; that the party that now shakes its hands in holy horror has set the example on two occasions, and it does not lie in their mouths to condemn the House of Representatives for its course.

Mr. SARGENT, (at four o'clock and five minutes a. m.) I wish to ask the Senate that we may have a few moments' executive session, and then we can return to legislative business. ["No," "no."]

Mr. BLAINE. Let us vote on this question.

Mr. SARGENT. No, it will run until morning; and there is no objection to its running after we have a short executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to make a remark. I have stayed here all night hoping we might get an executive session to act on a few nominations that have come in since dinner. I do not feel able to stay longer, and therefore will let the nominations go if I cannot have five minutes' executive session.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Senator ought to be gratified.

Mr. CONKLING. So I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The galleries will be cleared, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HILL. While the galleries are being closed, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5333) for the removal of the political disabilities of John McIntosh Kell, of Georgia. There is no objection to it. It was reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I think, after failing to supply the Surgeon-General's office with means, and having pensions stopped, we should not spend time in removing disabilities. I object.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts insist on his objection?

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask simply to get some papers back from the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered, That John Hunter have leave to withdraw his petition and papers now before the Committee on Claims.

SAMUEL B. STAUBER.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Samuel B. Stauber and others; and I would state a single fact. Stauber and others are the constituents of the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] whose term expires a few hours hence. The claim has received the approval of the House and of the Senate Committee on Finance unanimously. It is a small matter of relief, which will be grateful to our friend who is about to leave us, and I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 5, before the word "each," to strike out "to," and after the word "each," to strike out the words "of them;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to refund and repay to Samuel B. Stauber, J. J. Petroe, and Adaline M. Shouse, widow of William Shouse, each the sum of $262.50, which sum each of said parties has been required to pay, and has paid, into the Treasury of the United States, as special tax upon brandy, although they were released and discharged from the payment thereof by chapter 48 of the private acts of the Forty-fourth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the bill, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That any taxes duly assessed outstanding and unpaid by the said parties respectively, shall be first deducted from the amount hereinbefore authorized to be repaid respectively to the said parties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT GENEVA.

Mr. CONKLING. There is on the table and on the Calendar a bill from the House, order of business 986, which I think will take but a moment, and I imagine nobody will object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I reserve all points of order. I want to hear in advance anything that comes from the House here to-day.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh no, this bill came weeks ago and is reported by the Committee on Commerce. Just hear it read for information. If anybody objects I will not press it.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is that reported from a committee?

Mr. CONKLING. From the Committee on Commerce long ago.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1475) granting American registry to the Canadian steam ferry-boat Geneva.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS' REUNION, CAMBRIDGE, OHIO.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont calls for the regular order, which is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I think upon a statement the Senator will not object. There was a House resolution passed authorizing the Secretary of War to send artillery and camp equipage to a soldiers' reunion at Cambridge, Ohio, which takes place this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall not object to that. I withdraw the objection for that purpose. After that is disposed of I shall object to everything but the regular order.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 207) authorizing the Secretary of War to send artillery and camp equipage to the soldiers' reunion at Cambridge, Ohio.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORRIS DWIGHT.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his objection to my asking a favor of the Senate for a poor pensioner who is eighty years of age. The bill has come from the House, and I ask that it be passed.

Mr. WHYTE. Just let me correct a mistake of the Paymaster-General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will state his point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist that every Senator shall come to the front here, so that we can all have fair play.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. Senators will resume their seats.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senate to allow me to put on its passage the bill (H. R. No. 4565) for the relief of Lieutenant George M. Welles, of the Marine Corps. It is just to correct a mistake in the pay of Lieutenant Welles, of the Marine Corps, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy. It is a matter of $200 only.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a pension case?

Mr. WHYTE. No, sir; it is merely the correction of a mistake in the pay made by the Paymaster-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to pay that $200 until the pension bills are disposed of. If any one has any further pension bills I will not object, but I object to everything else until they are disposed of.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President—

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the regular order. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Indiana to allow this pension bill to go through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his objection?

Mr. McDONALD. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6250) granting a pension to Morris Dwight.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rise to inquire if this bill came from the House to-day?

Mr. DAWES. It is a House bill. It came from the House and was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and was reported back from that committee a week ago.

Mr. INGALLS. There are upon the Calendar since its last consideration about half a dozen private pension bills reported by the Committee on Pensions. I should like very much, indeed, to have them acted upon. They are all meritorious and just. It will take, perhaps, five minutes to pass them.

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the regular order. We agreed to go into executive session for the benefit of the Senator from California.

Mr. DAWES. I appeal to the Senator to withhold his demand a moment.

Mr. WITHERS. I have no objection in the world to passing the bill, but there are a dozen pension bills, and each one can come up in succession.

Mr. DAWES. I had the floor and yielded it to two Senators who sought it.

Mr. WITHERS. I have some pension bills in charge that I am very anxious to get through myself.

Mr. DAWES. It is poor encouragement for a man to yield. I yielded the floor on two occasions when I had this bill before the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. Under the circumstances it is due to the Senator from Massachusetts that we should consider the bill he has moved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia withdraw his objection in order to allow the bill to be read? The Senator from Virginia does not object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6250) granting a pension to Morris Dwight. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Morris Dwight, as dependent father of the late Colonel A. W. Dwight, of the One hundred and twenty-second Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SARGENT. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the executive messages be laid before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the consent of the Senate to pass these few remaining pension bills here. They are all House bills, and unless they are acted upon now they will not receive the signature of the President.

Mr. McDONALD. I insist on the regular order.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] that the Senate recede from its disagreement to a certain amendment of the House to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have been waiting all night to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill which has been on the Calendar for a long time, and which is very short. There is a very brief report explaining it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont has demanded the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I have demanded the regular order.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota appeals to the Senator from Vermont to yield for a purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the purpose? I call for the regular order against everything except pension bills.

Mr. CONKLING. I have a pension bill that I hope the Senate will take up.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] has yielded to me. He has the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That cannot help the Senator any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont demands the regular order.

Mr. CONKLING. Except as to pension bills.

Mr. MORGAN. I demand the regular order against pension bills too.

Mr. CONKLING. To see whether any Senator insists on the regular order, I desire to call up, as I am asked to move to take up, a bill granting a pension to Calvin E. Pratt.

Mr. BLAINE. I only desire to hold the floor against other Senators on the regular order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Can the Senator from Maine make a conditional waiver like that?

Mr. BLAINE. I am on the floor in pursuance of the regular order. If the Senator insists on it I shall conclude the five minutes I have to occupy, and possibly I shall not occupy so much time as that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] demands the regular order, on which the Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] referred to the precedent of 1856. I beg to call his attention and the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to the fact that there was something of appropriateness in the bill to which that condition was attached. That was an appropriation for the support of the Army. It was a bill for the support of the Army, and the republican House sought to attach to it a condition that the Army should not be used in a certain way. There is no appropriateness whatever in the course taken on this bill, and no parallel between the two. This is, to use the language of the Senator from Ohio, an attempt to redress a grievance and to redress a grievance by withholding supplies. What from? For payment of expenses "for printing pension checks." If you do not yield on this the pensioners shall not have any checks. "For the keepers of light-houses." If you do not yield on this the lights must go out all along the coast. "For the support of the Soldiers' Home." If you do not yield on this we will redress grievances by starving the old veterans! "For the insane asylum;" and then, still more touchingly if you choose, here is an item: "To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the widow of Alpheus S. Williams $1,007." If the Senate will not yield to this political demand of the House, let the widow of Alpheus S. Williams starve; we are going to redress grievances! "To pay the widow of Gustave Schleicher $738." She must starve. "To pay Bessie Dandridge Douglas, Evelyn Spotswood Douglas, and Mary Ellen Douglas, children of Beverly B. Douglas;" "to pay the widow of Julian Hartridge," whose memory and whose virtues were commemorated in this Hall even this day; "to pay the widow of Terence J. Quinn," and so on. This bill is full of charities, of beneficences, of kindnesses, which the Federal Government extends in various directions to wounded and disabled soldiers, to the commerce of the country in holding out beacons and lights, to the widows of those who have died in the public service, and the honorable Senator from Ohio says that under the great principle of wringing from a reluctant Executive or from a reluctant Senate a concession on a political point we are justified in holding all these at arms' length and not giving one dollar out for any of them until the Senate shall yield upon a purely political issue. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, my friend the Senator from Maine is wrong in his facts. His distinguished friend, Mr. Henry Winter Davis, did not tack on the military court amendment to the Army bill at all.

Mr. BLAINE. I spoke of what occurred in 1856, the case the Senator first quoted. That was the Army bill.

Mr. WHYTE. In 1865 is the one I had reference to.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator said the one of 1856.

Mr. WHYTE. It was in 1856 on the Army bill in regard to the use of the Army in Kansas. That was the occasion. In 1856 it was on the Army bill that the House put a proviso that the Army should not be used to keep the peace in Kansas. That is what the republicans put on the Army bill of 1856.

Mr. BLAINE. In that language?

Mr. WHYTE. Oh, not in that language.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator means that they put on the Army bill a proviso that it should not be used to aid the border ruffians who were trying to put slavery by mob-law and force in the Territory.

Mr. WHYTE. Was it in that language?

Mr. BLAINE. Pretty nearly.

Mr. WHYTE. It was quite as nearly in the language I put. But it was in 1865 that Henry Winter Davis put on the miscellaneous appropriation bill, and not on the Army bill at all, a provision that no man should be tried by a military court in any State or Territory where there was a United States court in session. There was a bill the failure of which kept many poor people from receiving their money. It was not half as appropriate as this provision on this legislative bill, and I have no doubt that I can show in the miscellaneous bill afterward passed quite as many meritorious claims as the Senator from Maine has referred to in this legislative bill that has been stopped in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator does not probably remember all the facts. The House of Representatives in the case that he recurs to, of Winter Davis, did not try to coerce the Senate. They did first put on that provision. The House of Representatives, in the orderly course of legislation, (I was then a member of the House,) put on that provision. It came to the Senate and the Senate refused to concur. It went back to the House the last day, or the last day but one, and got in that position where unanimous consent was needed to have it go out, and then it was that Mr. Davis, by his will if not his willingness, stood against the House, if I recollect aright. The House desired to recede. If I am wrong in my recollection the Senator can correct me. The cases are not parallel.

Mr. KERNAN. I think the Senator is inaccurate about that.

Mr. WHYTE. He is inaccurate. *

Mr. BLAINE. No; I am correct.

Mr. WHYTE. When my friend wants to put his party in a good, proper position, and derogate from another party's proper position, I know his memory is not so good. The provision was stricken out by the Senate. The bill went back with the proposition of Mr. Davis stricken out. The House insisted upon it, and granted a conference on the subject, and held to it until the adjournment.

Mr. BLAINE. By what vote? Has the Senator got it there?

Mr. DAWES. Was the bill lost?

Mr. BLAINE. The bill was lost beyond a doubt.

Mr. WHYTE. No; I have not the vote. The vote is not given here, but the House agreed to every amendment made by the Senate except this one, and insisted on it, and held its ground upon that until Congress adjourned.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will remember this, that the Thirty-eighth Congress, in which that was done, was a very close Congress, the republicans having only about seventeen majority in the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. So is this a very close Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. It is; but the closeness is a little on our side. We hold here still.

Mr. WHYTE. The amendment known as Mr. Davis's amendment was carried by a vote of 80 to 64.

Mr. BLAINE. That is just about what I said. What does the honorable Senator make out of the precedent?

Mr. WHYTE. He makes out of it that you have no right to get up here and rail against the House of Representatives for following a bad example which your party set. That is all I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it is a bad example?

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President—

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator before he proceeds allow me to make a suggestion to him? The Senator announced that he would not forget to deal with the fact that the House for more than two months has had before it a bill to repeal the section to which he is about to allude as a gross section touching juries. When the Senator comes to do that, I beg of him to remember a fact which I will bring to his notice. It is this: the Constitution requires that to pass a bill relieving political disabilities a two-third vote is necessary. In the House such bills are reported as they are in the Senate, by the Judiciary Committee. The Journal of the Senate will show that from day to day, more recent than that day on which this bill in question went to the House, bills removing political disabilities have been reported, have been acted upon by the House, have received a two-third vote in the House, and their passage has been announced here. I suggest, then, that a part of the task of the Senator from Arkansas will be to show us that, although they could not report and pass a bill which required only a majority, and to which it was announced in the House that there would be objection, they could report bills which required a two-third vote, and could carry those bills through all the stages of legislation not one of them, or two of them, but several of them on succeeding days.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, beginning where the Senator from New York left off, I will ask him what was his position when this question was called up just before we took a recess in December last, as to the repeal of sections 820 and 821?

Mr. CONKLING. My position was, if I remember aright, and I think I do, that largely on the ground that section 820 had been repealed and by error had found its way again into the Revised Statutes, I made no objection to the repeal of that section, and particularly none to its repeal after the Committee on the Judiciary had had an opportunity of looking at it and verifying the fact that it had been previously repealed. As to section 821, lodging a discretion, and only that, with the court, I resisted its repeal. Have I answered the question the Senator intended to ask?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, so far so good. Now, I will put another question. The Senator is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. I want to ask him how long the Committee on the Judiciary had this question before it, as to the repeal of this statute, before it was wrenched from the hands of the committee by the action of the Senate?

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator fixes a date which I do not know, and therefore I cannot answer his question. I am not aware that it was ever wrenched from the hands of the committee. My recollection is that after the attention of the committee was called to the fact that such a bill was before it, a week possibly, I think not so long, elapsed before the Committee on the Judiciary considered the question so far as the committee ever did consider it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New York allow me?

Mr. CONKLING. One moment, if the Senator will pardon me. The Committee on the Judiciary considered it so far as it ever did consider it, ascertaining that in place of the particular bill to which the Senator refers being before the Committee on the Judiciary, it was before another committee, to wit, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and that committee, as I understand it, did act and act promptly. I am not a member of it, but that was my understanding at the time, and the Senate afterward passed the bill. If the honorable Senator from Arkansas would ask me a question about some other matters that were before the Committee on the Judiciary, and I were at liberty to tell him what became of them, and why it is that section 800 so stands that the Senator from Ohio can rise to thunder against that, I should be very glad to tell him and I should be at liberty to tell him that it is because of no default of mine that section 800 has not been made to conform to that admirable system under which they draw juries in Ohio; and I am reminded that I might say it is not the default of any other republican member of the Committee on the Judiciary. And, Mr. President, by the courtesy of my friend I will occupy, if he will allow me, one moment longer.

I listened to the honorable Senator from Ohio when he pronounced a eulogy upon the way in which they draw juries in the State of Ohio. I have heard from that Senator many encomiums upon the jurisprudence and the legal methods of Ohio. I heard from him to-night, however, one thing which surprised me. He said, if I understood him, that it was regarded as an honor in Ohio to serve on juries, that they struggled for the office of jurymen in that State. Mr. President, I knew before that Ohio had become the "happy hunting-ground" for presidential candidates. I knew that, as far as we have gone in that direction, general satisfaction and pleasure has been derived from resorting to Ohio. I had every reason to believe that in the future Ohio would continue the favorite field of selecting presidential candidates. I knew also that a multitude, which no man can number, of able-bodied men from Ohio had consented to serve the public in all manner of capacities, high and low. But I was not prepared to hear that such in Ohio is the heat for office, so true is it that hunting place has become the great industry of that State [laughter] that men compete with each other and struggle for an opportunity to sit upon a jury. [Laughter.]

And, Mr. President, I confess that having heard this reason assigned for the remarkable character of juries in that State, nothing but a sentiment of despair is inspired by the suggestion that we do something to obtain in other States jurors equal to the jurors in Ohio. We cannot do it in New York, Mr. President, because the people of that State not being generally office-hunters and place-seekers, they do not strive to break into the jury-box and sit there for the purpose of enjoying the honors and emoluments of that distinguished position.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, upon the question between New York and Ohio as to the honors of the jury-box, I have nothing to say. I have something to say I hope of more importance and consequence than that. It is with mingled feelings of regret and pleasure that at this hour of the night or of the morning, as the case may be, I now trespass upon the already overtaxed patience of the Senate; of regret, because I cannot say what the subject deserves; of pleasure, that I may, to some extent, bring to light some things of great importance that may have been forgotten.

This question goes above and beyond either New York or Ohio, or the right to go into the jury-box on the part of any citizen of any State; and by way of presenting to the Senate my views I will commence by my question propounded to the Senator from New York. What has the committee charged by the republicans of the Senate with this question that is submitted here done for over nine months, much beyond the ordinary period of gestation that is allowed to bring forth and produce the human species? The Senator from New York will not be permitted to escape by talking about what the House of Representatives did when this question was before them; and, Mr. President, whatever may be your convictions on this matter, [Mr. FERRY in the chair,] you will recollect the struggle we made here just before we took the recess in December last to get this question directly and squarely before the Senate and before Congress.

I care nothing about this matter in a party view. I will not and never expect to practice in the Senate upon the lex talionis as between parties; but no party can charge upon me my shortcomings unless I tell them that they must take the beam from their own eye.

Now, the Senator from New York speaks about the great question lying at the bottom of this in an appropriation bill, in a bill to furnish and supply money to carry on the Government. I can defy that Senator now—and when I say that I do not mean it in a disrespectful sense—to tell me where in the statutes of the United States the provision is for colored witnesses to appear in the courts of the United States and for persons interested in a suit to appear and testify in cases in which they are interested.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. GARLAND. I do.

Mr. CONKLING. He wants to refer me to the statute which authorizes parties to testify.

Mr. GARLAND. Where is that statute?

Mr. CONKLING. It is in the book with the other statutes. There are two on the subject.

Mr. GARLAND. I want to know where the original law is, and I ask the Senator from New York because he is a lawyer, besides being a politician and a statesman. I ask him where that original statute is.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator want me to admit that originally the provision to which he refers appeared in an appropriation bill?

Mr. GARLAND. I do not want the Senator to admit anything except what he knows.

Mr. CONKLING. I only want to understand the point of the Senator's question. He asks me where the statute is. It is in the book containing the other statutes except that there is one act passed since the statutes were revised.

Mr. GARLAND. That answer is like the answer given by the man who was playing the fiddle on Sunday, and was told by the preacher that it was wrong. He was asked if he did not know it was sinful. "Now," said he "show me where in the Bible it is said I must not play the fiddle on Sunday, and I will quit," and he went on playing. [Laughter.]

The Senator from New York refers me to that large list of statutes, nineteen or twenty volumes. That is not an answer to the question I propounded. In the thirteenth volume of the Statutes at Large there is a provision right in the middle of an appropriation bill allowing colored persons to testify in courts of justice, and parties interested in the suit to testify also. No democratic House sat here then; no democratic Senate sat here then; and the man who was then President of the United States who had once been a democrat was being hunted down by the Senator from New York, if not at that time soon after, and by his political friends to the very earth because he had once been a democrat, but then no longer was. There was a great principle involved in this act. If this breach of legislation, if this breach of parliamentary law has been accomplished, let me ask the Senator from New York who has committed it?

It is true that two black hares do not make a white one, and two errors do not make a right; but when we hear our suffering people clamoring for their rights, who must be entitled to them or else we live now under false pretenses before God and before man, we must resort to this remedy that the Senator from New York, I will not say individually, but his political friends, fastened upon us in this way, and that is all there is in the question. I will not go with the Senator from Ohio into the discussion of the distinction between this Government and that of England as to the money power; but we have a written Constitution, and that is enough. The House of Representatives being under the Constitution the money power of this Government to originate all money bills, they would be derelict, and not only derelict but they would deserve to be hung as high as Haman, if they appropriated money for anything else than for the liberties and rights of the people over whom they legislate.

What, do you talk about $5, $10, $15, $2,500 for cleaning out a stream in one of these poor countries up here that you can stand in the center of and jump from bank to bank; and yet the liberties of your people are not only throttled but they are taken from them, through the juries, through the witnesses, and through the courts of the country. What is your money appropriated for? Is it to run a steamboat from Cincinnati to Louisville or back and forward? No; it is for the liberties of the country. The Senator from New York speaks of revolutionary measures. Why, according to that doctrine similar things must cure similar things, similia similibus curantur; we take a revolutionary measure here if that pleases him better than the measure we now propose.

But now come to the history of the matter, Mr. President. Do you not know and does not the Senator from New York know, that this section 820 has no more business in the statutes, not one particle more, than the thirty-sixth chapter of Leviticus has? It was repealed, repealed solemnly under all the sanctions of the law, and in the revision, I will not say by what method, it found itself back in the statutes; and we are indebted to-day to the ingenuity of Judge Woods in the Hammond case, in the second of Woods' Reports, for that statute being enforced as a part of the law of the country. In the State that I pretend in part to represent on this floor our judge had passed it by. He had stated that there was no such statute existing, and we all thought that the miserable recollections of the past were to go by; but Judge Woods finds in the Hammond case that it is a living statute, and he applies it.

Section 821 is but a result, is but a legal sequence of 820; and now at this late day the Senator from New York talks about the House of Representatives not doing thus and so when that statute has been here repealed by a bill from that House which was before the Senate months upon months, and if I recollect at the time it came up he was not very anxious to have this statute repealed eo nomine before we adjourned or took our recess at Christmas. Now we are brought back to that same question.

Let us look a little at the provisions of the statute on its face:

SEC. 821. At every term of any court of the United States the district attorney, or other person acting on behalf of the United States in said court, may move, and the court, in their discretion, may require the clerk to tender to every person summoned to serve as a grand or petit juror or venireman or talesman, in said court, the following oath or affirmation, namely:

We have been told repeatedly that it was one of the prides of the republican party that enacted this statute that every man was equal before the law, that every man had the same rights, that a man who was summoned as a juror in Massachusetts stood just as one summoned as a juror in Arkansas; but here it is left to the discretion of the prosecuting attorney or the judge to administer that oath as he sees proper, as in his discretion he may think it necessary. We have, thank God, and Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson combined, a judge in the State of Arkansas who does not administer it; but if you cross the water into Mississippi and another judge should seek to administer it then the question is very different. And is the Senate of the United States at this day and at this time going to sit here and see this discretion left to judges that they may or may not, according as they think proper, administer that oath? It is too much power, and if the republican party is in earnest, if it is sincere in saying it wants the rights of all people equally guaranteed under this Constitution and this Government, they must step back and get rid of this statute. It will not do to say that Judge A in Mississippi may administer this oath and Judge B in Arkansas may not administer it as he sees proper. I believe it was Burke who said that the great object and aim of all the safeguards for liberty under the English government was to get twelve men in the jury-box. And when we speak, Mr. President, of jurors and getting them into the box to try the rights of the people, we come to the very mud-sills, to the very foundations of this Government, and I tell the Senator from New York—I do not know where he is, he is not now in his place—that it is not worth while for him to talk about the House of Representatives doing this or doing that, or doing the other thing; here is this statute glaring, blazing, and covered all over with infamy, and whether in an appropriation bill or in an original bill the country demands that it be repealed.

Mr. President, I would say much more, but at this late hour—or early hour as it may be—I will not trespass longer upon the patience of the Senate. I only rose to place my emphatic denunciation of this whole system upon the records of this body before we adjourn.

Mr. BLAINE. I want just one minute to say that I sent for the Globe, and I can tell the honorable Senator from Maryland that I find my memory was accurate. The history of the Winter Davis amendment was that the House adopted it by a vote of 73 to 71, a majority of two; it went to the Senate. A conference committee was appointed. They could not agree. When it came back a motion was made to recede, and on that filibustering began, and they filibustered the session out, going on with filibustering motions. The only vote from which I can get at a test was the motion of Mr. Mallory, of Kentucky, that the subject do lie on the table. On that there were 23 yeas to 118 nays, showing that the House was ready to recede; but, just as I stated, Mr. Davis had got the House in a position where a majority could not act, and then followed sundry and divers filibustering motions. That was the history of the Winter Davis amendment, and that amendment was put on by an overwhelming majority of democratic votes. In the 73 to 71 the parties were not accurately divided, but the 73 were made up largely of democrats, the 71 almost unanimously of republicans. So that in the second case my friend cites I am afraid the facts do not bear him out.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, the hour is so late, the session has been so long prolonged, the air of the Chamber is so hot and stifling, and the bodies and the minds of Senators are so weary, that it seems almost like a trespass for me to prolong this discussion. And yet, sir, the circumstances of the debate are such that I feel that I ought not to permit the opportunity to pass by without at least uttering my solemn protest against the doctrines which, I believe for the first time in the political history of this country, find a eulogist upon this floor, and against practices which, however they may plead in their own behalf the precedents of other times and of other parties, are so vicious, are so hostile to the very possibility of good government, are so utterly opposed to the practices of the better days of the Republic, and so violently at war with the fundamental principles of constitutional liberty as understood in this country, that I should feel myself without excuse if I permitted them to pass unnoticed.

My honorable and honored colleague [Mr. THURMAN] has taken pains, at considerable length and with much show of elaboration, to trace what he would argue to be the identity in spirit and in principle between the English constitution and the Constitution of the United States in respect to a parallel which he draws between the prerogatives of the Commons in Parliament and the privileges of the House of Representatives here. In England there is no written constitution. The constitution of that government is unwritten. It resides in its history, which is the history of a steady, gradual, and enlightened progress in the knowledge and practice of free principles. It started out upon the theory and the practice of that absolutism of monarchy which resides essentially in the purity of the feudal system. The king was not only the source of the honors and the offices of the kingdom, but from his person flowed all private rights and the administration of law between private persons. And with some exception growing out of the peculiarities of the history of the races in England that formed the composite population of that country, the tenure of the body of the land was based on the principle of its primary ownership by the individual person who wore the crown; and every landholder, be he baron or vassal, held his title by virtue of the service which he owed to the king, either in war or in peace. The king, therefore, as he needed funds and revenues from time to time to maintain his state, to uphold his power, and to increase his dignity, was only taking from those who constituted the people, both nobility and commons, that which upon the theory of the constitution was his own, when he required from them grants from time to time, in addition to those incomes which came from the tenure of land in the shape of aids and taxes. But as the spirit of liberty awoke first in the barons who, and not the commons, extorted from King John the great charter of liberty, and at last found its way to the commons themselves, the secret of the power of the representative principle in that country was learned, was discovered, and put in practice. And so from time to time the grant of aid, which was necessary for the monarchy, was accompanied by express conditions which either limited the use to which the revenue was to be appropriated, or extorted from the king concessions deemed essential to public and to private rights.

Mr. President, when the founders of our Government and the framers of our system came to lay the foundations of our institutions, they had before them the whole history of English liberty; and they recorded their interpretation of it in a written document, which established the form and the frame and the features of that entire system of government which in all its parts should represent the will of the people in all the forms deemed essential for the protection and preservation of their liberty. Learning from the example of ancient as well as modern times, of the political philosophers of Greece and of Rome as well as from the writers of English history and of English law, they established as a fundamental proposition on which alone constitutional government could safely rest a division of power among those who were to represent as agents the people from whom the power flowed. And accordingly they ordained a government with three co-ordinate powers and branches, the legislative, the judicial, and the executive, and as far as it was possible to maintain their separation and entire and absolute independence of the other consistently with a harmonious co-operation in the work of government, they decreed that the legislative should not trench upon either of the other branches, that the judiciary should expound and not make laws, and that the executive should execute the laws made by the Legislature and declared by the judges.

But the peculiarities of our situation rendered it necessary to go still further in this development and differentiation of the powers of government; for we were not only one people in lineage, in blood, in history, in a community of sentiment and a general love of liberty, but we were one people divided originally into colonies, and the colonies became States, and the people had learned the value and the safety of local government for local interests, and the problem was to harmonize them in a system which should delegate power from people and States to a government which should represent the nation. And accordingly when the deposit of the national legislative power came to be made in the Constitution, the popular principle, the principle of the numerical majority, the principle of democratic absolutism was represented in the more numerous branch in the election directly of Representatives by the people in their districts; but to check the rampant spirit of an absolute majority and to preserve the landmarks of local liberty, the States were brought by an equal representation perpetually into this Chamber by that single provision of the Constitution which of all the provisions is alone unamendable.

Now, sir, having been taught these many years the doctrine of State rights and the value of that doctrine and the preciousness of it as a heritage for ourselves and our posterity to the latest generation, we are to be told to-night by the avatar and coming apostle of modern democracy that the power legitimately deposited in the Constitution to overthrow the whole of that safeguard is lodged in the numerical majority of the whole people represented in the House of Representatives; that this Senate, instead of representing the dignity and the power and the value of local government, is the House of Lords, to be deposed from the pedestal of independent power; and that the elected Executive, who returns to the people from whence he came every four years, is the king to be disrowned by the representatives of popular rights in the House of Representatives; that we have no independent power; that we have no separate rights; that we are sitting here this morning outraging the sense of public justice by standing in the way of a legitimate redress of grievances, the redress of which is conferred by the Constitution upon the Representatives of the people. What has become of the ancient and the true doctrine of State rights? What has become of the dignity and the power of local government represented in this body as a check and a restraint upon the hasty, ill-advised, and frenzied rage that by the very supposition of the Constitution it was supposed might in times of great party and public excitement infect the lower House? What has become of that specific conservative feature which we were wont to boast as the guard of the rational and sober liberties of this country as against the democratic absolutism of the maddened populations of continental Europe, where one executive and one chamber was the ideal of that perfect system of giving full play and free scope and unlimited license to the passions and the prejudices of a frenzied populace?

I bid you, Senators on the other side of this Chamber who were wont to preach this ancient and true doctrine, beware of following the evil precedents cited to you to-night by one of your number. Set a better example; restore the model of our former sober, orderly, and law-loving people. The Senate has no right to veto a bill, has no right to participate in legislation, (for that is what it amounts to,) for we are told set the seal of your formal approval at least to these passages and resolutions and clauses of general legislation under penalty of wrecking the fabric of government. They do not consult with us as equals entitled to a voice to be heard, to stand with them, if need be, upon our will, but to be dictated to as inferiors and subjects by virtue of the terms of the Constitution which makes them the ultimate deposit of that power from which there can be no constitutional appeal.

Mr. President, it is a breach of the privileges of this House, it is a violation of the dignity of this Chamber, it is a specific insult to every representative of the States who sits here by a commission from their governors. We, forsooth, are to be compelled to inscribe our names upon the roll of our shame. We are to be told that laws that we believe to be just and right and essential to the safety and liberties of the people we shall erase, blot out from the statute-book, under the penalty of seeing all the operations of the Government stop for want of necessary supplies.

I protest against the doctrine; I repudiate it. It is not the doctrine of the constitutional law of this Republic. It has no place in our political history. There is no warrant for it in any of our institutions. It is an exact contradiction to the express letter of our fundamental law, and overthrows at a blow all the best traditions of public government in this country. We are the equal partners of the House of Representatives in the duty and the responsibility and the privilege of legislation. The privileges of this body have been intrenched upon by a long and inveterate practice, which has no foundation whatever in constitutional law by any rational interpretation, which has conceded to them the right to originate appropriation bills, as if they were revenue bills, whereas a revenue bill is a bill to levy a tax and not a bill to appropriate money out of the Treasury. But whether that be so or not, and not choosing to stand on an extreme interpretation of that right, but preferring to place myself directly in the middle and the center of an unassailable privilege, I say that it is a daring infraction of the constitutional right of this body and of the States and the people and of the rights under the Constitution which this body represents, to allow ourselves to be placed by the other branch of Congress in the attitude of those who are required to assent to that which we do not approve, and which we in fact abhor in order to prevent the overturn of this Government.

The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] characterized the doctrine as revolutionary. In my humble judgment he did not characterize it too strongly. My honorable and honored colleague eulogized it as a constitutional, a safe, a sound doctrine of public law. The issue is made up. The lines are separate and distinct; the space between them is clear and broad and well defined. There is no mistaking it. And now let us see whither the logic of it leads us.

It is already announced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] that when yonder dial points the hour of twelve of March the 4th, the political constitution of this body changes and our power of responsibility ceases, and that obstacle will then be overcome, and then concurring majorities in the two Houses of Congress will control the Executive. But, Mr. President, the Executive under our Constitution is something more than the Executive. As said by the Senator from New York, he legitimately, separately, independently wields one-sixth of the whole legislative power. No bill can become a law except with his consent, unless his objection is overruled by majorities of two-thirds of both branches of Congress. There is the provision. Is its wisdom disputed? That was not the doctrine of the fathers of the democratic party, for when Andrew Jackson, in the face of hostile majorities in Congress, interpreting the Constitution for himself without choosing to follow the adverse decision of the supreme judicial tribunal, wielded not infrequently the thunderbolts of his veto, the reverberating noise of applause rolled and swelled in mighty tides from every quarter of the land. And no thoughtful student and conscientious observer of our political history, it seems to me, can wish that provision of our Federal Constitution to be other than it is; and being there, it is there for use, not wantonly, not so as to make it cheap and common by daily use and display, but as often and whenever the occasion requires; and I hope and pray that the madness of this hour will yet be stayed by the claim of that constitutional power from the occupant of the executive chair which shall astonish all but those who admire and follow the great Jackson. It will be a wholesome tonic to this people and cure them of the qualms and nausea and sickness of stomach, that have come from being surfeited and overloaded with this fetid and unwholesome diet.

I asked, Mr. President, where the logic of this doctrine would lead us. We are told, first, to an assault upon the Executive to extort from him; on what ground? On the ground that he loves the order and peace and perpetuity of our institutions better than the men who force him to that alternative, for that is it: "Do this which we demand and which we know you do not believe to be right, or you will see that which you love better than your conscience and your honor laid in the dust, ruined beyond recovery." That is the language to be addressed to the Executive as a part of the legislative power by those who hold the other shares of it; as if the partners in an enterprise of business who had contributed but a portion of the capital and were entitled only to a share in the direction should say to their other partner who by the terms of their articles was entitled to an equal voice with them all, "Vote with us, or we will make you wish you had!" That seems to be the theory of fair and free election in this day!

And, Mr. President, when the Executive is tired and wearied and disheartened and overcome by hopeless resistance, and succumbs and falls upon his knees to the absolutists of Congress, and says, "Here am I, do with me what you will; give me my salary and keep the Government in motion so that I may be able to maintain order and preserve peace, and I will be your humble servant to do your pleasure," will my honorable colleague set before himself as the great object and ideal of human ambition to the American statesman the occupation of such an office as that, shorn of its power, bereft of its dignity, trampled under foot, under hoof, the privilege only of peddling patronage and drawing quarterly salary?

But, sir, that is not all. Under the same power for the redress of supposed grievances which, according to this doctrine—if it may be so called—is lodged ultimately in the House of Representatives, why cannot the House drag the whole judiciary at its feet? Are the gentlemen tired of listening? Are my words unpleasant to their ears? ["Go on!" "Go on!"] Do they avert themselves and seek in their own whisperings to drown the voice of reason and of truth? Grievances may be accomplished through the instruments of the judiciary. A portion of those which are made the subjects of complaint to-night is just the abuse of judicial power. The Constitution provides a remedy, the remedy of impeachment; the House of Representatives the accuser, this body the triers. But here is a shorter way; here is a nearer cut; and if the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States shall persistently affirm the constitutionality of law which the democratic party declare to be unconstitutional and void, what remains but to say "The House of Representatives with its democratic majority, under the terms of the Constitution, holds in its hands your pay and doles out to you your bread and butter; now, then, be obedient to your masters." It is the ass that knows his master's crib; and we shall have asses for judges.

The application of the doctrine is just as legitimate to the coercion of the judicial opinion of the Federal bench as it is to the coercion of the Senate or the enslavement of the Executive. And yet, Mr. President, what does English history teach us there? When did English liberty first become real and secure? First when the independence of the judge as against the power of appointment and removal was established as a part of that unwritten but imperishable constitution of England. The independence of the judiciary, important, essential, fundamental as it is, without which there is nothing, neither private nor public right, is not more sacred, is not more valuable, is not more essential to the progress of good government, than the equal independence of the Senate and the equal independence of the Executive. And therefore, Mr. President, in strong, earnest, emphatic, and continuous tone, I here now and shall ever and always lift up and cry out with the voice of my protest against a doctrine from which my soul revolts.

All this would lead us to be immovable to-day without respect to the character of the legislation which we are required to participate in repealing.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask a question? I do not quite comprehend the doctrine he deems so important. I ask him to state it.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Well, Mr. President, the hour is too late, the time is not propitious, and my strength is not sufficient to rehearse what I have said. If the Senator from Alabama has not understood me, it is because I am incapable of making myself understood.

Mr. MORGAN. I understood the Senator from Ohio in reference to everything he said except the doctrine from which his soul revolts. I desired to know what that doctrine was.

Mr. MATTHEWS. It is the doctrine on which the Senator is proceeding to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not proceeding at all; I have said nothing about this bill.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Well, the gentleman proceeds sometimes, I suppose, without speaking, though perhaps I am in error about that.

Mr. MORGAN. I have neither spoken nor voted; therefore I desired respectfully to know what the doctrine was.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I mean no disrespect to the Senator from Alabama. I only mean to say that I have endeavored to express my conception of that theory and doctrine of constitutional right and privilege on the part of the House of Representatives which to-night has found a eulogist, I am sorry to say, in my honored colleague.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I am a Senator, and I propose to protect all the rights of the Senate and of every Senator; and if the House of Representatives has inflicted on the Senate or any member of the Senate any doctrine from which the soul of the Senator from Ohio revolts, I should like to know what it is.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I am gratified, Mr. President, if I have made one convert; but I was about to say one or two words with respect to the specific legislation contained in this and the other bill.

I know nothing personally of the operations of those provisions of the statute referred to by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] in respect to the oaths administered to jurors; but I do know something personally of that other obnoxious provision which has reference to the protection of the purity of elections by the power of Federal legislation. I understood that, during a moment of my absence from the Chamber, my colleague referred in tones and terms of complaint to the expense of administering the supervisors law in the city of Cincinnati. If upon a scrutiny of the account there shall appear to have been more money used than ought to have been, or money used illegally, let the items be cast out and the account purged; but if it shall appear that no more men were employed, at no greater expense, than was necessary to attain that approximation to a decent and fair election that was actually attained, then no price was too high to pay, provided we mean what we say when we say that a free and a fair election is that thing without which in this Government there is nothing valuable.

In 1876—and now I am about to relate some personal experiences—I was a candidate for the House of Representatives in the second district of Ohio. The appearances of a combination to corrupt that election were suspicious, numerous, and strong, so much so that the suggestion was made that the Federal law should be put in force for our protection. I counseled against it, because I was unwilling to believe that an appreciable portion of the constituency I was ambitious to represent were capable of cheating at an election, and my counsels prevailed. My opponent was returned with a nominal majority of 75. The men that manufactured it have since confessed the crime to an extent that would multiply that majority by at least 4. One professional repeater, brought for that purpose from the city of Philadelphia, was caught and imprisoned for his appearance to be tried, and lodged in the custody of a democratic sheriff, who owed his election to the same performance. Charles Young was his name. He escaped from jail by the connivance of the sheriff, who was prosecuted for the offense and found guilty, and has since gone out of office a disgraced bankrupt and defaulter for moneys belonging to the office used, it is supposed, for the purpose of paying his election contributions.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him whether colored voters were prohibited from voting for him or for the republican ticket in that election?

Mr. MATTHEWS. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator whether any colored voters by this process were prevented from voting for him or the republican ticket in that election; or whether it was a controversy between white people?

Mr. MATTHEWS. How white they were I do not know, nor how black. I do not think there was any distinction. Another one of this gang by the name of Jim White—

Mr. MORGAN. That was not Jim Black, I suppose.

Mr. MATTHEWS. No; it was Jim White, or to speak as respectfully of him as perhaps I ought, considering his relation to this question, I should call him Mr. James White.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose the Senator might call him "truthful James" to be more correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. MATTHEWS. No; that is what the Senator from Alabama would call him.

Mr. James White was convicted upon testimony of being in this game and combination of repeaters, and punished, and in a contested election tried before the senate of Ohio the testimony of the leader of the conspiracy, Mr. Ephraim Holland, made patent all but the names of the conspicuous parties who paid him for his illegal service.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MATTHEWS. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. Ephraim Holland was tried and convicted, was he not?

Mr. MATTHEWS. He confessed his guilt.

Mr. THURMAN. Was he not tried and convicted?

Mr. MATTHEWS. He was not, except upon a confession. He was indicted and confessed his guilt—pleaded guilty.

Mr. THURMAN. And was sentenced.

Mr. MATTHEWS. He was.

Mr. THURMAN. And was pardoned by President Hayes?

Mr. MATTHEWS. He was not.

Mr. THURMAN. Was he not?

Mr. MATTHEWS. He was not.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I am very much misinformed.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Well, I think you are. He served his entire time out in the Dayton jail, to which he was sent by the district judge, and the only interference on the part of the President was to suspend that portion of the sentence which required him to be incarcerated in the penitentiary.

Mr. THURMAN. Oh!

Mr. MATTHEWS. Oh, yes!

Mr. THURMAN. What does my colleague mean? Was he sentenced to be imprisoned a part of the time in a county jail and a part of the time in the penitentiary?

Mr. MATTHEWS. No, sir; he was sentenced to be imprisoned in the penitentiary.

Mr. THURMAN. Ah!

Mr. MATTHEWS. And at the request of his counsel and his friends he was sent to the Dayton jail instead, and all the President had to do with it, so far as I know, was simply to say that he need not be sent to the Ohio penitentiary at Columbus, but that the jail at Dayton was as safe a place, with as good company, perhaps, as could be found in Columbus.

Mr. THURMAN. There is one small difference in the laws of Ohio, that a sentence to the penitentiary disqualifies a man from being a voter or a witness, and a sentence to a county jail does not.

Mr. MATTHEWS. That may be the law of Ohio, but he was not convicted under the law of Ohio. I am eulogizing the Federal law on that account. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, look on this picture, then on that! In 1878 the Federal law was put in force, and the gentlemen talk about partisanship and partiality. The circuit judge was summoned to the bench for the purpose of exercising his functions under that law, himself a citizen of Tennessee, and personally entirely unacquainted with but few of the citizens of Cincinnati. On arriving there he made arrangements in order that, in accordance with the letter and spirit of the law, the democratic party should out of its own selection have an equal number of supervisors with the republicans, and thereupon the democratic party appeared in court by its attorney and in part in person, with the chairman of the executive committee, making a hurried visit from Columbus for the purpose of acting there as client or counsel, I know not which, and the question was deliberately raised, and asked with as much solemnity as could be assumed for the occasion, that the law was unconstitutional, that the express terms of the Constitution which lodges in Congress the very power to regulate the manner of the election of members of the House of Representatives was unconstitutional; but the circuit judge could not see it, and invited the organized representatives of the democratic party to nominate supervisors. But the democratic party, having found out by Judge Baxter's decision that the law was constitutional, then refused to have anything to do with it, and so they deliberately declined by an act of incivism to participate in the execution of a law intended solely and only for the purpose of protecting the ballot-box and preserving the purity of the election. And it was done; the ballot-box was protected; the purity of the election approximately was preserved; and the attempt, successful or unsuccessful in part to defeat the will of the people by stuffing boxes, by exchanging boxes, by forgeries of the returns, were detected and punished; and a democratic alderman of the city of Cincinnati suffered incarceration by reason of the verdict of a jury which, if not de medietate lingue, yet at least some of whom knew and spoke the shibboleth of democracy.

Mr. President, with that experience and personal knowledge of the efficiency and value of this legislation in the protection of a right which I hold to be as sacred and as dear as the right to life or liberty or property, because it underlies them all, I will stand here to-day till at least the brief period during which alone I shall longer be a member of this body before I shall ever consent to a vote or a step which shall wipe it from the statute-book. I should be recreant, according to my convictions of political and personal duty, to even the most sacred principle of free government as ordained and established, and I trust to be perpetuated in this country, if I should or could do otherwise.

Mr. President, these are the last words that I shall have to speak as a Senator of the United States. A few brief hours will put an end to my official service in this honorable and honored body. I am unable fitly and adequately to express the gratification which I have experienced by my associations with my brother Senators. I have experienced at their hands, one and all, without exception, nothing but kindness and consideration, far beyond anything that I merit; and my heart goes out to them, one and all, without any exception, brimful of grateful feeling for this undeserved consideration and respect. It is as noble and splendid a body intellectually and morally as I know anything of anywhere on this or any other continent. It is the most dignified, the grandest deliberative body in the world. It is the depository of the noblest trust and power. What I have said to-night or at any other time in criticism of any opinion, in reprehension of any vote, in opposition to any conduct, I pray you, one and all, to take as consistent and actually consisting with the highest personal respect for the motives of every individual member, and I shall carry away with me, whatever be my fortune and wherever my lot, nothing but the highest esteem, the deepest respect, and the warmest friendship for one and for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills: in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 5580) to authorize the President to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6525) to provide for the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, for use as a post-office and United States court, and for the accommodation of United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to recede made by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. HOAR and Mr. THURMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to take the floor from the Senator from Massachusetts if he desires to address the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I had proposed to address the Senate upon this question, but I do not wish to do it at this hour in the morning if the Senate desire to take a vote upon the report of the conference committee which is now before them, or desire to take a recess. If the debate is to go on I should like to address the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to speak about ten minutes if it would suit the Senator from Massachusetts to allow me to do so. [A pause.] Did the Senator hear?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; I heard, and I was reflecting, endeavoring to ascertain whether the Senate propose to take a vote. If the debate is to go on I propose to speak about ten minutes, and I should like to do it now. The Senator from Ohio has already spoken at great length.

Mr. THURMAN. Of course the Senator is recognized and I do not wish to take the floor from him.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator say he is recognized?

Mr. THURMAN. No; the Senator from Massachusetts is recognized, and, of course, I will not take the floor from him.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the threat which has been uttered by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] and the doctrine which has been announced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] and the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] well warrant a discussion protracted through the night and through the day. What is it which this threat, uttered, I had almost said, in the name and by the authority of one of the great parties of this country, is? It is nothing more nor less than this: that unless the legislation of the country is henceforth to be such as one House of Congress shall demand, the Government itself shall stop. It is the old rebellion, an attack upon the national life of the country reproduced, lacking none of its other old qualities but its openness and its courage.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts does not yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. HOAR. I do not yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator remembers the courtesy with which I treated him this afternoon when he took me entirely off my feet and sat me down.

Mr. HOAR. I will, before I get through, give the Senator full opportunity.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir. I wanted to propound one question. If the Senator declines, I shall not trouble him.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, two appropriation bills are before the Congress, one known as the Army bill, one known as the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. Upon one the country depends for its defense; upon the other it depends for the continuance of every one of its legislative, judicial, and executive functions; and we are told that unless the Constitution of this country shall be so far in practice changed that the powers of legislation, our function, shall be permitted to be usurped by a single one of the three concurrent powers in which they are now lodged, not only shall these bills fail for the day and for the session, but forever in future; at least so long as the present occupant of the Executive chair shall hold his office these legislative provisions shall stop. The Army is to be disbanded. The Indian of the frontier is to be flung again upon the defenseless homes of the settler over two thousand miles of our extended territory. The Mexican cattle-thief, banded with his fellows to sweep away from the farm in growing and imperial Texas the product of the yeoman's toil, as he crosses the border of the United States is to find but another Mexico. As the commerce of the world approaches our Pacific shores from Santa Barbara to San Juan de Fuca, and as it approaches our Atlantic shores from the Gulf to the northern extremity of Maine, the lighthouses must go out; the vessel is to find no hospitable welcome; the Navy which polices the sea and which carries the flag over the world is to sink or to be called home to rot upon the hulks. Every legislative body of a Territory provided for in this bill, every judicial court of a Territory provided for in this bill, every United States court, district and circuit, up to that supreme and august tribunal sitting in this Capitol, is to suspend its functions.

That is the precise thing that the democratic party threaten us that they will do. That is the constitutional method of settling disputed questions of constitutional law or of legislative expediency upon which the democratic party plants itself to-day.

Mr. President, said I not the truth when I said that this was a blow against the national life, meditated with as deadly purpose, and, if it succeed, to be accomplished with still more deadly effect than the one which too many of the members of the same party engaged themselves in the past.

The Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maryland undertake to justify this proposition, which I have understated, because in times past republican legislative bodies, not differing but agreeing, have found it a convenient method of bringing questions before their bodies under their rules by attaching them to appropriation bills. With the exception of one vicious and extreme instance, there cannot be found a precedent in American history of undertaking to attach these measures to appropriation bills as means of coercion. In the complication of the rules of the House of Representatives which makes it so difficult, especially in the closing hours of the session, to bring matters before that body in order, it has been found a convenient method to attach them to appropriation bills, which under the rules of that House go into Committee of the Whole, giving every member at his discretion an opportunity to move amendments.

The Senator from Ohio has undertaken to justify this threat by a most extraordinary interpretation, both of the English and the American constitution. He says that in England supplies have been sometimes withheld on great historic occasions until grievances were redressed. But what precedent is that for the regulation of our conduct? Supplies to whom? Supplies by a people governed to a monarch, to a despot, exercising all the functions of government. What a precedent is that to hold up to a self-governing people for the conduct of one of the servants of that people, limited and restrained in its constitutional power toward the other servants of the same master.

But the Senator from Ohio was mistaken in his facts. What kind of grievances, and how are grievances redressed in England under the power of withholding supplies? The grievances so redressed are the unconstitutional exercises of power and of prerogative by the monarch. Whoever heard of a claim in the House of Commons to compel the repeal of a law to which that body itself had given its assent according to the forms and methods of the English constitution by the repeal of supplies? On the contrary, it is out of order in both houses of the British Parliament to propose any measure of legislation on an appropriation bill or a bill for raising supplies. A single objection in either branch of the English Parliament excludes any measure of legislation from an appropriation bill or a money bill.

Mr. President, the want of knowledge of the English constitutional methods manifested by the distinguished Senator from Ohio is only surpassed by the want of knowledge which in this particular he has exhibited of the Constitution of his own country. He says that the power to originate appropriation bills, to which class these two bills belong, was denied to the Senate and exclusively vested in the House of Representatives, and he argues that it was done in order that this very result which they are now seeking might be accomplished. On the contrary, the convention that framed the Constitution expressly refused to vest the power of originating bills for appropriating money exclusively in the House of Representatives. The resolve which was brought before that convention ran somewhat in these terms: that the House shall have the sole power of originating bills for raising revenue and bills appropriating money. By a vote, I think unanimously, so far as the States were concerned, the latter clause was stricken out, and the first clause alone retained. Nothing was more certain than that, whatever may be the limit of the meaning of the term "bill for raising revenue," in our Constitution, whatever may be the limit of the term "money bills," if that term can be imported into our Constitution, the one thing that the framers of the Constitution did not mean was bills of the character of those we are considering.

This is, as I said, again in another guise the old rebellion with its attack on the very life of the country. The democratic party denied the power of the people to elect their President—a part of them, not all; and they took up arms that the President so elected might not assume the constitutional functions to which he had been called by the voice of the American people. Baffled and beaten and overthrown, it now demands that the President so elected shall surrender the legislative constitutional functions to which the people have called him, on the threat that unless that surrender be made they will so exert the powers which the confiding people have given to them as to bring the entire Government to destruction. Unless the President abdicates the constitutional power of the Executive there shall be no legislation, there shall be no military national functions for this Government henceforth and forever. That is the constitutional doctrine on which the ambition of the Senator from Ohio seeks to plant himself as he invites the confidence of the American people.

Mr. President, outrageous, revolting, unconstitutional, revolutionary, destructive, as this doctrine is, these qualities are emphasized anew when you consider the nature of the legislation which, by the exercise of this power, it is sought to strike from our statute-book. What is it that is demanded? These laws, no man denies, were placed years ago among the statutes of this country by constitutional methods, and in obedience to the expressed will of a majority of the American people. They are the law of the land, subject, as every legislative declaration of law is, to the interpretation and the final judgment of the judicial department of the country. They are the laws by which the sovereignty of the American people casts the shadow and the protection of the national power over the American citizen as he exercises the highest act of the citizen, his share in the sovereignty of this Republic. The meanest citizen, native or adopted, who travels anywhere on the face of the earth, in Abyssinia, in the Mediterranean, in England, among the savages on the African coast, is attended by the awful and overshadowing protection of the power of this Republic. The flag, wherever on the face of the earth it floats, by land or by sea, is the sure pledge in time of trouble or danger to the meanest American whose eyes may gaze upon it. But it is sought to strike from our legislation the sole mechanism by which he can invoke the power and the security of that flag, which the strongest nation on earth dares not invade, when he, a sovereign himself upon his throne, is exercising by the ballot the attribute of sovereignty. Shall the American citizen, shall the king, whose steps are attended in dominions of foreign power by this august and sublime emblem, not have it float over his head as he sits in his own palace and upon his own throne?

Mr. President, I have been ere now a traveler in foreign lands. I have seen the glories of art and architecture, and mountains and rivers. I have seen the sunset on the Jungfrau and the full moon rise over Mont Blanc; but the fairest vision on which these eyes ever looked was the flag of my country in a foreign port. Beautiful as a flower to those who love it, terrible as a meteor to those who hate it, it is the symbol of the power and the glory and the honor of forty-five millions of Americans. And now who dares to say that the citizen who as he travels abroad in trouble or danger turns his eyes to that august and powerful symbol, sure in its protection as if he stood within the very shadow of this Capitol, shall have that protection denied him when he exercises his constitutional right of selecting the servants who shall govern him?

Mr. President, I challenge my friends on the other side to pursue this issue, and to go to that vast jury, the American people, upon this question. I said that this doctrine was the doctrine of the old rebellion, lacking nothing but its courage. I impute to no man on the other side of this Chamber any want of manly courage. I know too well the gallantry of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, whether it was exerted on one side or on the other; but even they with all their gallantry, I tell them frankly, will find that they have not the courage to present this issue to the simple arbitrament of the conscience and the sense and the love of country of the American people.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have never had the good fortune which was enjoyed by the Senator from Massachusetts to see the sun rise over Mont Blanc, but I have seen many a fog rise over Washington City, and I must be allowed to say without disrespect to him that, as he has been here as long as I have, I fear the fogs that he has seen over Washington City have quite obliterated the impressions made by the sun rising over Mont Blanc, so far as his intellectual perceptions are concerned.

Mr. President, I spoke to-night unexpectedly, and when I was worn down and fatigued and perfectly exhausted. I retired after I had delivered my remarks to seek some repose. I am told that while I was absent from the Chamber several Senators did me the honor to reply, or at least to notice, the remarks that I made. I heard none of those remarks in reply to mine except the concluding remarks, ten or fifteen minutes, made by my colleague, and the remarks just delivered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I had in my mind at first to say something about the elections in Hamilton County, to which my colleague alluded and to which I had alluded before; but his closing observations, as well as my high personal regard for him, shall seal my mouth for to-night upon that subject. The time will come, and it will not be long, when if others do not I shall bring to the attention of the Senate of the United States the circumstances of the late congressional election in Hamilton County, Ohio, and it will then remain to be seen whether or no this law, which is so much lauded by my friends on the other side of the Chamber and so much condemned on this side of the Chamber, is an instrument to preserve the purity of elections or is an instrument of fraud and bribery.

The difference between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself is a difference in our opinions of the operations of the law. I agree with him that the humblest citizen in this country ought to be protected; but I do not think that any man ought to be protected, be he rich or be he poor, by means of packed juries; nor do I think that any man, be he rich or be he poor, ought to be punished by packed juries. He doubtless does not think that the present laws pack the juries. I think they do. There is the difference between us. We both agree that such things ought not to be. He thinks they do not exist; I think they do exist; and therein is the difference. Perhaps I differ with him in another respect. I think the possibility of their existence ought to be prevented. I would not hold my liberty at the discretion of any man, be he citizen, or be he judge, or be he juror. I want some safer guard for my liberty and my rights than the discretion or the mercy or the pity of any man whomsoever. I do not want to permit the possibility of a packed jury in the Federal courts of the United States.

Then, in regard to the election laws, there is a fundamental difference between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself. He thinks that these laws are necessary for the protection of the citizen in the exercise of his right of suffrage. I think their practical effect is to constitute a vast bribery fund by which elections, instead of being purified, are corrupted, and the money that corrupts the voter comes out of the Treasury of the people. There is wherein we differ again. We both agree that there ought to be pure elections; we both agree that every citizen ought to have a right to vote according to his own free will and judgment, but he regards these laws as protective of that right; I regard them as destructive of that right.

Mr. President, one word more. My colleague very forcibly presented his idea, which I suppose others presented, that I was advocating a power of coercion on the part of the House of Representatives. My colleague was pleased to speak about logic. If a man could be a judge in his own case, which is forbidden by the common law as well as by reason, I should say that whatever poor faculty I have is a faculty of logic and of analysis; and exercising it, such as it is, I fail to see the coercion that is spoken of. Let me try it a moment by a test. Suppose the House of Representatives pass an appropriation bill and the Senate put an amendment on that appropriation bill strictly legitimate. Suppose they annex an appropriation for some object, under their power to amend an appropriation bill, and the House decides it will not agree to that amendment, and the Senate says it will not recede from that amendment. Is there not just as much reason for saying that the Senate coerces the House on that subject as there is for saying that the House attempts to coerce the Senate on the present bill? The Senate puts an amendment on the House bill and appropriates money for an object for which the House is unwilling to appropriate money. The House say "We will not make that appropriation," and the Senate say "We will not pass the bill unless you do make the appropriation." Does not the Senate coerce the House, or attempt to coerce it, just as much as the House does the Senate in this case? And yet who will deny that the Senate might put that amendment upon the appropriation bill? Or take another case, not of a new appropriation moved by the Senate, but the House passes an appropriation bill and the Senate amends it by adding to it some provision, as we did three years ago in the river and harbor bill, when we provided that only so much of that money should be expended as the President in his discretion should see fit to expend. I do not use the exact language of the amendment, but that was its practical effect. Suppose the House had said "We will not submit to this," and the Senate had said "We will not recede from the amendment," might it not just as well be said that the Senate sought to coerce the House?

In respect to the Executive, suppose both the Houses of Congress pass an appropriation bill, or any other bill, and it goes to the Executive for his approval and he declines to approve it; he vetoes it, must both Houses of Congress necessarily surrender their opinion? Must they frame a new bill to suit the wishes of the Executive? If so, then the Executive coerces the Houses of Congress. Mr. President, this will not do. This reasoning will not stand the test of logic and analysis at all. There is no coercion whatsoever; there is simply a difference between the two Houses or between both Houses and the Executive, and if that should result in a failure of the bill, it is not coercion either on the one hand or upon the other.

That is all, Mr. President, that I deem it necessary to say now in answer to the criticisms that have been offered of what has been called a dangerous doctrine. Yes, I have one thing to say further. I am quite willing to take my share of responsibility in support of the doctrine which I have sustained. I believe it to be sound doctrine; and whether it shall meet the approval of the American people or not, I am willing to stand or to fall upon it.

DISTRICT CHURCH PROPERTY.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I do not propose to participate in the discussion of the question now pending before the Senate, but I do propose to ask the Senate to indulge me for one moment to ask that the pending question may be informally laid aside, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the House bill to restore the churches in the District of Columbia to the trustees of the respective congregations. Under what I conceive to be a somewhat doubtful but proper construction of the act of 1874, the churches of the District of Columbia were assessed for taxes to the extent of about $47,000. Almost every church in the District of Columbia has been sold and the title passed into the District of Columbia. It is very desirable, in my opinion, that the act of 1874, so far as it affects those churches, should be repealed and the title restored to the trustees of the respective churches. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to allow that bill to be considered and passed. It will not take five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the pending question be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of taking up the bill indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3690) to relieve the churches of the District of Columbia, and to clear the title of the trustees to such property.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 7, after the word "exemptions," to insert "from taxation;" in line 8, after the word "property," to strike out "from taxation" and insert "which was actually held and used for the purpose of divine worship;" so as to read:

That so much of an act of Congress entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, as was construed to authorize the commissioners of the District to set aside former exemptions from taxation of church property which was actually held and used for the purpose of divine worship, and to enforce a tax upon such property, be, and is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as section 2 the following:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they hereby are, authorized and required to refund to the trustees or other proper officers of such church or churches as have paid the taxes assessed against them under the act of June 20, 1874, such sums respectively as were paid by each upon property actually held and used for the purpose of divine worship.

Mr. HOAR. That seems to be a very important bill. I should like to have the Senator state in a word or two what it is.

Mr. HARRIS. I send a report to the desk which states all the facts more succinctly than I could state them verbally. It will not take three minutes to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. HARRIS on the 15th of April, 1878:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3690) to relieve the churches of the District of Columbia and to clear the title of the trustees to such property, has had the same under consideration, and report:

That by referring to your committee by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, it will be seen that under act of June 20, 1874, the church property within the District was valued at $1,590,744, and that the taxes assessed upon the church property in the city of Washington amounted to $42,773.82; in Georgetown, $2,891.37; in the county of Washington, $985.90; making an aggregate of $46,651.09; of which amount $2,566.68 has been collected, leaving $44,084.41, with accrued penalty of $3,360.82, making an aggregate of $47,445.23 of unpaid taxes.

The property was advertised in June, 1875, at a cost to the District of $744.15, which, added to unpaid taxes, makes $48,189.38 as the aggregate charges against said property, at which price the District of Columbia became the purchaser at the tax sale, and now holds said property subject to redemption by the payment of said sum with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from 29th June, 1875, the date of sale.

The bill under consideration repeals so much of the act of 20th June, 1874, as authorized the levy of this tax, and relinquishes the title acquired under the tax sale, and reverts the same in the trustees of the several churches.

The committee report the bill back with an amendment, confining its operations to property actually held and used for the purpose of public worship.

Seriously doubting, as the committee does, the wisdom of the policy of taxing property held and used for the purpose of public worship, the committee recommends that the title to all such property be restored to the various churches, and that the sum of $2,566.68, heretofore collected under the said assessment by the commissioners of the District, be refunded to the trustees of the churches which paid the same, as it would be unjust to retain the funds so collected when the churches that failed to pay are released from liability.

Mr. McMILLAN. I object to that bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Have I the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, if I am in order, I shall ask that the present and all pending orders be postponed in order that I may move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. It is a House bill.

Mr. HARRIS. It is a House bill. I will state to the Senator from Maine that I was instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report the bill with two amendments, and I believe, even late as the hour is, the amendments will be concurred in by the House if we can get them there.

Mr. BLAINE. Let us vote.

Mr. CONKLING. Did the Chair rule that the bill is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asked that the pending question be laid temporarily aside for the purpose of taking up this bill. The Chair so stated and asked objections, and heard none, and the bill was being considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the Chair quite right there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments were read. The Chair was about putting the question on the second amendment when the Senator from Massachusetts asked the Senator from Tennessee to state the purport of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understood the report to be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has just been read.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not understand the bill to be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been taken up and is in Committee of the Whole. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to insert an additional section to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

D. W. McCLUNG.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the consent of the Senate to call up House bill No. 1827.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I hope the Senate will agree to take that up. It is a very meritorious case and will occupy no time.

Mr. CONKLING. While the Secretary is looking for that bill I wish to make a remark. I hope after that bill is passed we shall have a vote on the motion for a conference and then take a recess until some time to enable us to go and get some breakfast at least.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama calls for the regular order. It will be the duty of the Chair to put the question on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] that the Senate recede from a certain amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Had not the Senator from Pennsylvania unanimous consent for something?

Mr. MATTHEWS. I understood that the bill was taken up.

Mr. BLAINE. There was unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent was granted, as the Chair understood.

Mr. CONKLING. The Secretary was looking for the bill to read it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1827) for the relief of D. W. McClung, of Woodsdale, Butler County, Ohio. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to D. W. McClung, late a captain and assistant quartermaster of United States volunteers, the amount of pay and allowances of a regimental quartermaster from the 26th of April, 1861, to the 21st of March, 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an exceptional order. By unanimous consent the bill is before the Senate. The Senator can have the regular order when this is disposed of.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senate to take a vote upon the pending motion that the Senate recede from its amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and then if it is desired to take a recess until ten o'clock we can do so. Let me say that there is another bill here from the House, the Army bill, upon which this question can be debated for the brief time that will be left as well as on this bill; and I desire that this bill may go back to the House in order to give the House an opportunity to vote upon it if it may wish to do so.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to pass a little disability bill that there is no trouble about in the world?

Mr. WINDOM. I think we ought to decide the question one way or the other. I should be glad to yield, but there are so many Senators appealing to me that I must insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota objects. Mr. WHYTE. I ask that a bill to correct a mistake in a pay account be taken up; it will not take a minute.

Mr. WINDOM. There are a dozen Senators who desire to have private bills passed. I think this vote ought to be taken, and then let the Senate remain in session or take a recess as it may deem best.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please resume their seats, and let quiet be restored to the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask again for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is recognizing it. The Senator from Minnesota is asking for a vote upon the pending question. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] that the Senate recede from its amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which has been indicated.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES, (when his name was called.) On this subject I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.]

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when Mr. HOWE's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. HOWE] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY.]

Mr. BECK, (when Mr. McCREERY's name was called.) The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREERY] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.]

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when Mr. MORRILL's name was called.) On this question my colleague, [Mr. MORRILL,] who is detained at home by illness, is paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. WITHERS. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] My colleague would vote "yea." I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with some gentleman on the other side.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (after having voted "yea.") I voted under a misapprehension. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] If here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR, (after having voted "nay.") Very early in the evening I had a conversation with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] He proposed to pair with me, intending to be absent from the Chamber for a time. We both stayed in the Chamber for some time afterward, and the arrangement escaped my memory. I desire to withdraw my vote. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] has left the Chamber, considering himself paired with me.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] left the Chamber under the impression that he was paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. RANSOM. My colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] is absent from the Chamber, and is paired.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 30; as follows:

So the Senate refused to recede.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] that the Senate insist upon its amendments.

Mr. THURMAN. I have another motion to submit first. I move to recede from the amendment striking out the words beginning with line 2170 and ending with the word "repealed" in line 2194. That is an amendment of the Senate, and I move to recede from the amendment of the Senate striking out the provision of the House bill relating to jurors.

Mr. ALLISON. We have just taken a vote on all that clause as a single amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. But my motion before included not only that, but more.

Mr. CONKLING. That will not do.

Mr. THURMAN. Because the motion failed, that will not prevent me from moving to strike out this.

Mr. ALLISON. Here is a single amendment upon which we voted. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio can move to recede—

Mr. EDMUNDS. He cannot move to recede with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio can move to recede from any amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. That motion has been made.

Mr. THURMAN. No; I moved to recede from an amendment that contained two parts, one in relation to jurors and the other in relation to the election law. I moved to recede from that whole amendment. That motion the Senate has negatived; but that does not prevent me from moving to strike out the part that relates to one of those different subjects.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes it does.

Mr. THURMAN. My motion now is to recede from the amendment of the Senate, striking out a part of the House bill which relates to jurors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves to recede from the amendment he has named.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that an amendment by itself, as adopted by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understands.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported.

Mr. CONKLING. It was all one amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a single amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I raise the point of order that the Senate—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it was one amendment it cannot now be divided.

Mr. THURMAN. It is not one amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. It is one amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg pardon; according to my recollection I called for a division.

Mr. ALLISON. Here is the record showing that it is but one amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York rises to a question of order.

Mr. CONKLING. My point of order is that an amendment which the Senate has made is the subject of a motion to recede, which motion has been made, and further that the question is not affected at all by the fact that the Senator from Ohio asked a division on the amendment because it contained two propositions. Although we did vote upon one branch and then upon the other branch, it was upon two branches of the same amendment. He has now moved to recede from that amendment, the Senate has voted down his motion, and I insist that he cannot now move to recede from a part of that entire amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was under the impression that there were two amendments, and in that case the Senator from Ohio having moved to recede from one and having left the other distinct could now move to recede from that. Upon the statement of the Senator from New York that the amendment was a single one, but taken in divisions in the Senate, it does not change the character of being a single amendment now. Therefore the motion to recede from it is not in order.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] that the Senate insist upon its amendments.

Mr. THURMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio appeals from the decision of the Chair. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. THURMAN. Is that question debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is debatable.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I wish to say that here was a proposition by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out certain matters in the House bill. The matters they proposed to strike out were two entirely distinct subjects, one relating to juries, the other relating to elections. No subjects could be more distinct than they were; and because they reported the bill with a proposition to strike them out, as they reported them with a proposition to strike out four or five or six or seven of the succeeding pages of this bill, that did not make it all one amendment. The Senator from New York might as well contend that all that they proposed to strike out was one amendment. The question whether it is one amendment, or two amendments, or three amendments must depend upon the nature of the subject, whether it is divisible or not. According to my recollection, when the question was upon striking out, recognizing the fact of the divisibility of these questions, the Senate did divide them on my demand for a division, and first voted on the question of striking out the provision in relation to juries, and afterward voted on the question of striking out the proposition in relation to the election laws, because they were distinct provisions, not one amendment but two amendments relating to distinct subjects.

I moved to recede from the amendments striking out these two provisions, not from the amendment in the singular number but from the amendments striking out those two provisions. The Senate negatived my motion, because it may be that some Senators would vote in favor of striking out one, but would not be in favor of striking out the other. How, then, can it be insisted for a moment that after that negative vote I may not move to recede from the amendment striking out one of those distinct propositions?

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Ohio falls into a not unnatural, but very manifest error, as I think it will appear, in regard to the history of this matter. There came from the House in this bill a provision, which provision contained a certain number of lines, in all about thirty, which lines proposed to repeal two sections of the statutes and to enact certain substantive matter. The Committee on Appropriations in reporting the bill back to the Senate reported as one of its amendments to strike out all these lines together.

Mr. THURMAN. And they reported to strike out sixty or seventy other lines.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me to complete what I am saying, he will certainly see that that observation of his is very foreign to the point between us. They reported as an amendment to strike out, as I have said, the lines doing these things. That was one amendment, and if as the Senator wants now to argue, it was only a part of one amendment, then the argument he makes is so much weaker and the objection to it is so much the more conclusive.

Mr. THURMAN. There were two amendments.

Mr. CONKLING. I will wait to hear the Senator ejaculate from his seat three or four times in the midst of what I am saying—

Mr. THURMAN. I say the question being divisible their report to the Senate to strike out two subjects which were entirely separate from each other was two amendments and not one amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, that is the third time the Senator has made that statement. Now I beg to assure him that I understand him; and it will not be necessary for him here, without asking my permission, to ejaculate again that that is his position or to get up and interrupt me.

The answer to the Senator at that point is that the fact is expressly otherwise as the record shows, and shows it out of his own mouth, because he was the Senator who rose and demanded a division of the amendment, and what folly and stultification would that be if there were two separate amendments? Did the Senator from Ohio, practiced as he is in parliamentary proceeding, ever rise and demand that one amendment should be divided from another from which it was entirely separate and distinct? I think not; and therefore the Senator answers himself when he persists in reminding us that he demanded a division of the question. So he did, and on the ground recognized in the rule, as in the parliamentary law, that, although one amendment, it contained more than one substantive proposition; and accordingly exercising his right under the rule he brought the Senate to vote first upon striking out twenty lines, and the Senate voted to strike them out; and then he brought the Senate to vote upon striking out the residue of those lines, namely, from 2194 down to 2203, that being all that the bill contained down to "the southern claims commission;" and the Senate voted to strike out that part of the amendment. Thus the Senate concurred, and the Committee of the Whole concurred in this one of the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Now, the honorable Senator with entire propriety, in a parliamentary sense, has moved that the Senate recede from that amendment, both branches of which were thus adopted by two votes; and that having been disposed of, then the Senator rises and moves to recede from a part of the amendment and insists upon it that because he divided the amendment, thereby it became two amendments and ceased to be one amendment. That is all there is of it. Unfortunately the motion to recede is not divisible. He made that motion covering the whole amendment. The Senate has voted it down, and he has exhausted his remedy in that direction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here is the bill itself [exhibiting] and here are the Senate amendments sent to the House of Representatives, the original. The part of the bill which covers this whole subject upon which we have just now voted, is contained in this description in the message that the Senate sent to the House of Representatives, and which has been before that body for its consideration:

Page 58, strike out all after "dollars" in line 22 down to and including line 22, page 59.

That amendment, thus proposed by the Senate to the House of Representatives, includes the whole of this disputed subject, has been sent to the House of Representatives, and they have refused to concur in it. The House of Representatives might have concurred in that amendment with a qualification if they wanted to propose it. If this bill were sent back to the House of Representatives they might again change our proposition or propose to do so; but the law of this parliament has been until to-night, and of every other parliamentary body, that the House that has got its own amendment back again, cannot change the form in which it was sent to the other House for its action, any more than it can amend one of its own bills after it has passed it; it must take the whole or none; it must be "fifty-four-forty or fight."

Here is the law. I do not know whether it prevails in Ohio or among the democratic party; but it is in Jefferson's Manual; but he was not a democrat in any sense in which that term is now understood:

Either House may recede from its amendment and agree to the bill; or recede from their disagreement to the amendment, and agree to the same absolutely, or with an amendment; for here the disagreement and receding destroy one another, and the subject stands as before the disagreement.

But the House cannot recede from or insist on its own amendment, with an amendment; for the same reason that it cannot send to the other House, an amendment to its own act after it has passed the act. They may modify an amendment from the other House by ingrafting an amendment on it, because they have never assented to it; but they cannot amend their own amendment, because they have, on the question, passed it in that form.

The substance of what the Senator from Ohio wishes to do, is to send a message back to the House of Representatives; not upon this record, but to make a new one, and to amend the amendment that we have already agreed to, change it so that it is entirely a different proposition, to send back to the House from what it was before. That Thomas Jefferson, good authority for me, as he always was, says cannot be done. My learned and honorable friend from Ohio says it can; and where two such doctors disagree, what shall the rest of us do?

Mr. THURMAN. The trouble between the doctor from Vermont and the doctor from Ohio is that the doctor from Vermont knows a great deal of technical rules of order and the doctor from Ohio knows no rules of order except the rules of common sense.

Now, in respect to this business, what is the actual state of the case? The Senate Committee on Appropriations reported a recommendation to the Senate to strike out certain lines of the House bill, about one hundred and fifty I think. Certain of those lines related to juries, certain of them related to elections, certain of them related to the southern claims commission, and others related to other subjects. They reported the bill with those recommendations. The subjects were perfectly divisible; they related to wholly distinct propositions. In that state of the case the Senate voted first on the proposition to strike out the provision of the House bill in relation to juries, and that motion prevailed, the recommendation of the committee was adopted. Then the Senate voted on the proposition to strike out so much of the House bill as related to elections, and that proposition prevailed. Now the House having disagreed to our amendment, I moved to recede from—I do not care whether you call it one amendment or whether you call it two amendments—I moved to recede from our proposition to strike out certain lines in the bill; and the Senate has said "No; we will not strike out those lines." But non constat that the Senate would not strike out some of the lines. There may be, however, Senators who would vote not to strike out all of them who would yet be perfectly willing to strike out part of them; there may be Senators who were unwilling to strike out both propositions who would be perfectly willing to strike out one of the propositions; and therefore, because I have moved to strike out both propositions and that motion has failed, it is said that I cannot move to strike out one of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My honorable friend, if he will pardon me, is mistaken, as he will see, in his statement of the case. The motion must be to recede. There can be no motion to amend our own amendment that has come back from the House, as all the books say. His motion, therefore, as made properly with his knowledge of parliamentary law, the only motion he could make in that direction, was to recede from the amendment; but the trouble is he having lost that, or if he had not lost it if it were entirely new he could not move to recede from part of the amendment because that sends an amendment of our own we once passed back to the House in a different form. The Senator from Ohio will bear in mind that this amendment of ours is not before the Senate as it was when his motion for a division was made which was on the question whether this amendment should be agreed to and before the amendments were engrossed and the bill read the third time; but this amendment has gone through all its stages just as a bill would that has passed and gone to the House of Representatives, just like a law. They do not agree to it and send it back just as they would not agree to a bill we sent over of the same kind. Does not the Senator see plainly that if a bill were to come back in that way we could not amend that bill and send it back to the House of Representatives to see if they would not agree to it in some other form? That is just this proposition. It was a distinct proposition made to the House of Representatives, and it has passed through this body in all its stages, and the messages sent accordingly and in perfect accordance with the votes and the proprieties of the occasion. Therefore it is not competent now to divide that up or to cut it up because it is entirely out of our power; it has passed and under parliamentary law the only motion is to recede or insist or adhere.

Mr. THURMAN. The difference between my friend from Vermont and myself is that he prefers to speak in the singular number and I prefer to speak in the plural. He says "this amendment" and I say "these amendments."

Mr. EDMUNDS handed Mr. THURMAN the engrossed copy of the Senate amendments.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Vermont is kind enough to bring me this engrossed bill and amendments. I find one Senate amendment is:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 2169, down to and including "repealed," in line 2203, on page 90.

Does that make it one amendment? Does that mere phraseology make it one amendment when the matter stricken out is in substance two different substantive propositions? You might have a proposition to strike out all after the enacting clause or all after the first section, but would that make it one amendment? What is the question, as to whether it is one amendment or two amendments? Is it a mere question of form?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator says it is competent to strike out. I submit to him that that cannot be the motion at this stage of the bill. It must be to recede or adhere or insist, those parliamentary motions that are made when a bill is pending between two Houses.

Mr. THURMAN. My motion is to recede.

Mr. ALLISON. That motion has been made and failed. Now the Senator moves to strike out a portion.

Mr. THURMAN. No; I move to recede from our amendment to strike out—

Mr. ALLISON. That has been voted down.

Mr. THURMAN. No. The difference between the Senator from Vermont and myself is this: he insists that this is one amendment, because he finds in this language that in form it is one amendment. I say that does not decide the question at all. I say the question is whether in substance the amendments are two or more. In other words, I must confess—and I do not say this in disrespect of anybody, certainly I hope I never am disrespectful to anybody; I certainly never am intentionally—this mere sticking in the bark, this mere adherence to form, this mere love of "leather and prunella," is not the way in which to consider a subject like this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My honorable friend has fallen into a little mistake in his statement. Instead of sticking in the bark, my honorable friend is barking at the stick. [Laughter.] That is what the trouble is.

Mr. THURMAN. Upon my word, I am so dull this morning at eight o'clock after this long session that I really do not understand the wit of that remark. What I mean is simply this: there is no rule of order, there is no parliamentary law that can be of much validity if it violates common sense. I am reminded of what I heard a venerated chief-justice of Ohio say once when certain authorities were presented to him that staggered the old man a little, but which he knew, if he followed them, would cause him to decide the cause unjustly, and he said, "Whoever thinks the law requires injustice is mistaken as to what is the law." And so I think whoever insists on parliamentary rules that require a violation of common sense is mistaken as to what the parliamentary rules are. The question whether there is one amendment or two amendments is a question not of form but of substance. It is not a question in what particular form the Secretary of the Senate has sent the amendment to the House, or the Clerk of the House has sent it to the Senate. It is a question worthy of men, worthy of men of brains. It is a question whether the propositions are distinct, substantive propositions.

Nobody denies that these are distinct, substantive propositions; one relates to juries, the other relates to elections. No subjects could be more distinct; no propositions could be more distinct, substantive propositions; and to say that we are bound up by the message that the clerks of this House sent to the House of Representatives on that subject, and as they in form made it one amendment, when in substance and in fact and in reason and in truth they are two wholly distinct propositions; and, therefore, when the Senate produced this amendment striking out both clauses it cannot recede from its amendment striking out one, although the majority of the Senate may have been occasioned by the fact that a majority were not in favor of striking out both, but a majority might be in favor of striking out one, is haeret in cortice, is sticking in the bark.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves to lay the appeal on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for another conference.

Mr. WINDOM. My motion did not ask for another conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion, then, is simply to insist on the amendments.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 26.

Mr. EATON. I want to know upon what bill or amendment we are voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are dividing now.

Mr. EATON. Not the one recently before us?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The same bill.

Mr. EATON. Then it is on the table. The motion was made that it be laid on the table. ["Oh, no!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from New York was to lay the appeal on the table. That did not carry the bill.

The division having been continued and concluded, the yeas were 24.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We had better have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WITHERS, (when the name of Mr. JOHNSTON was called.) My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] The Senator from California would vote "yea," my colleague would vote "nay." I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] He would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. BECK, (when the name of Mr. MCCREERY was called.) My colleague [Mr. MCCREERY] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.] My colleague would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. MITCHELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.] If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BARNUM. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EUSTIS, (after having voted in the negative.) I voted inadvertently. I withdraw my vote; I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] who is absent is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES.] My colleague would have voted "yea" if he were present.

The result was announced—Yeas 29, nays 24; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. WINDOM was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish the same order could be taken in regard to the Army bill which was sent back from the House, that has just been taken in regard to the legislative appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the message from the House respecting the Army bill.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say a word on the bill.

Mr. EATON. I thought I had the floor. I want to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia rises to this bill on its amendments to which the Senate has insisted.

Mr. EATON. I desire to say one word about the bill we have just voted on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. EATON. It is on the table of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the table of the Senate for the moment; it will be sent back to the House in a moment.

Mr. EATON. It ought not to be sent back. The Senate has laid it on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. The order has been made to return it with a notification of our action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order has been made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rose before the order was made.

Mr. EATON. I was going to move the indefinite postponement of the bill in order to say that we, thinking there were two branches of vicious legislation, have striven to take both from that bill, and after failing in that, we then proposed to offer to take simply the jury part of the bill, and that was refused by our opponents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not exactly correct.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the Senate insist—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President—

Mr. BLAINE. How is that bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator rose immediately after the close of the vote on the question on which the Senate insists.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no pending question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then how can a Senator debate it?

Mr. BLAINE. That bill is not before the Senate at all in any form.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am trying to bring it before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the motion first and then debate on it afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to hear the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Chair whether it is competent for the Senate now to ask for a further conference on that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has insisted and the bill is ordered to be sent to the House. If the Senator now desires to move a committee of conference, it is in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has the bill in charge, whether or not he intends to make that motion? If not, I will make it. I should prefer that he make it, though.

Mr. WINDOM. I will answer the Senator, if he will allow me. I did not include in my motion to insist the motion to ask for a further committee of conference, for the reason, as I stated in presenting the report, that the committee on the part of the Senate were distinctly, unequivocally, informed by the committee on the part of the House that no proposition whatever would be entertained unless the Senate would accept of all the amendments proposed by the House, or unless the Senate would retire from all its amendments striking out these two provisions of the House bill. Believing that it was utterly useless to ask another committee of conference, and being so informed, in fact, I did not include that in my motion.

Mr. BLAINE. Let the House ask for it if they want it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think it possible an understanding may be arrived at if the chairman of the committee would move a further conference. That being the case, I should desire very much to see it done. We have three or four hours yet, and something may be done.

Mr. WINDOM. It is in the power of the House to ask for a further conference if they desire it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. To test the sense of the Senate, I move a further conference on the part of the Senate, and ask for a rising vote. I do not want delay; I do not make the motion for the purpose of delaying the Senate or in any way incumbering the work; but I think an effort ought to be made to produce an agreement if possible, and let us see who is in favor of it and who is not.

Mr. BLAINE. The official advice that we have from the House is that they will consent to nothing. Now, if when this bill goes back again they ask for a conference, that will be some little indication of a change of heart on their part; but why should we beg them to confer when they have sent us word that they will not have anything to do at all in the way of conferring?

Mr. EATON. Is there any such official advisement? A conversation between our very honorable chairman of that committee and some member of the House committee is not, I beg to say, official advisement to the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. The message from the House is here insisting, and not asking a further conference, as I understood.

Mr. EATON. I heard no such message.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask to have the message read.

Mr. BLAINE. Read the last message.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to leave the future action upon this bill with the republican side of the Chamber, who have the majority and control of this body. So far as I am concerned, I shall make no motion and give no vote that does not emanate from the other side of the House, who have the control of this whole matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we can have a vote at once, I will not make any point of order; otherwise I will make a point of order, and insist upon it, that the moment the Senate has insisted without in the same proposition asking for a conference on the bill, under the usual order of the Senate that is instantly entered the Senate has ordered that the bill be sent to the House of Representatives, and it is of no consequence whether the bill lies on the table or not, the Senator must move to reconsider the order by which it was ordered to be sent to the House of Representatives, before we can go further, and until that is reconsidered this bill is not before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so stated and the Senator from West Virginia so moved.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am told a majority of the House do not want to ask a further conference. That being so, I withdraw the motion. I leave the responsibility on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We accept it with great satisfaction. I only want to say this: we are officially informed by our conferees, as they have a right and as it is their duty to inform us, because what takes place between conference committees each House is entitled to know, that the Representatives of the other House, and therefore the House itself speaking through its chosen agents, have told us that they will consent to no modification whatever. What sort of a dignity is it in this body that, after that, goes begging to the House to ask them, after they have given us a final answer, whether they will not try it again? It is for them to reconsider their determination if they wish to invite us to a conference, which of course we shall cheerfully meet them in.

Mr. EATON. I beg to say that there has been no such official communication, and the chairman of our committee did not so state if I heard him aright. He did not state that the House conferees as a body made that statement. I did not so understand him.

Mr. WINDOM. I did say that the majority of the House conferees representing the majority of the House of Representatives did so state, that no proposition could be received unless the Senate would recede from all of its amendments striking out the legislation in the bill; and it was further stated that an organization existed in the House which, if they recede upon any of these propositions, would filibuster till the hammer fell at twelve o'clock, and defeat this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask a question? I have asked it several times of the Chair and received no response. Is there any message from the House informing the Senate that they have insisted or adhered, asking no committee of conference?

Mr. WINDOM. This is reported to the Senate, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. Therefore we know nothing about the House. I shall vote for one, whoever makes the motion, for another committee of conference. I see no reason for not doing it and I see several reasons for doing it.

Mr. BLAINE. When I spoke before, I supposed the indorsement on the legislative bill was the same as on the Army bill, that the House had sent the bill with a vote of insistence without asking a conference. I think that usually, almost without exception, the rule is to ask a second conference; and therefore I will move, in addition to insisting, that we ask a conference on the legislative bill, which is the regular mode; and it will be exceptional if we depart from it. The Army bill is here and they have sent it insisting without asking a conference. This has not been before them a second time. We want this to go before them with a request for a conference. I shall vote for that, and I move it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No direct word has been sent us except in the usual parliamentary way, and I do not see any reason why we should not agree to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that a further committee of conference be asked upon the legislative bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to go regularly, and the first step is to reconsider the order by which the bill was sent to the House.

Mr. BLAINE. That may be the desire of the Senator from Vermont, but it is not in the slightest degree necessary. I move that a message be sent to the House asking for a second conference. It is not of the least consequence whether it goes separately or in the same message.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The only point is that the papers on which the conference is moved must be in possession of the House moving the conference. That I believe is the parliamentary law. Now, in order to do things regularly, the order having been entered that these papers be sent to the House of Representatives, in contemplation of parliamentary law they are sent. I do not care anything about it on this occasion only to have the Journal appear regularly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsidering the order sending the bill to the House of Representatives? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rose to make this motion before that order was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It had gone from the Senate by order, and therefore was not in the possession of the Senate. Now the Senator from Maine moves that a further conference be asked.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. THEODORE F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of J. Russell Barber; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THANKS TO VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are due, and hereby are tendered, to Hon. WILLIAM A. WHEELER, Vice-President, for the uniformly able, courteous, and impartial manner in which he has presided over their deliberations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

J. G. BLAINE,
WM. B. ALLISON,
WM. A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ABRAM S. HEWITT,
WM. A. J. SPARKS,
CHAS. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, I move that the Senate simply insist. This is the third conference on the Army bill, and the record of the House last sent is that they have insisted without asking a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate do now take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The conference committee on the legislative bill has not yet been appointed.

Mr. CONKLING. I wait until the conference committee is appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] the managers at the conference on the part of the Senate on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, I insist on my motion for a recess. I want an opportunity to get something to eat.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not. I want an opportunity to get something to eat. I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at eight o'clock and twenty minutes a. m., Tuesday, March 4) the Senate took a recess until ten o'clock a. m.

MORNING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at ten o'clock a. m., (Tuesday, March 4.)

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The SECRETARY (GEORGE C. GORHAM, esq.) called the Senate to order, and said: Senators, the following note has been addressed to the Secretary of the Senate by the Vice-President:

VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1879.

SIR: As I shall not again occupy the chair during the present session of the Senate, please notify it of that fact, to the end that it may choose a President pro tempore.

Respectfully,

W. A. WHEELER,
Vice-President.

To the SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Secretary, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Vice-President being absent.) That Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY, one of the Senators from the State of Michigan, be, and he hereby is, appointed President pro tempore of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution? There is none.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to amend the resolution by substituting the name of "ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio."

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Delaware moves to amend by substituting. The question is on the amendment to the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I inquire whether a quorum of the Senate is present.

The SECRETARY. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, the Secretary will order the roll to be called to ascertain. The roll of Senators will be called.

The roll was called.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] who has not responded to his name is detained at his house by illness. He is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

The SECRETARY. Thirty-nine Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the absentees had better be called.

Mr. HILL. There is a quorum. There is no use of calling the absentees.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Rhode Island requests that the absentees be called. The absentees will be called.

The list of absentees was called.

The SECRETARY. Forty Senators have answered to their names. More than a quorum of Senators is present. The question before the Senate is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the resolution be reported.

The SECRETARY. The resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island is as follows:

Resolved, (the Vice-President being absent.) That Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY, one of the Senators from the State of Michigan, be, and he hereby is, appointed President pro tempore of the Senate.

The Senator from Delaware proposes to amend by striking out "THOMAS W. FERRY, one of the Senators from the State of Michigan," and inserting "ALLEN G. THURMAN, of Ohio."

Senators in favor of the amendment will signify the same by saying "ay," those opposed "no." [Putting the question.] The Secretary will not decide.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) Mr. Secretary, on this motion I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WITHERS, (when Mr. JOHNSTON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] on political questions. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BECK, (when Mr. MCCREERY's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. MCCREERY] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND.] If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) On political questions I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] If he were here, I should vote "yea" and I dare say he would vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 28; as follows:

Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Dennis,	Jones of Florida,	Voorhees,
Beck,	Eaton,	Kernan,	Wallace,
Butler,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Whyte,

Anthony,	Conover,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Dawes,	Matthews,	Saunders,
Booth,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Spencer,
Burnside,	Hamlin,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Oglesby,	Wadleigh,

So the amendment was rejected.

The SECRETARY. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] will please come forward and take the chair.

Mr. FERRY thereupon took the chair, being escorted to it by Mr. THURMAN and Mr. ANTHONY, and said: Thanking you, Senators, for this renewal of your generous confidence, I enter at once upon the duties to which you have chosen me. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. M. J. DURHAM of Kentucky, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio, managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 174) for the relief of Thomas B. Hunt;

A bill (S. No. 184) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior, for entry and sale, all lands in the State of Florida not needed for naval purposes;

A bill (S. No. 1582) providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Dakota;

A bill (S. No. 1691) giving the consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into between the States of Virginia and Maryland respecting the boundary between said States; and

A bill (S. No. 1852) granting an increase of pension to Ward B. Burnett.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 250) donating condemned cannon to the Williams Monument Association; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETER G. MILLS.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I have a bill here for the relief of a poor soldier, which it will not take a minute to pass. It is a House bill passed there last April and reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1167) for the relief of Peter G. Mills. It directs the Secretary of War to cause the records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army to be so amended as to discharge Peter G. Mills, late of Company K, Fourth Minnesota Infantry Volunteers, from the service of the United States on the 7th of August, 1865, and granting him an honorable discharge, and correcting the record as to his muster-out of Company K, Tenth Minnesota Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. F. ROCKWELL.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I call up order of business No. 1128, being the bill (H. R. No. 2457) for the relief of A. F. Rockwell, aid-de-camp on the staff of General Buell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to recognize A. F. Rockwell as first lieutenant and aid-de-camp from the 26th of October, 1861, to the 17th of September, 1863; to complete his record for service rendered, and to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to admit the accounts on which he has been paid for the period embraced between those dates.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is that a bill upon the Calendar?

Mr. WADLEIGH. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has it been reported by a committee?

Mr. WADLEIGH. It was reported by me from the Committee on Military Affairs on the 21st of February.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANVILLE O. HALLER.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 63. I will state that it passed the House and is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, we should be careful about passing bills at this hour of the session, when hasty legislation may do harm. I think all these bills had better be read for information first.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly; after this has been read there will be no objection to it. It has been recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. R. No. 63) requiring the assembling of a court of inquiry in the case of Major Granville O. Haller, late of the Seventh Infantry, United States Army; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. GALL.

Mr. OGLESBY. I move to take up order of business 1059, a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Gall.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 1209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Gall, deceased, late of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to recognize the military service of John W. Gall, deceased, late of the One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, by paying to his legal representatives the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from March 9, 1863, to November 1, 1863, and the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of infantry from February 20, 1864, to January 25, 1865, deducting therefrom the amount of pay received by Gall as a private soldier or non-commissioned officer of the regiment for the period named.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment, which was in line 11 to strike out "March 9" and insert "June 20."

Mr. PLUMB. On behalf of the committee I ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2240) to amend sections 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, and 1624 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the Navy, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WILLIAM JOHNSON AND JOHN R. FRANCIS.

Mr. OGLESBY. Now I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 5803, for the relief of William Johnson and John R. Francis.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 5803) for the relief of William Johnson and John R. Francis, of Edgar County, Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $2,440.90 to William Johnson and John R. Francis, of Edgar County, Illinois, in full compensation for all property taken from or furnished by them, or either of them, to or by the United States military authorities during the war.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAIAH PICKARD.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to take up House bill 916. This and one other bill which I shall ask for involve about $100 each.

The bill (H. R. No. 916) for the relief of Isaiah Pickard was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Isaiah Pickard, of Stewartstown, New Hampshire, $100 in full satisfaction of his claim by reason of the wrongful seizure and sale of one gray colt by the collector of customs for the district of Portsmouth.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, which was, in line 4, to insert after the word "Isaiah" the letter "H."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SIDNEY P. LUTHER.

Mr. ROLLINS. The next bill I ask to have taken up is House bill No. 917.

The Secretary read the title of the bill (H. R. No. 917) for the relief of Sidney P. Luther.

Mr. WITHERS. Some Senators get up three or four bills and others cannot get up any.

Mr. ROLLINS. I give way for the present.

J. FRASER.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up House bill No. 2217, a bill to pay for services to one of the House committees that saved the Government a large sum.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2217) for the relief of J. Fraser was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to J. Fraser, of Philadelphia, of $600, for expenses of trip from Philadelphia to Washington, and services in examining foundation of new jail.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA CEMETERY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask leave to take up House bill No. 4803. It is in relation to condemned cannon.

The bill (H. R. No. 4803) donating four condemned cannon and sixteen cannon-balls to Monongahela Cemetery, to be placed in a lot held as a free burial-ground for ex soldiers, sailors, and marines, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think there is anything to be gained in making great speed in running bills through at this rate, and I hope the Chair will go through with all the forms. I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to report at this time on the petition of Richard H. Anderson for the removal of his disabilities. The petition was mislaid among the papers and should have been reported before. I report it favorably with the accompanying bill. My friend from South Carolina desires to ask its present consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill No. 4803 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont reports a bill to remove the political disabilities of Richard H. Anderson.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Bills are being passed so rapidly that no one can know their contents. I do not think it right that this should be done. I do not know what this bill is; but of course as there are reports the Senate ought to know the facts by having them read.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask my friend to let us get through with this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If Senators resume their seats and order be restored they will be able to hear every word uttered by the Secretary.

The bill (S. No. 1864) to remove the political disabilities of Richard H. Anderson was read three times, and passed by a two-third vote.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont calls for the regular order.

Mr. HILL. There is no objection now to the consideration of House bill No. 5333.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After that I shall call for the regular order and insist on it against everything except pension bills from the Pension Committee.

Mr. WITHERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WITHERS. Whether it is not proper that some consideration be given to this side of the House; I suggest the propriety of giving the floor to Senators on this side occasionally. Eight or ten Senators have been recognized on the other side for the passage of bills and not one on this side has made himself heard as yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would call attention to the fact that he just recognized the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] on the last two bills. The present bill comes from the Senator from Georgia. [To the Secretary.] Proceed with the reading.

J. M. KELL.

The bill (H. R. No. 5333) for the removal of the political disabilities of John McIntosh Kell, of Georgia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-third vote.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill for the relief of Daniel M. Frost.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont calls for the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what this bill is, and I call for the regular order against everything except pension bills.

Mr. ANTHONY. I rise to a privileged motion. It is necessary that we have a short executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for, unless pension bills.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that all pension bills on the Calendar be taken up and acted on.

Mr. VOORHEES. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont in behalf of a bill that I have explained to him that appeals to every Senator here quite as strongly as, if not more so than, any other bill on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am entirely unable to hear the appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Business will be suspended until order is restored.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is ample time, if we can only have order, to pass all the bills on the Calendar.

Mr. VOORHEES. I say that I appeal to the Senator from Vermont to suspend his call for the regular order until Senate bill No. 1791, for the relief of Mark Walker, can be passed. It is a bill that appeals to every Senator quite as much if not more than any pension bill on the Calendar. It is a bill in behalf of a soldier of sixteen years' service, a cripple lying on his sick-bed and eating the bread of charity, in behalf of whom the Secretary of War by a letter has asked the power to appoint him a lieutenant in the Army, and the Committee on Military Affairs has unanimously recommended it. There is nothing I think that could be acted upon with greater propriety at this time than this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the regular order is the Mississippi bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I of course do not hold the floor, nor claim to hold it, and the Senator from Indiana has a right to ask unanimous consent to take up his bill.

MARK WALKER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Indiana having the case considered? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 1791) for the relief of Mark Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 10, after the word "the," to strike out "same" and insert "first vacancy occurring in the;" and in line 11, after the word "lieutenant," to insert "of said regiment;" so as to read:

That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army are hereby suspended for the purpose of this act, and only so far as they affect Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth United States Infantry; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth United States Infantry, to the first vacancy occurring in the grade and rank of lieutenant of said regiment held by him on May 13, 1873; and that the said Walker shall thereupon be placed upon the retired list of the Army, provided the same shall be recommended by the retiring board.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear read the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator the letter?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is among the papers. The Committee on Military Affairs had the letter.

PENSION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending that, the bill being temporarily laid aside, the Chair will recognize the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, order of business 1016 (House bill No. 4418) is to pay a hundred dollars to an impecunious newspaper man, who is entitled to have his money in the opinion of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is a House bill and ought to be passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order, but I will not object to pension bills.

Mr. WITHERS. I again ask that unanimous consent be given to take up and act upon the various bills reported from the Pension Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks the Senate to consider the pension bills. The Chair hears no objection. The first pension case on the Calendar will be read.

JARVIS JACKSON.

Mr. INGALLS. I send to the Clerk's desk order of business 1151, being House bill No. 2961.

The bill (H. R. No. 2961) for the relief of Jarvis Jackson, of Laurel County, Kentucky, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Jarvis Jackson of a pension of $16 per month instead of $8, which he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONERS WITH AMPUTATED LEGS.

Mr. INGALLS. House bill No. 3879, order of business 1116, provides for the payment of pensioners whose leg has been amputated at the hip-joint the sum of $37.50 a month. There are but four of these pensioners in the country. I ask the passage of that bill.

The bill (H. R. No. 3879) for the relief of certain pensioners was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares that all pensioners now on the pension-roll, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, for amputation of either leg at the hip-joint, shall receive a pension at the rate of $37.50 per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was that bill reported to-day?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. WITHERS. There are only four pensioners of this class.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. CORLETT.

Mr. INGALLS. Order of business 1201, House bill No. 711, is the next pension case.

The bill (H. R. No. 711) granting a pension to John S. Corlett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John S. Corlett, late a teamster in the service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALVIN E. PRATT.

Mr. INGALLS. I now ask for order of business No. 1228.

The bill (H. R. No. 4967) granting a pension to Calvin E. Pratt, late brigadier-general of volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Calvin E. Pratt, late brigadier-general of volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY F. M'KEEVER.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is order of business 1221, House bill No. 4365.

The bill (H. R. No. 4365) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. McKeever was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Mrs. Mary F. McKeever, widow of the late Commodore Isaac McKeever, of the Navy, a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid her.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC WINANS.

Mr. INGALLS. Order of business 1220, House bill No. 4360, is next. The bill (H. R. No. 4360) granting a pension to Isaac Winans, of the Ohio militia, in the war of 1812, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and adding the words "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know why that does not come within the present act; and if there is a report, as I believe there is, I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. INGALLS. The report is made by the House committee, not by the Senate committee. The Senator desires to know the reason for the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I should like to know the history of the case. Let the report be read—report of the committee. I saw a report there a moment ago.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MACKEY in the House of Representatives on the 16th of April, 1878:

That it appears from a statement of the records in the Pension Department, as presented by the Commissioner of Pensions under date of February 9, 1878, that the claimant, Isaac Winans, was in service in the war of 1812, a member of Captain Dull's company, Ohio militia, for more than sixty days, including service in another company, and as a substitute, and certainly more than fourteen days. There were three persons bearing the name of Winans who served in the same company with Isaac Winans, and there is considerable confusion in the official records as to the service of the parties bearing that name, but from an examination of all the evidence and letters furnished the committee, they are of opinion that Isaac Winans was in the service of the Government in the war of 1812 for more than the time required by law, and never received a pension, and is justly entitled to the same, and recommend the passage of the bill herewith returned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS B. McNAMARA.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for House bill No. 848, order of business 1237.

McNamara, late drum-major in Company E of the Sixty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend this bill by striking out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and adding the words "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Robinson, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha J. Robinson, widow of James H. Robinson, late private in Company E, Fifth Regiment Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws and to add the words "pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'INTYRE.

Mr. INGALLS. House bill No. 1946 is the next.

The bill (H. R. No. 1946) granting a pension to John McIntyre was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of John McIntyre on the pension-roll, from the 4th of March, 1877, at the same rate per annum that he was receiving when his name was dropped from the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN NETTLEFIELD.

Mr. INGALLS. Next I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 2858.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SALLY MURRAY BUCHANAN.

Mr. INGALLS. Order of business 1219, Senate bill No. 1473, is the next pension bill.

The bill (S. No. 1473) granting a pension to Sally Murray Buchanan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sally Murray Buchanan, widow of the late Colonel Robert C. Buchanan, brevet major-general United States Army, her pension to be $50 per month, and to date from the time of the death of General Buchanan, November 29, 1878.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. REEVE.

Mr. INGALLS. Order of business 1234, Senate bill No. 1756, is next: The bill (S. No. 1756) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve was considered as in Committee of the Whole. James H. Reeve, late captain in the Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, is by the bill allowed, from June 26, 1865, a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of the pension now paid him.

It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eugene O'Sullivan, late sergeant Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Infantry, at the rate of $18 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARK WALKER.

Mr. VOORHEES. A few moments ago the bill for the relief of Mark Walker was laid aside to have a letter of the Secretary of War found, that it might be read. I now send it to the desk to have it read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 10, 1879.

SIR: In reply to your letter of this date inclosing Senate bill 1791 for the relief of Mark Walker, and requesting his military record, &c., I have the honor to inclose report of the Adjutant-General of this date, and other papers, giving the information desired.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. GEORGE E. SPENCER,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

The bill (S. No. 1791) for the relief of Mark Walker was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ADAMS AND OTHERS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to take up House bill No. 4143, and I ask that the amendments be not concurred in. They are merely verbal.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 4143) for the relief of John Adams, William B. Clift, David Dunseath, William Killinger, J. F. Scott, administrator of the estate of Obediah Scott, deceased, Davis C. Peak, Charles Linderman, James Linnane, Patrick Carey, John McMahon, and James Gorman, administrator of the estate of Patrick Gorman, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are amendments reported which will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report of the committee be read.

The Secretary read the amendments, which were, in line 4, after the word "to," to insert "audit, and, if the amounts claimed are correctly stated, to;" in lines 6 and 7 to strike out the words "the following sums" and to insert "not to exceed the sums hereinafter named;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to audit, and, if the amounts claimed are correctly stated, to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following persons not to exceed the sums hereinafter named, in full for services in the United States naval service during the late war.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report. The question is on the amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a report, marked on the Calendar as No. 805.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am informed the report has not yet been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed the report has not been printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If it is in manuscript it can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is at the Printing Office.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I ask that the bill be postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope that will not be done. It is a very meritorious case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw my objection to the bill called up by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the amendments reported by the committee be not adopted.

The amendments were rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6500) to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a national board of health; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

GEORGE M. WELLES.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 4565. The bill (H. R. No. 4565) for the relief of Lieutenant George M. Welles, of the Marine Corps, was, by unanimous consent, considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to First Lieutenant George M. Welles, of the United States Marine Corps, $225, being the difference between furlough and retired pay, found to be due him in the adjustment of his accounts at the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case? If so, let it be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] reported the bill.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WHYTE on the 19th February:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4565) for the relief of Lieutenant George M. Welles, of the Marine Corps, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

Lieutenant Welles was retired from active service pursuant to the finding of a duly organized board, and their finding was approved by the President on the 18th August, 1874.

By clerical inadvertence Lieutenant Welles was retired on furlough pay, as is provided in case of naval officers, while the retirements of officers of the Marine Corps are governed by sections 1622 and 1623 of the Revised Statutes, the former requiring that such officers be retired in like case and in the same manner, and with the same relative conditions in all respects, as officers of the Army are retired. He is entitled to the difference between furlough and retired pay for the year ending July 1, 1879, amounting to the sum of $225.

The committee, being satisfied of the correctness of Lieutenant Welles's claim, recommend the passage of the bill aforesaid.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL M. FROST AND OTHERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1704, order of business No. 1069.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 1704) for the relief of Daniel M. Frost and the heirs and executors of William M. McPherson, of the State of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It releases Daniel M. Frost and the heirs and executors of William M. McPherson from all claim and demand on the part of the United States upon them, or either of them, by reason of their having been sureties upon the official bond of Augustus W. Gaines, paymaster in the Army of the United States, who died in February, 1860.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take from the table House bill No. 6500, being a bill to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States and to establish a national board of health. I am sure there is not a Senator on the floor who will object to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope there will be no objection to this bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6500) to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a national board of health, was read three times, and passed.

V. H. MCCORMICK.

Mr. CONOVER. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 3737, for the relief of Mr. McCormick.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3737) for the relief of V. H. McCormick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to V. H. McCormick $555.56, in full of all claim by him for salary as special messenger and watchman to the Special Committee on Investigation of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company during the Forty-fourth Congress, from the 16th of August, 1876, to the 4th of March, 1877, inclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. T. BURROWS AND OTHERS.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the adoption of the resolution I now offer as an act of justice to some of the employes of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 72) for the relief of H. T. Burrows and others was read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know what it is that is being read. I dislike so often to call for order, but I cannot understand what is going on. I have tried my utmost to hear what this is. Anything that is subject to objection which now comes from the House for the first time I gave notice at the last sitting I would object to. I think in the closing hours of Congress there is more mischief done, often, than during the whole of the Congress otherwise, and I feel it my duty to see that nothing of the kind is done out of order. I say to Senators now that anything that is subject to objection and has not gone through regularly, I expect to object to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize any objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask where that resolution comes from and what it is?

Mr. McDONALD. I offered it yesterday.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is such haste that no one can tell what is being done. There is too much haste.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to hasten in order to reach all the Senators.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It would be much better for the Senate and the country if there was not such haste.

Mr. McDONALD. Appropriations were made in the deficiency bill, but they were dropped out because they were not, according to the understanding of the House, properly on that bill. They should therefore be put in the form of a joint resolution. Justice to these parties requires it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know what they are. One has been read, but read with such haste and so much confusion that I did not hear it, though I tried to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Indiana says that those items were on one of the appropriation bills, but were rejected by the House, and of course by the Senate's consent. That being so, is it right that we should take them up here at the closing hours of the Senate and pass them in such haste?

Again, as I understand, there are twenty such cases. The door of the room of the Committee on Appropriations was crowded probably for hours by employes, asking additional compensation for different services about the Senate. My opinion is that it ought not to be done. Men or boys who will accept positions here, and get their pay regularly through the year, and then at the close of the session try to rush something extra through in haste, are not fit to be here. They ought not to hold positions here. If they get their regular salary they ought to be satisfied. I entered an objection yesterday to extra pay of sixty days covering a double period. Finally the resolution passed, by my withdrawing my objection, allowing pay for thirty days in addition to any service that might be rendered. I thought that just; I believe now it is just; but here is extra compensation again. I enter an objection if it is subject to objection, and I think it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator objects to the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. McDONALD. I understood the Senate had entertained the resolution. It was introduced some days since by me and upon objection of the Senator from Vermont it was withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was read twice before. The Chair suggests that an objection will not obtain now.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not think the Senator from West Virginia understands the effect of this resolution. Amendments have been furnished me by the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Maine.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel it to be a duty to do now what the Senator from Rhode Island proposed half an hour ago—but the Senate did not think it right to do it—for the benefit of public interests. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 31, noes 21.

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered. The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 34, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allison,	Conkling,	Ingalls,	Sargent,
Anthony,	Conover,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Blaine,	Davis of Illinois,	Kernan,	Shields,
Booth,	Dawes,	Matthews,	Spencer,
Bruce,	Dorsey,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Wadleigh,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Oglesby,	Windom.
Cameron of Wis.,	Hoar,	Patterson,
Chandler,	Howe,	Rollins,

NAYS—23.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Paddock,
Barnum,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Gordon,	McDonald,	Thurman,
Beck,	Grover,	McPherson,	Whyte,
Butler,	Harris,	Maxey,	Withers.
Coke,	Hereford,	Merrimon,

ABSENT—19.

Chaffee,	Garland,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Cockrell,	Hill,	McCreery,	Sharon,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Dennis,	Kellogg,	Plumb,	Wallace.
Eustis,	Kirkwood,	Randolph,

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

REPORTS ON SAMOAN ISLANDS.

Mr. PATTERSON. Before the doors are closed, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with the reports on the Samoan Islands made by Gustavus Gorrard, if not incompatible with the public interests.

Mr. CONKLING. I object to the resolution unless the latter clause is stricken out. We do not have the Secretary of State decide whether it is compatible with the public interests to obey a direction of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest—

Mr. HOAR. I object to it at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have the floor just now. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to change it into a resolution requesting the President.

Mr. CONKLING. That will do.

Mr. PATTERSON. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As amended shall the resolution pass?

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

CHEYENNE INDIANS.

Mr. ALLISON. Some days ago the Committee on Indian Affairs offered a resolution authorizing the appointment of a select committee of five. There was no method adopted for the appointment, and I ask unanimous consent that the committee shall be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

AMANDA M. COOK.

Mr. ALLISON. As I have the floor, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table House bill No. 2633 and put it on its passage. It is for the relief of Amanda M. Cook, a woman who was captured by the Cheyenne Indians and kept prisoner for nearly two years. This is an appropriation of $2,000 to be paid to her out of the Cheyenne annuities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot hear anything.

The bill (H. R. No. 2633) for the relief of Amanda M. Cook was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to deduct, from any annuities due or to become due to the Cheyenne or Arapahoe Indians, $2,000, and to pay the same to Amanda M. Cook, formerly Amanda M. Fletcher, whose mother was killed and herself captured by the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, in the Territory of Wyoming, in August, 1865, while en route from the State of Illinois to California.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA A. NUTT.

Mr. LAMAR. I ask unanimous consent to have a bill passed for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, House bill No. 4671.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why, Mr. President, nothing would give me more pleasure than to accede to the wishes of the honorable Senator from Mississippi; but he will see the utter impossibility of our proceeding in this way.

Mr. WITHERS. There is a bill for the removal of political disabilities, which can be disposed of.

H. T. BURROWS AND OTHERS.

Mr. McDONALD. I now ask to call up the resolution I had up a few minutes ago. There is an amendment to add:

And that the sum of $240 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay R. C. Bromley, the difference between the salary for one year, as a mail-carrier, and the salary of a messenger of the Senate, which latter duty he has performed during the past year; and that the sum of $652.64 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay James N. Fitzpatrick the difference between the salary received by him for services rendered as assistant financial clerk of the Senate during the year ending June 30, 1874, and the salary paid other clerks performing service of the same grade during that year; to pay S. B. Pennabaker for service as page in the Senate from December 2, 1878, to April 4, 1879, $133.30, inclusive, it being the difference of pay received by him and that received by the regular pages of the Senate; to pay R. A. Birchett for his services as a special messenger of the Senate, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, the sum of $915, the same being the salary of a messenger, less the amount already received by him on account of said services.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I made objection to that. The Senator from Indiana came to me and I said that so far as the one man on special duty was concerned, who was covered by the original resolution, I would withdraw, but not as to the whole batch of them.

Mr. WITHERS. They all stand on the same footing.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the whole objected to?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Are we not in executive session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remark that the resolution now in the hands of the Secretary was introduced yesterday. Therefore one objection will not pass it over. The Chair will lay before the Senate the question whether the Senate will consider this resolution. There is no objection. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask the Senate to take from the table House bill No. 6525.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I thought we were in executive session.

Mr. KERNAN. It is on the table. It came in this morning about two o'clock.

Mr. WITHERS. Let us get the disability bills off the Calendar.

Mr. KERNAN. If I cannot get that up I will ask to take up order of business 1241, being House bill No. 4639.

The bill (H. R. No. 4639) to authorize the Secretary of War to release certain lands of the United States to the people of the State of New York was read by its title.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I call for the regular order; that is on executive business.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator to yield for a single moment.

Mr. CONKLING. This bill could have passed in this time.

Mr. KERNAN. I appeal to the Senator to allow the bill to pass.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the attention of the Senate for a moment.

Mr. CONKLING and Mr. KERNAN. Finish the bill.

Several SENATORS. Read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Regular order. I insist that the doors shall be closed and our good friend Murphy shall be permitted to be excused for a minute.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask leave to introduce the following bill, and ask for its present consideration:

The bill (S. No. 1865) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government was read once by its title.

Objection was made to the second reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Regular order.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the Senate the doors will be closed and the galleries cleared for the consideration of executive business.

After two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of two members of the Senate be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that Congress, having finished its business, is now ready to close its session by adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. THURMAN were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the reading of the bill I have just presented may be completed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for a period not exceeding six months from and after the 30th day of June, A. D. 1879, unless the regular appropriations shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1880, it shall be lawful to use for the necessary service of the Government any unexpended balance which may exist of the appropriations made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879; and in case no sufficient balance remains at the conclusion of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, to the credit of any appropriation the necessary amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and no greater amount shall be expended under this act than such proportional sum of the appropriations of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, as six months bears to the whole of said fiscal year, and such expenditure shall be only for the necessary operations of the Government under existing laws. All sums expended under this act shall be charged to, and deducted from, the appropriation for like service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to the consideration of it.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me understand who objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to say that on the Senator from Delaware rests the responsibility, then, of an extra session.

CHEYENNE INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. KIRKWOOD, Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, Mr. COKE, and Mr. BAILEY, the committee authorized to be appointed by the Senate resolution of February 12, 1879, to examine into the circumstances connected with the removal of the Northern Cheyennes from the Sioux reservation to the Indian Territory, &c.

Mr. PADDOCK. I offer the following resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY. I call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is too late.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. McDONALD, it was Ordered, That Mark Walker have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files, relative to his application for relief.

CATTLE DISEASES.

Mr. PADDOCK. I offer a resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be, and hereby is, authorized to sit during the recess under the order of the Senate heretofore made to investigate infectious diseases among cattle, with authority to employ a clerk and a stenographer if necessary.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to the consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not object to this resolution. There is an inquiry which is being prosecuted and which is of the utmost value to the country.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have objected.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2240) to amend sections 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, and 1824 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the Navy was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSEL.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 5633, order of business 982.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 5633) authorizing the changing the name of the barge Cockade City, of Washington, District of Columbia, to Republic, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT PLATTSBURGH.

Mr. KERNAN. The bill (H. R. No. 4639) to authorize the Secretary of War to release certain lands of the United States to the people of the State of New York was partly read through when the doors were shut. I ask that the reading be concluded.

The bill (H. R. No. 4639) to authorize the Secretary of War to release certain lands of the United States to the people of the State of New York was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It empowers the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to release to the people of the State of New York, their successors and assigns, a right of way, not exceeding six rods in width, upon and across the land owned and possessed by the United States in the town of Plattsburgh, Clinton County, New York, for railroad purposes, and also a lot or piece of land in the northeast corner of that land, owned by the United States, at Plattsburgh, for depot and other railroad purposes, not to exceed, however, two acres, subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of War may think necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

JAMES M. RUBY.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 2552.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2552) for the relief of James M. Ruby. It proposes to pay James M. Ruby the pay of an enlisted man from June 28, 1862, inclusive, to August 18, 1862; and the pay of sergeant-major from August 18, 1862, inclusive, to the 26th of August, 1862; and also the pay of first lieutenant from August 26, 1862, inclusive, to December 2, 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID W. STOCKSTILL.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 2284 for the relief of David W. Stockstill, of Sidney, Ohio. I withdraw the objection I made to this bill when it was up before, and ask for its consideration now.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. B. LITTLEPAGE.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that House bill No. 6524, to relieve the disabilities of H. B. Littlepage, of Virginia, be taken up for action.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6524) to remove the political disabilities of H. B. Littlepage, of King William County, Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-third vote.

Mr. WITHERS. The other two are Senate bills which it is not worth while to pass.

HOUSE BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, we are waiting for the committee to come from the House to wait on the President. I suppose they will be here in a moment. I understand they are on their way here. I would advise the Chair not to look at the clock for about three minutes. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Time and tide wait for no man. The Chair will lay before the Senate bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 250) donating condemned cannon to the Williams Monument Association was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 6525) to provide for the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, for use as a post-office and United States court, and for the accommodation of United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONKLING. I believe that bill has been submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It makes no appropriation, and if there is no objection I wish the Senate to act upon it.

Mr. DAWES. That ought to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I object.

The bill (H. R. No. 5580) to authorize the President to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list, was read the first time by its title.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of J. Russell Barber was read the first time by its title.

J. RUSSELL BARBER.

Mr. BECK. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution for the relief of J. Russell Barber.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of J. Russell Barber was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution proposes to pay to J. Russell Barber $184 for services as messenger to the Committee on War Claims at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress.

The resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call up the bill in regard to General Shields.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5580) to authorize the President to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I dislike very much to do an ungracious thing. I certainly dislike very much to disoblige the honorable Senator from Missouri, but I shall object on principle to the passage of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second reading is objected to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1535) for the relief of George Heard.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. THURMAN appeared below the bar of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and to inform him that the Senate had concluded its business and, if he had no further communication, was ready to adjourn, have performed the duty assigned them, and the President said he had nothing further to communicate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time fixed for the final adjournment of Congress having arrived, the Chair declares the Forty-fifth Congress adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 3, 1879.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. The Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us; lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

We thank Thee, our Heavenly Father, that in Thy gracious providence our lives have been spared, and that we are permitted to engage in the labors, the concluding labors, of this session. We invoke Thy blessing upon the presiding officer and upon the members of this House. May the spirit of wisdom and justice and moderation prevail in all their deliberations, and may God give to our country peace and harmony and prosperity everywhere. These and all Thy gifts we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of Friday and Saturday will now be read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the Journal of Friday.

Mr. EDEN. I move the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules so as to dispense with the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. That has been done.

Mr. EDEN. Then I move to suspend the rules and to dispense with the reading of the Journal of Friday and Saturday.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is the Journal complete?

The SPEAKER. The Journal of Friday is complete, but the Journal of Saturday is not. The Chair thinks the rules can be suspended so as to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BUCKNER. Then I move to suspend the rules and dispense with the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference asked by the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 6126) to establish post-routes in the several States herein named.

Also, that the Senate had passed, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 6462) making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 373) to amend an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the Confederated Otoe, Missouria, and the Sac and Fox of the Missouri tribes of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. We of this side object to dispensing with the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the motion and no objection was made.

Mr. FRYE. No vote was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said that if there was no objection the reading of the Journal would be dispensed with.

Mr. GARFIELD. We did not hear it at all.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will go back.

The question was put upon the motion to suspend the rules and dispense with the reading of the Journal; and on a division there were—ayes 77, noes 85.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal of Friday.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is the Journal of Saturday made up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that Saturday's Journal is not yet made up.

Mr. GARFIELD. None of it?

The SPEAKER. Some of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then let the Clerk begin the reading of it, and let us hear what has been prepared.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that there would be much use in reading a part of the Journal unless all could be read and approved.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will not press it.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1105) to transfer the title of the United States to square 109 to the District of Columbia for the benefit of the public schools thereof;

An act (H. R. No. 1651) to validate and confirm certain acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments of writing under seal made in a foreign country for land lying in the District of Columbia, and the records thereof; and

An act (H. R. No. 6523) providing for the engraving and printing of portraits to accompany memorial addresses on the late Representatives Leonard, Quinn, Welch, Williams, Douglas, Hartridge, and Schleicher.

Mr. SAMPSON, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 5271) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Richard Stevenson, late assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and his bondsmen.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates some remarks prepared by him upon the bill now pending in the House relating to the Japanese indemnity fund. [See Appendix.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Unanimous consent was given for the withdrawal of papers as follows:

To Mr. HENKLE, the papers in the case of George Calvert, of Maryland; no adverse report.

To Mr. BANKS, the papers in the case of Mrs. Agnes W. Hills; no adverse report.

To Mr. BUCKNER, the papers in the case of Eugene Lubensdorfer, of Saint Louis, Missouri; no adverse report.

To Mr. BANNING, the papers in the cases of Eugene Lynch, Mrs. Mary D. Hook, and John C. Beck; no adverse reports.

To Mr. CUTLER, the papers and communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture, presented to the House February 8, 1873, relative to forestry, for the purpose of returning the same to the Department of Agriculture.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call up the unfinished business of Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were ordered upon the question of consideration raised in relation to the question of privilege presented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. WADDELL. Before that is done I ask consent that the Senate amendments to the post-route bill be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

Mr. PRICE. What becomes of my question of privilege, a question affecting the right of a member to his seat here?

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the contested-election case of Nutting against Reilly, and that the same be now taken up for action in the House.

Mr. PRICE. I offer this resolution in justice to the contestant, who has not been able to get a hearing before the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the interruption of the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There is already one question of privilege before the House.

Mr. HENDEE. Will the Speaker state what that question is?

The SPEAKER. It is whether the House will consider the question of privilege embraced in the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] touching the impeachment of Mr. George F. Seward. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask whether a proposition involving the right of a member to his seat is not a question of higher privilege than a resolution proposing to open the question of the impeachment of a subordinate officer. It seems to me that the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] must in the nature of the case be a question of higher privilege.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to make an inquiry. The minority of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department have in course of preparation a report. I wish to inquire whether or not this House can pass upon the report of the majority until the minority is heard?

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to consider.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the decision of the Chair upon the point I have raised.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that the pending question is one of high privilege arising under the constitutional power of the House with reference to impeachment; and on that question the yeas and nays are ordered. The Chair will recognize the right of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] to bring up his resolution immediately after the pending question is disposed of. There cannot be two questions of constitutional privilege pending at the same time.

Mr. GARFIELD. But if one be higher than the other, the higher should have precedence.

The SPEAKER. How is the Chair to draw a line of distinction between them?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the Speaker must himself see that the right of a member to his seat is a question of higher privilege than that which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] seeks to bring before the House.

The SPEAKER. On the pending question the House has ordered the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. But there has been an interruption of the proceeding by all sorts of business.

The SPEAKER. Since this business was interrupted by the recess on Saturday night there has been no time until now when it could come up.

Mr. PRICE. Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The SPEAKER. They have.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. But there have been intervening sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. But they were under the order of the House for special purposes.

Mr. BUNDY. Is it proper for me to state that the minority report is now ready, and that the minority will insist upon having that report read—

The SPEAKER. The subject is not before the House. When the House has decided to consider the question the Chair will of course recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNDY] for any parliamentary question.

Mr. BUNDY. Is it proper for the minority to state how long a time it will probably take to read both the minority and the majority reports?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter within the control of the House. When the question comes up the gentleman will be recognized for one hour.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a point of order. I submit that the House by its action took from the committee that now seeks to bring up this question the evidence, the papers, the entire subject relating to the examination of the case of Mr. Seward, and referred them to the Committee on the Judiciary where they now are.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House not for the Chair. Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has no right to report this matter as a question of privilege from his committee when the subject has been taken from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The question referred to the Judiciary Committee was a question as to the contempt of a witness; this is a question of impeachment.

Mr. CONGER. But the House took all the testimony, all the papers, and referred them to the Committee on the Judiciary, so that there is nothing left with the Committee on the Expenditures in the State Department to act upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. Only such evidence as referred to the contumacy of the witnesses was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the resolution referring the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary may be read. I think it will sustain my point of order.

The SPEAKER. But the subject is not really before the House until it determines to consider it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of the roll.

Mr. CONGER. But my point is that the gentleman from Illinois has presented a matter with which he and his committee have nothing to do, because the House has taken the subject from that committee and referred it to another.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has risen to a question of privilege. The Constitution declares that the House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment; and under that authority the gentleman from Illinois presents his resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. This same point of order has been already made and overruled.

Mr. CARLISLE. It was overruled on Saturday evening.

Mr. SPRINGER. At any rate it is too late to make the point now, because the House has ordered the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLS. It is res adjudicata.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not exactly understand what point the gentleman from Michigan wants the Chair to rule on.

Mr. CONGER. I think I can make it clear. The Committee on Expenditures in the State Department having had in charge the investigation of the official conduct of Mr. Seward, the House took the subject from that committee and referred the whole subject, with the testimony and all the papers relating to it, to the Committee on the Judiciary, thus depriving the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department of any further control of the subject until the papers in the case have been again referred to them. The gentleman cannot present this as a question of privilege, except on the assumption that the subject-matter is still before his committee; but the House has taken it from that committee; the gentleman and his committee have no control over the subject-matter in any way. I ask that the resolution referring the subject to the Committee on the Judiciary may be read, that the Chair may see its scope.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is hardly in order, but still he will have the resolution read for information.

Mr. HOOKER. Upon the point of order I desire to make this remark: it will be remembered that on Saturday the motion now made by the gentleman from Michigan was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] and was ruled upon by the Chair. That which was referred to the Judiciary Committee was the question, what should be done with the recusant witness; nothing more or less.

Mr. CONGER. The resolution will settle the question.

Mr. HOOKER. The point now raised by the gentleman from Michigan has already been decided adversely.

Mr. DUNNELL. Allow me to say that there was no ruling of the Chair in reference to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOOKER. I understood the Chair to overrule it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNDY] will not state to the House that he intended to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary all the evidence before our committee in relation to the subject of impeachment. He had no such intention, and will not state that he had.

Mr. CONGER. The resolution refers the whole subject to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BUNDY. On this question of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan I desire to be heard after the resolution is read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the answer of George F. Seward in response to the order voted by the House and issued by the Speaker, requiring him to show cause why he should not be declared in contempt, and all evidence and papers pertaining thereto, together with the reports of the committee, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report as early as practicable what action in their judgment should be taken by the House in relation thereto.

The SPEAKER. This question of impeachment is a constitutional one, in reference to which there can be no doubt. That position cannot be disputed. The Chair holds that the constitutional right to send articles of impeachment exists in a single member of this House. Any one member can present articles of impeachment against any public officer, and that presentation of the question has uniformly been held to be one of privilege. The remedy with the House is to decide whether they will proceed to consider the question or not.

Mr. CONGER. Without any authority from the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa a moment ago in his own right, as he had the right to do, rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. CONGER. Does the Chair hold that any member of this House, without an order from the House, may present articles of impeachment?

Mr. CARLISLE. To the House, yes.

The SPEAKER. Any member upon the floor has the right to present articles of impeachment. In reference to this there can be no doubt. Mr. Ashley, a Representative from the State of Ohio, in this House, on his own motion, rose and presented articles of impeachment against President Johnson.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the case of the impeachment of President Johnson, resolutions to impeach him were moved by an individual member. They did not come from any committee, but were moved by a gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me say a word.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Has the Chair decided the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Is it in order, then, to discuss this any further?

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say to the Chair that I hope he will, before he finally leaves this case, not make the decision so broad that any man can interrupt the business of the House at any time, and thus fill a whole session with motions to impeach this postmaster and the other postmaster.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only followed the precedents heretofore set in holding that any member upon the floor has the constitutional right to present articles of impeachment against any public officer. The remedy is with the majority of the House, if there be any abuse of this privilege, by refusing to consider the subject. If the subject presented to the House under this question of privilege does not deserve the attention of the House, why, then, the remedy remains with the majority to refuse to consider it.

Mr. MAYHAM. I demand the vote.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—years 132, nays 109, not voting 49; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House decided to consider the question was laid on the table.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MILLS. My colleague, Mr. REAGAN, is paired with Mr. HUBBELL, of Michigan. If he were here, he would vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. LOCKWOOD, is paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH. If present, Mr. LOCKWOOD would vote "ay" and Mr. ELLSWORTH "no."

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. On this question I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee.

Mr. HENDEE. I am paired with Mr. HENKLE. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Upon this question I am paired with Mr. KENNA, who is absent on a committee of conference. I would vote "no." I also announce that Mr. HUBBELL is paired with Mr. REAGAN, who are both absent on a committee of conference.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CLYMER, who is absent on a committee of conference.

Mr. SAMPSON. I am paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. STONE, of Michigan. My colleague, Mr. MCGOWAN, who is confined to his room by sickness, is paired with Mr. HOUSE.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. Mr. TURNEY is paired with Mr. ERRETT.

Mr. BANNING. I ask that by unanimous consent the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

The reading of the roll-call having been completed the result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. CONGER. I now move that the whole subject be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to make a report.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the fortification appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5231) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to report, and do report, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2 with an amendment striking out in line 11, page 1 of the bill, the words "Gatling and other;" and that the House agree to the same.

JOHN H. BAKER.

WM. A. J. SPARKS.

Managers on the part of the House.

WM. WINDOM.

S. W. DORSEY.

W. A. WALLACE.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to say that the bill, as now agreed upon, is the same that passed the House except a slight verbal change, striking out the words "Gatling and other;" so that it will read "for machine guns."

A MEMBER. How much is the amount reduced?

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars; provided the amount would have been increased to that extent by the purchase of Gatling guns.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

Mr. SPRINGER resumed the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I now insist on my motion to refer this whole matter to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is not upon the floor; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is entitled to the floor, the House having determined to consider this matter.

Mr. CONGER. Has the gentleman presented his proposition?

The SPEAKER. He has. The House has determined to consider the subject, and the Chair in obedience to that decision recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CONGER. While it is pending, will not the House be considering it by voting on a motion to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. There is no such motion pending.

Mr. CONGER. I make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman as being on the floor to make that motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not yield the floor for any purpose.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Is it in order for any gentleman to continue discussion on a point of order after the Chair has decided it?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Then I hope the rule will be enforced. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would disturb the House less if he kept his seat offener.

Mr. CONGER. That is so courteous a remark that I hope the gentleman will have it printed for his own benefit.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I have not violated the rules of the House as often as the gentleman from Michigan has. When I do I will take his lecture; but it cannot come from his sweet voice to me now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no occasion for any feeling.

Mr. CONGER. I think so myself.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. KNOTT. I asked my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to yield to me.

The SPEAKER. He cannot, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KNOTT. I was going to ask unanimous consent. I ask my friend to yield in order that I may ask unanimous consent of the House to present at this time the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in relation to the charges against Judge Blodgett, and have that report printed for the use of the House and in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that one question of privilege at a time is enough.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] when this matter is disposed of.

The Clerk began the reading of the report, but before concluding it, Mr. CONGER said: This specification No. 11, now being read, refers to Mr. Seward as minister, not as consul. I suppose it is in there by mistake. I take it that we are not charging him with impeachable crimes, with violation of duty, in two offices at once. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] if that is intended to be a part of this impeachment proceeding?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will explain the matter after the reading is concluded.

Mr. CONGER. But I ask if this is intended to be a part of the impeachment?

Mr. SPRINGER. The report is intended to be in the words which are being read by the Clerk.

Mr. CONGER. Impeaching this officer in two capacities, both as consul and as minister?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Clerk will read, and after that any explanation which the gentleman desires will be given.

Mr. CONGER. There is more reason than I thought that this should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which was as follows:

The Committee on Expenditures in the State Department would respectfully report that on the 26th day of February, 1878, they commenced the investigation of the matters referred to in the memorial of John C. Myers, consul-general at Shanghai, China, relating to the affairs of the consulate-general of the United States, at Shanghai, China.

That they have taken testimony regarding the matters set forth in the said charges; and also during the said investigation have taken testimony touching other matters within the jurisdiction of your committee relating to the affairs of the consulate-general at Shanghai during the incumbency of that office by George F. Seward, late consul and consul-general of the United States, at Shanghai, and now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China; and regarding certain matters within the jurisdiction of your committee touching the affairs of the said George F. Seward, minister to China as, aforesaid; that they return to the House of Representatives the testimony which they have taken in regard thereto, and recommend that the said George F. Seward be by the House of Representatives impeached at the bar of the Senate of high crimes and misdemeanors while in office upon the following articles, namely:

Articles exhibited by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, in the names of themselves and of all the people of the United States of America, against George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, and now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China, in maintenance and support of their impeachment against him for high crimes and misdemeanors while in office.

ARTICLE I.

That the said George F. Seward, between the 1st day of January, A. D. 1864, and the 31st day of December, A. D. 1875, then holding and exercising the office of consul and consul-general at Shanghai, in the empire of China, as aforesaid, was guilty of injustice, tyranny, extortion, and bribery in his official capacity as judge of the said consular court at Shanghai, China, upon and with citizens of the United States in this, to wit:

First specification.—That the said George F. Seward, between the month of January, in the year 1874, and the month of December, in the year 1875, then being consul-general at Shanghai, China, as aforesaid, and as such judge of the consular court at Shanghai, China, aforesaid, acting judicially in a case then pending before him in said court regarding the settlement of the estate of one D. R. Spedding, formerly an American citizen doing business at Shanghai, China, then deceased, such court having probate jurisdiction of the aforesaid estate, charged one Eugene McLaughlin, executor of the will and administering upon the said estate, and demanded and received from him, the said Eugene McLaughlin, executor as aforesaid, the sum of 500 taels, equal in the money of the United States to the sum of $620.

That at the time of the charge by the said Seward against the said estate of the said D. R. Spedding, deceased, there was then pending before the said Seward as such judge the account of the said executor for allowance, which was finally allowed by the said Seward at the sum of 5 per cent. on the amount of said estate, when the amount which the said executor was entitled by law to have and receive would have been 1 per cent. only on the amount of said estate.

That the said charge was made by the said George F. Seward, and the said money was corruptly received by him while probate judge or judge of the consular court aforesaid, well knowing that the services rendered by him were a part of his judicial duties as such judge, and the said 500 taels were, in the final settlement and distribution of said estate, allowed by said Seward as said judge against said estate, and the said Seward retained said sum of money, and refused to pay the same to the distributees or owners of said estate, against the protest of T. F. Burr, who owned one-half of said estate.

Second specification.—That the said George F. Seward, between the month of January, in the year 1874, and the 31st day of December, in the year 1875, then being consul-general at Shanghai, China, as aforesaid, and as such judge of the consular court at Shanghai, China, as aforesaid, then and there acting judicially in the case then pending before him as such judge, in which said case one Benjamin Pease, an American citizen, had been charged before him, the said Seward, with the crimes of piracy and murder, and had been arrested and committed to jail therefor, caused the said Benjamin Pease to be brought before him while acting as judge aforesaid, and then and there, without examination or hearing, and without trial, lawfully discharged the said Benjamin Pease from custody and arrest, well knowing him to be guilty of the crimes charged against him, and then and there permitted the said Benjamin Pease to go at large, without examination, hearing, or trial for said offense, and without making any endeavors to obtain evidence against him.

Third specification.—That the said George F. Seward, between the month of January, in the year 1875, and the month of December, in the year 1875, then being consul-general at Shanghai, China, as aforesaid, and as such judge of the consular court at Shanghai, China, as aforesaid, certain alleged deserters from an American ship, who had been brought before said Oliver B. Bradford, then vice-consul-general as aforesaid, and he having, without authority of law and without hearing, committed the said alleged deserters for sixty days at hard labor on bread and water, one of said alleged deserters, desiring to remonstrate or protest against the said commitment and to make complaint of bad treatment on board of said ship, applied to the said George F. Seward for the purpose of obtaining a rehearing of the determination against him, the said George F. Seward did then and there command the marshal of said consular court to imprison him ninety days, instead of sixty days, as sentenced by said Bradford, without further trial or hearing or evidence, and the said alleged deserter from said ship was committed to jail at hard labor on bread and water, and imprisoned in the jail of said consulate at Shanghai for said term of ninety days, which said act by the said Seward was unjust, tyrannical, and an abuse of his judicial authority, and without authority of law.

Fourth specification.—That the said George F. Seward, while holding the said office of consul-general at Shanghai, China, and the said office of judge of the consular court at Shanghai, China, and acting judicially therein, permitted one George S. Porter to act as judge of the consular court in the trial of one Dominick Lynch, who had been committed for trial in the said consular court as an accessory after the fact to the crime of murder of one McKinnon by a man by the name of John Buckley, and to sit in the trial of said Lynch, to take the testimony on the said trial, to determine the said Lynch guilty of the offense charged against him, and to convict him of such offense and to sentence him therefor to the jail of said consular court for sixty days for said offense, which said sentence and commitment were carried into effect, and the said Dominick Lynch served out his term of imprisonment in accordance with said sentence. That the said Porter had no right or authority to sit or act judicially on the trial of said case, which the said Seward then and there well knew.

Fifth specification.—That the said George F. Seward, while holding the office of consul-general as aforesaid, and as such judge of the consular court at Shanghai, China, as aforesaid, between the month of January, in the year 1865, and the month of December, in the year 1865, at divers times permitted said Oliver B. Bradford, without authority of law, to sit in the trial of civil cases in the consular court at Shanghai, China, to take the testimony of witnesses therein, to hear and determine in regard thereto, and to render judgment therein, which said judgment so rendered by him was subsequently enforced by the order of said court, well knowing that the said Bradford had no authority or jurisdiction to try or determine said cause.

ARTICLE II.

That the said George F. Seward, on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1865, and at divers days and times from that date until the 31st day of December, A. D. 1875, having in his custody a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of $20,000, being the moneys of the United States, known as the seamen's relief fund, and being then and there the disbursing officer of the United States of such funds at said consulate-general, did then and there, without authority of law, convert the same to his own use, and did then and there loan the same with interest at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum, and did then and there loan said moneys to one Andrew Anderson and to the firm of Clafl & Co., and to divers other persons unknown, taking from said persons mortgages to himself as security for such loans and appropriating the interest upon said loans to his own use, and thereby embezzled said funds. That said mortgages were thereafter foreclosed in the consular court, before himself acting as judge, in actions in which he was plaintiff and party in interest, and judgments and decrees of foreclosure perfected in said suits, on which decrees of foreclosure and rule the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by said Seward at such sales, and titles made and confirmed to him by order of himself, sitting as judge.

ARTICLE III.

That the said George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, and now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China, between the 1st day of January, in the year A. D. 1865, and the 31st day of December, in the year A. D. 1875, then being consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, became interested in the construction of a certain railroad from Woosung to Shanghai, within the empire of China, and used his official influence to promote the construction thereof in violation of the treaties then and now existing between the United States and the Emperor of China, and in violation of the acts of Congress in that behalf, and contrary to the wishes of the people of China and regardless of the protest of the authorities of the empire of China, and particularly of the authorities of the empire of China within the district where the railroad was located.

ARTICLE IV.

That between the 1st day of January, in the year A. D. 1865, and the 31st day of December, A. D. 1875, one Oliver B. Bradford, being vice-consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, deputy consul-general of the United States, clerk of the consular court of the United States, and consular clerk of the United States, assigned to Shanghai, China, did, in connection with one A. A. Hayes and others, unlawfully form and enter into a scheme, for the purpose of pecuniary profit, of constructing a railroad from Woosung to Shanghai, in the empire of China, the construction of which road was contrary to the wishes of the people and authorities of the empire of China, as the said Oliver B. Bradford and others then and there well knew. That for the purpose of deceiving the said people and authorities of China, the said Oliver B. Bradford and others fraudulently pretended that they were to build a common road or highway from said Woosung to said Shanghai, and so fraudulently pretending, purchased and secured the land necessary to be used for the construction of said railroad from Woosung to Shanghai. The said Oliver B. Bradford and others, the better to enable them to deceive the said people and authorities of China, organized themselves into a copartnership, which they called and designated the Woosung and Shanghai Road Company.

That the said George F. Seward, well knowing the premises and then holding the office of consul-general at said Shanghai, unlawfully intending to intervene in the domestic administration of China in regard to the construction of railroads in the empire of China, and well knowing that His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China had not determined to construct or cause to be constructed railroads within said empire, and had not made application to the United States or any other western power to carry out such policy, and that the United States had not designated or authorized suitable engineers to be employed by the Chinese government in such improvements, unlawfully, in fraud of the rights of the empire of China, and against the wishes of the people of China, and against the protests of said authorities of the empire of China, did then and there aid, assist, and encourage the said Oliver B. Bradford and others in the construction of said railroad as aforesaid, and did aid, assist, and promote the said scheme of constructing said railroad as aforesaid by said false and fraudulent pretenses as aforesaid, in violation of the treaties then existing between the United States and the empire of China, and against the acts of Congress in that behalf; and that the said George F. Seward did then and there use the influence of his said official position to accomplish, and to aid and assist in accomplishing, said fraudulent scheme by imposition as aforesaid upon the said authorities of the empire of China.

ARTICLE V.

That in the month of April, in the year 1871, one Richard Phenix was marshal of the United States for the consulate-general at Shanghai, China, and as such entitled to receive for his fees and services the salary and perquisites of said office as marshal; that the said George F. Seward, well knowing the premises, and wrongfully intending and contriving to defraud the Government of the United States out of the moneys of the Government of the United States, took and received to his own use the fees which by law the said Phenix, as marshal aforesaid, was entitled to receive, and converted the same to his own use, making no account to the Government therefor, and rendering false and fraudulent vouchers to the Government therefor.

ARTICLE VI.

That the said Richard Phenix, in the month of April, in the year 1871, was marshal of the United States for the consulate-general at Shanghai, China; that the said George F. Seward, well knowing the premises, unlawfully entered into an agreement with the said Richard Phenix, by which agreement the said George F. Seward was to pay to the said Richard Phenix a certain fixed sum for his services and salary as marshal aforesaid, and he, the said Seward, to receive all of the fees of the office of said marshal of the United States at said consulate-general, and that under and by virtue of said agreement he did receive and convert to his own use all of the fees of the office of said marshal of the United States in the month of April, 1871, until the month of December, 1875, which said sums of money so received by him were largely in excess of the amount paid to said Phenix by the said Seward, and for which the said Seward took vouchers from said Phenix for an amount greater than that actually paid to him by said Seward, and returned the sum so paid to the Treasury Department, receiving credit therefor.

ARTICLE VII.

That the said George F. Seward, from January 1, A. D. 1862, to and including the 31st day of December, 1875, holding and exercising the duties of the office of consul and consul-general of the United States as aforesaid at Shanghai, China, and as such being a disbursing officer of the United States, charged with the receipts and disbursements of the moneys of the United States on account of expenses of the consular court and of the consulate and consulate-general at Shanghai, China, did defraud the United States in the manner following, to wit: That all the moneys received by the said George F. Seward at said Shanghai as such officer on account of the United States were received in silver coin commonly known as Mexican dollars; that said silver coin at said Shanghai at and during the time aforesaid commanded a premium over American gold and over the currency of the United States; that the said George F. Seward, as such disbursing officer, uniformly paid out the same silver coin he had received, but that the said George F. Seward, then and there intending to defraud the United States, made out his quarterly statements of accounts of said receipts and disbursements showing that he had received the money in the currency of the United States, which had during that time depreciated below the value of the coin of the United States, and that he had therewith purchased gold and with said gold had purchased said silver coin, charging the difference upon both said premiums to the United States as disbursed by him; whereas, in truth and in fact, the said George F. Seward never did purchase any gold and never did receive any currency as such officer on account of the United States; the receipts of said consulate for moneys received exceeding in all instances the amounts disbursed by him.

ARTICLE VIII.

That the said George F. Seward from the 1st day of January, A. D. 1862, to and including the 31st day of December, A. D. 1865, holding during said time the office of consul and the office of consul-general of the United States at said Shanghai, and as such being a disbursing officer of the United States, and by virtue of his office as such consul and consul-general, being required by law to make return quarterly to the Government of the United States of the moneys received at the post-office, or postal agency, at said Shanghai, China, did defraud the United States in the manner following, to wit: that all the moneys received by the said George F. Seward as such postal agent at said Shanghai on account of the United States were received in silver coin, commonly known as Mexican dollars; that said silver coin at said Shanghai at, and during said time, commanded a premium over American gold, and over the currency of the United States; that the said George F. Seward as such disbursing officer uniformly paid out the same silver coin he had received, but that the said George F. Seward then and there, intending to defraud the United States, made out his quarterly statements of account of said receipts and disbursements, showing that he had received the moneys in the currency of the United States, which during said time was depreciated below the value of the coin of the United States and of said Mexican dollars, and had therewith purchased gold, and with said gold had purchased said silver coin, charging the difference upon both said premiums to the United States as disbursed by him, whereas in truth and in fact the said George F. Seward never did purchase any gold, or never did receive any currency as such officer on account of the United States, the receipts of said office exceeding in all instances the amounts disbursed by him.

ARTICLE IX.

That the said George F. Seward, between the 1st day of January, in the year 1876, and the 31st day of December, in said year, then being envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China as aforesaid, unlawfully took and received the salary of the consul-general at Shanghai, China, for the quarter beginning on the 1st day of January, 1876, and ending on the 31st day of March, 1876, and forwarded or caused to be forwarded to the Treasury of the United States a voucher in the name of O. B. Bradford, acting as consul-general during said time, and appropriated the amount called for by said voucher to his own use, not having performed any of the duties of consul-general at said Shanghai during said time.

ARTICLE X.

That the said George F. Seward, between the 1st day of January, in the year 1876, and the 31st day of December, in the year 1876, then being envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China, unlawfully took and received from the Government of the United States the salary for both the offices of consul-general at Shanghai, China, and the office of minister at Peking, China, for and during the first quarter of the year 1876, which said salary so received by him as minister aforesaid amounted to the sum of $3,637.36, and the salary so received by him for the office of consul-general amounted to the sum of $1,340.98, which said sum of money so received by him for the salary of said consul-general for said quarter was unlawfully received by the said George F. Seward, as he then and there well knew, and which sum of money the said George F. Seward wrongfully converted to his own use.

ARTICLE XI.

That the said George F. Seward, on the 27th day of March, in the year 1877, then being envoy and minister, as aforesaid, to China, unlawfully suspended one John C. Myers, then being consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, from the office of said consul-general at said Shanghai, and deprived him of the same; which said suspension of the said John C. Myers from his office as aforesaid was without authority of law, as the said Seward then and there well knew.

ARTICLE XII.

That the said George F. Seward, being envoy and minister to China as aforesaid, on the 27th day of March, A. D. 1877, well knowing that the said Oliver B. Bradford, who had during the time when said Seward was consul-general as aforesaid, held the different offices specified in Article IV, and who had during said time kept the books of said office of consul-general, and been the private clerk of the said George F. Seward, knew that he, the said Seward, had during the time aforesaid willfully neglected to render true and just quarterly accounts and returns of the business of said office of consul-general and of moneys received by said Seward as such consul-general for the use of the United States, and well knowing that the said Bradford knew that he, the said Seward, had neglected to pay over moneys in his hands as such consul-general due to the United States as required by law, and well knowing that the said Bradford well knew that he, the said Seward, had been guilty of extortion, under color of his said office, in that he had charged excessive and illegal fees for his services as such consul-general, unlawfully suspended and removed one John C. Myers from the office of consul-general at Shanghai, China, he being then and there consul-general of the United States at said Shanghai, China, and appointed and procured to be appointed in the place of said Myers the said Bradford, which said suspension and appointment was without authority of law, and made solely for the purpose of enabling him, the said Seward, and him, the said Bradford, to secrete and conceal the crimes committed as aforesaid.

ARTICLE XIII.

That the said George F. Seward, from the 1st day of January, A. D. 1869, to the 31st day of December, A. D. 1875, then holding and exercising the office of consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, willfully neglected to render true and just quarterly accounts and returns of his office, and of moneys received by him for the use of the United States. And the said George F. Seward, during the time aforesaid, holding and exercising the office aforesaid, then and there having as such officer in his custody large and unexpended balances of moneys belonging to the United States at the end of each of said quarters, did neglect to pay over the balances of such moneys due to the United States at the expiration of each and every quarter during said time before the expiration of the next succeeding quarter, and he, the said George F. Seward, was thereby then and there guilty of embezzlement of the public moneys of the United States.

ARTICLE XIV.

That the said George F. Seward, being consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, between the 1st day of January, A. D. 1875 and the 31st day of December, A. D. 1875, willfully neglected during the time aforesaid to account to the Secretary of the Treasury and hold, subject to his draft or other direction, all the fees collected by him, the said Seward, as consul-general aforesaid, during the time aforesaid.

ARTICLE XV.

That the said George F. Seward, between the 1st day of January, in the year 1877, and the 31st day of December, in the year 1878, then being envoy and minister as aforesaid to China, and then and there well knowing that the said Oliver B. Bradford, vice-consul-general as aforesaid, clerk of the consular court as aforesaid, was guilty of embezzlement, and that he had been lawfully committed to the consular jail at Shanghai, China, therefor, and that he was in jail under commitment therefor, left his post as envoy and minister as aforesaid to China, and went to Shanghai aforesaid, and then and there unlawfully endeavored to procure the release of the said Oliver B. Bradford from such imprisonment and his discharge from said jail as aforesaid, where he was in commitment as aforesaid, and then and there unlawfully used his official position as minister as aforesaid to procure the discharge and release of the said Bradford from said confinement as aforesaid, and did thereby as aforesaid aid and assist in procuring the release and discharge of said Bradford from said confinement, well knowing him to be guilty of the offenses charged against him as aforesaid.

ARTICLE XVI.

That the said George F. Seward from the 1st day of January, in the year 1877, to the 31st day of December, 1878, being envoy and minister as aforesaid, left his post at Peking as minister aforesaid, and came to Shanghai aforesaid, and while there unlawfully aided and assisted in procuring the release or discharge of the said O. B. Bradford from jail in the consulate at Shanghai, China, where he was in confinement under commitment from the consular court at Shanghai aforesaid, and the release of said Bradford from his confinement as aforesaid, and released the property which had been attached by the Government of the United States to satisfy certain demands of the Government of the United States against him, the said Bradford, and did then and there procure the discharge of the said Bradford from said confinement and permit him to go at large in violation of law.

ARTICLE XVII.

That the said George F. Seward, between the 1st day of January, in the year 1876, and the 31st day of December, in the year 1876, then being consul-general at Shanghai, China, as aforesaid, unlawfully took from the office of said consul-general at Shanghai, China, certain blotters, cash-books, journals, ledgers, and papers, records of the office of the said consul-general at Shanghai, China, the property of the Government of the United States, and carried them away with intent to conceal, destroy, or steal the same, and ever since has, and still does, conceal the same, and refuses to deliver the same as required by law.

And the House of Representatives by protestation, saving to themselves the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any further articles of accusation or impeachment against the said George F. Seward, late consul-general at Shanghai, China, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China, and also of replying to his answers which he shall make unto the articles herein preferred against him and of offering proof to the same and every part thereof, and to all and every other article, accusation, or impeachment which shall be exhibited by them, as the case shall require, do demand that the said George F. Seward may be put to answer the high crimes and misdemeanors in office herein charged against him, and that such proceedings, examinations, trials, and judgments may be thereupon had and given as may be agreeable to law and justice. Your committee report herewith the evidence taken by them in pursuance of the resolutions of the House, and which fully supports the foregoing articles of impeachment.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions: Resolved, That George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States of America at Shanghai, China, and now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China, be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors while in office.

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of this House be appointed and instructed to proceed immediately to the bar of the Senate and there impeach George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China, in the name of the House of Representatives and of all the people of the United States of high crimes and misdemeanors while in office, and to inform that body that formal articles of impeachment will in due time be presented and to request the Senate to take such orders in the premises as they deem appropriate.

Resolved, That seven managers be appointed by the Speaker to conduct the impeachment exhibited against George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States of America at Shanghai, China, and now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China, and that the foregoing articles of impeachment be adopted by the House and presented to the Senate by the said managers in maintenance and support of the impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors in office of the said George F. Seward.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
BENJ. DEAN,
STEPHEN L. MAYHAM,
THOS. TURNER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now move the previous question.

Mr. BUNDY. The minority of the committee have a report which they desire to submit at this time.

The SPEAKER. It will be presented.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have moved the previous question, but I have no objection to the report of the minority being read, and to it being understood that the resolutions of the minority are moved as a substitute for the resolutions reported by the committee; that is, provided the House will come to an immediate vote on the question as soon as this paper is read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know how such a provision as that could be made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the right of the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the gentleman what time he proposes to allow for discussion?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have a vote as soon as possible.

Mr. BUTLER. Will there be an hour for debate?

Mr. SPRINGER. If I take that time I will give half of it to the other side.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the reading I desire to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that they will be read for information.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, and I move the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. That admits the amendment of the minority.

Mr. SPRINGER. It admits all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] wants to allow a vote on both propositions.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman to say that he moved the previous question and that he had this read for information.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the gentleman wants to reach a conclusion of the case by a vote on both propositions.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman from Illinois have a separate vote taken on each of the specifications?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. How much debate does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire any myself; but I am willing at the conclusion of the reading, after the previous question has been moved and seconded, to answer any questions that may be put to me in good faith.

Mr. BUNDY. Now that we may understand ourselves—

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois not to refuse reasonable debate within the period of one hour. The paper presented by the minority will be read.

Mr. BUNDY. But it is better we have an understanding before the reading of the minority report. I had understood that after the reading of the minority report we should have one hour of debate, to be divided equally between the two sides.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Illinois to refuse that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have stated that I desired to have the fairest and fullest discussion possible, consistent with the limited time we have. How much discussion there is to be will depend somewhat upon the disposition of the House when we reach that point. But if there is any discussion, the time will be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. FRYE. There will be no objection to a limited discussion, I take it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suppose not. Would the gentleman prefer to have discussion rather than the reading of the views of the minority?

Mr. FRYE. We wish to have the views of the minority read, and to have discussion too. I will say to the gentleman that there is no purpose on this side to filibuster.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no desire except to bring the House fairly to an issue.

The Clerk read the minority report, as follows:

In considering Mr. Seward's matters, the minority of the committee have been impressed strongly by the following facts:

First. That the consular duties in China are multifarious and difficult.

Second. That the port of Shanghai is the great entrepôt of commerce in China.

Third. That Mr. Seward's charge of the office at Shanghai embraced over a period of fourteen years.

Fourth. That he was not supplied, more particularly in earlier years, with the clerical and other assistance necessary to the efficient performance of his duties.

Fifth. That in assuming responsibility to meet the exigencies of the position Mr. Seward received the approval of the executive authority.

In remarking upon the duties of consular-general of China, Dr. Williams, for more than forty years a resident of China, gives in evidence the following statement, page 654:

"The consulates of China are somewhat misnamed if the idea of a consulate in Europe is applied to them. They are not so much consulates as governments. Territorial jurisdiction there is none, but the protection of life and property which the laws give to Americans in their own country is the treaty secured to them in China, and the consul is the only authorized agent in securing the enforcement of treaty rights. To look upon these officers as mere consulates is to take a very imperfect view of their real nature. They are governments."

In point of fact, our consuls in China wield a very broad authority. They make laws and regulations for the control of our people coming within their jurisdiction. They act as judges; they supervise the districts in which they reside; they are charged with the protection of the interests of our people as against the people and the authority of China. The functions they perform are, therefore, of great importance, and require the exercise of much judicial and administrative ability.

In speaking of the importance of the port of Shanghai as one of the great marts of the world, reference may be made to Mr. Keim's report to the Treasury Department in 1870, in which he says:

"The remarkable rise of the trade at Shanghai will afford some notion of the march of affairs in the East, but it gives but a vague idea of the actual situation." (Page printed correspondent.) Mr. Seward, writing in 1873, says:

"All the teas of central China pass by Shanghai on their way to western countries. Two-thirds of all the silks of China which are exported are produced near Shanghai and are exported from there. More than 90 per cent. of all the cotton goods imported into China are brought to Shanghai and distributed thence to the northern and river ports. Two-thirds of all the opium imported is received there and similarly distributed. The value of the direct exportations of Shanghai is about $60,000,000; that of all the other ports about $45,000,000. The value of the direct importations of Shanghai is about $75,000,000; that of all the other ports $30,000,000."

The actual labors performed by Mr. Seward at Shanghai during the long period of his service have been in part shown to the committee by the consular books which have been presented to them. This, however, pertains more particularly to the commercial side of the consulate, and for the purpose of showing the extent of the judicial work and of his general administration work, a copy of the return of civil and criminal cases heard by him in a given year, and a copy of the register of his correspondence for a given quarter have been put in evidence. It appears from the former that Mr. Seward heard, in 1864, one hundred and thirty-one civil cases, twenty-one criminal and about three hundred police cases. (Page.) It appears, also, that the number of letters prepared and sent out by him quarterly was about three hundred and fifty.

When Mr. Seward first went to Shanghai an interpreter and a constable were the only officers of the consulate beside himself. Afterward one clerk was appointed. Still later, a second, and in 1875 a third. These clerks were not fully paid by the Government, and he was obliged to draw upon various resources, such as the unofficial fees of the office, the clerk's and marshal's fees to supplement the deficiency of the appropriations. We do not mean to approve the course thus pursued by him, however important was the object he had in view. But the Government was informed of it and did give to it an unqualified approval.

The most notable reference to this matter will be found in the printed correspondence, at page 64. The writer, Mr. Keim, reporting on the Shanghai office, used the following language:

[Extract from Mr. Keim's letter of December 22, 1870, to Treasury Department.]

"The question of the adequate compensation of consular officers in China is also one of importance. At this time I will merely mention the difficulties encountered here. By the second section of the act of June, 1864, the appointment of consular clerks, not to exceed thirteen, is authorized. Their compensation is fixed at $1,000 per annum. For this sum it would be difficult here to secure the services of a person for the most ordinary work, and impossible to secure a competent clerk, capable of keeping the complicated accounts and papers and transacting the ordinary daily business of the consulate. The consular clerks at this office, both, as I have already stated, efficient in their duties, receive $1,000 from the Government, and, in addition, the consul-general allows them $1,250 in cash (each) and quarters in the consular building, which would make their compensation about $2,500 (each) per annum. This amount is made up from various sources. The unofficial fees contribute per annum not less than $400; the allowance of cost of post-office, $1,200; the marshal's fees, that officer receiving only his pay proper, about $450; fees of the clerk of the consular court, about $400, making a total of about $2,450. These fees have reached a large amount, but, up to the sum designated, the consul-general states he applied them to the purposes mentioned. * * * I have no doubt you will perceive from this one of the eccentricities of the present consular system of the United States. All fees should be returned to the Government; all officers should be applied to the purposes for which they were appropriated; all money should be sufficiently compensated, so as to secure efficient men and to enable them to live with becoming respectability."

"It is due to the consul-general to say that he has achieved success in making his office a credit to the Government, and this is entirely owing to his management, as I have mentioned. I cannot agree with the means in principle, but under the circumstances there are numerous reasons for making no complaint. If legislation in the matter of means is not sufficiently liberal to maintain the respectability of the flag, as represented by the officers of the Government, it would hardly be generous to rebuke an officer for making an effort on his own account, provided the result is favorable and obvious."

This letter was communicated to the State Department and to Mr. Seward, and in response to Mr. Seward's remarks upon it the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. J. C. B. Davis, declared that the explanations were entirely satisfactory. (Page 225.)

In this connection the language used by the merchants in Shanghai in 1863, in a memorial addressed to the Secretary of State, may be quoted, (page 470, correspondence.) They say: "But for the responsibility assumed by the consul the consulate would be closed at this moment to two-thirds of the business which attaches to it." It will be well to refer also to Mr. Seward's letters of October 30, 1862, July 15, 1863, and September 16, 1865, in each of which he tendered to the Government his resignation because of the deficient appropriations made for the support of his office.

The articles agreed upon by the majority of the committee must be considered in the light of this general view of the situation, and first we will submit a reply to articles numbered 5 and 6, as to the continuation of marshal fees, and then proceed to an examination of the several articles and specifications in the order in which they have been presented by the committee.

The arrangement that the marshal should receive $500 per annum in lieu of fees was made between Mr. Phoenix and Mr. Seward in 1874. The occasion for such an arrangement has already been explained. It was made voluntarily on the part of Mr. Phoenix, who preferred to receive for his services a sum certain in amount rather than only upon uncertain contingencies. At page 98 of the correspondence, Phoenix says: "In place of receiving the 'marshal fees,' I arranged with Mr. Consul-General Seward to take for my services $500 a year in addition to my salary as marshal." And he testifies (page 152, evidence) that Mr. Seward said to him, "You can either have $500 a year or the fees of the office." And that he concluded to take the $500 a year. Apart from the information communicated by Mr. Seward himself to the Government on this subject, Mr. Keim, in his report to the Treasury Department, hereinbefore quoted, states that the marshal fees contributed about $450 to the fund used for the support and maintenance of the consulate, "that officer receiving only his pay proper."

This report was referred by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Department of State, and by the Department of State sent to Mr. Seward on the 19th of June, 1871, given at page 220 of the correspondence. Mr. Seward replied under date of August 10, 1871, (correspondence, page 220.) In response to this communication Mr. Seward received from the Hon. J. C. B. Davis, the Assistant Secretary of State, the following:

Mr. Davis to Mr. Seward.

No. 283.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 26, 1871.

Sir: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch of the 10th ultimo, without number, and take pleasure in informing you that the detailed statement it gives in response to the charges preferred against you by Mr. Keim, Treasury agent, is entirely satisfactory and fully confirms the good opinion which the Department has always entertained of you.

I am &c.,

J. C. B. DAVIS.

It thus appears from the evidence before the committee: First, that the arrangement by which the marshal was to receive $500 in lieu of the fees of that office was voluntarily made by that officer and was desired by him; second, that whatever pecuniary gain resulted therefrom was a gain to a fund used to defray the necessary expenses of the consulate; third, that the Government was fully advised of the transaction, and gave it approval and commendation.

It also further appears from Mr. Keim's report that Mr. Seward's course, to use Mr. Keim's own language, "is obviously favorable," and he sums up his judgment in the premises as follows: "It is due to the consul-general to say that he has achieved success in making his office a credit to the Government, and this is entirely owing to his management, as I have mentioned. I cannot agree with the means in principle, but under the circumstances there are numerous reasons for making no complaint."

That "management" having received from the Government at the time commendation instead of complaint, and the officer having been therefore encouraged by his immediate superiors in authority to continue in the course he had adopted, it seems to the undersigned that after the lapse of nearly ten years to hold him now accountable for a technical deviation from the direct line of official regularity is not only inconsistent with law and justice but the very refinement of injustice and cruelty.

The first article upon which the majority of the committee propose to base the contemplated impeachment of Mr. Seward is so broad, general, vague, and complex that it would seem to render impossible any definite answer, as it certainly would render impossible any specific finding. Nor is this unprecedented character of the article, which embraces quite a number of separate distinct, and independent offenses, reduced to any clear degree of certainty by the specifications.

The article is as follows: "Injustice, tyranny, extortion, and bribery."

To which one of these independent offenses the several specifications are intended to apply those who have to act in the premises are left to conjecture.

The committee seem to have been under the impression that legal forms had been heretofore ordained and habitually used only to defeat a conviction, and that the generality of the allegations made would supply all deficiencies in the evidence.

The first specification under this broad and comprehensive article is to the effect that Mr. Seward, being consul-general and having judicial functions to perform as a judge of probate as well as administrative functions as consul-general, did, at the special instance and request of the executor of the estate of one Spedding, give him counsel and advice and receive therefor a fee or reward of 500 taels or thereabouts, and subsequently allow the same in passing the accounts of said executor.

It appears that the services were rendered by Mr. Seward in the course of the settlement of the estate, and that these services were of great value to the executor and to the estate. It also appears that the services so rendered related to matters in connection with the estate which did not in any way come before the court for adjudication or determination. It also appears that the sum paid to Mr. Seward for the services rendered was voluntarily paid and that no question was raised in regard thereto at the time of passing the final account of the executor in which such payment was allowed, and that there was no contest over the estate either by creditors or legatees.

The plain question therefore presented under this specification is whether a consul-general at Shanghai should be impeached for a transaction of this nature in view of the character of the transaction itself, the circumstances under which it took place, and the exceptional character of the functions devolved by law upon that officer. We are of the opinion that he should not, and submit in brief our reasons for this opinion.

The judge of probate exercises the powers of a peculiar jurisdiction in the course of which it must frequently happen that he will be called upon to allow or reject the accounts of executors and administrators containing items in which the judge is himself interested. If, for instance, the judge should be a creditor of the deceased, this particular debt could not be paid until he had passed upon it according to the provisions of the probate law he was administering, nor could the executor or administrator claim a credit for its payment in his account with the estate unless that credit was allowed by the court. We say, in the absence of any law prohibiting such a transaction, and there is no prohibitory law applicable to the matter now under consideration; and we also say, in the absence of fraud or collusion, and in this case there is no evidence whatever, nor any pretense of evidence of either one or the other, that the charge is simply that the act was done, and that the naked act itself is illegal, and a crime or misdemeanor for which the party should be impeached. It is readily admitted that if a case of fraud or collusion were found, it would deserve impeachment. If the judge and the executors conspired to cheat the estate, a criminal conviction would be the just reward of both. But in a case of fair and honest character, where the executor needed advice, counsel, and assistance, and the judge was competent to give it, it certainly is not criminal that he should do so, nor criminal that he should be paid for his services.

The jurisdiction in probate matters of the consul-general at Shanghai is exceptional and peculiar, and the conduct of that officer cannot be judged by the same rules that apply to probate judges in the various States in the Union, who are limited to judicial functions alone, and who do not exercise judicial powers as merely incidental to some administrative office of which they may be the incumbents.

The judicial functions of Mr. Seward were incident to his office of consul-general; and as consul-general he was expressly authorized by the consular regulations, sections 296, 297, and 298, to render unofficial services to his countrymen and to charge for the same what might be regarded as adequate compensation. He was also authorized to refuse to render such services, if he did not desire to perform them, and required so to refuse if they interfered with the performance of his official duties.

The authority given by these sections of the regulations was intended for the benefit and convenience of American citizens rather than for the benefit of the consul, and it is perfectly manifest that it becomes the duty of the consul, in obedience to the spirit of the regulations referred to, to render to any of his countrymen, within the limits of his consulate, all services that they may need and that it may possibly be in his power to render; and to charge a reasonable compensation for such services is plainly, according to the letter and spirit of those regulations, his right.

The regulations further provide (section 327, paragraph 57) that the consul shall take the estates of American citizens dying within the limits of his consulate and administer upon the same. This regulation gives him the office of administrator, devolving upon him all the duties and responsibilities of that office, and subjecting him to all the limitations and restrictions attaching thereto under the law, while at the same time he must, by virtue of his consular office, perform all the judicial duties of a judge of probate. He is, therefore, required by law as administrator to appear before himself as probate judge, and in the latter capacity to pass officially upon his accounts and doings in his capacity of administrator.

For the performance of his duties as administrator he is allowed 5 per cent. upon the amount of the personal estate of the deceased, and the evidence discloses that this was the precise amount he allowed the executor in the case under consideration. The executor received no further benefit whatever from any decision rendered by the consul, and there is no attempt whatever to connect the allowance of this 5 per cent. with the fee paid Mr. Seward for his advice and services.

There being, then, not only no evidence of fraud or collusion between the consul-general and the executor; but, on the contrary, the testimony establishing the fact that the executor was allowed only such compensation as the law itself had fixed as an adequate remuneration for the performance of the duties of that office; and it further appearing that the services rendered by the consul were of great value and that they were not more than justly remunerated, the undersigned cannot see that grounds exist to justify the charge made by the committee in connection with this transaction.

The second specification under the article we are now considering is to the effect that Mr. Seward having in custody a man named Pease, who was charged with various acts of piracy by the Spanish authorities at Manila, released him without trial.

It appears from the evidence that Pease was brought to Shanghai by Admiral Rogers, together with two witnesses said to be cognizant of his transactions, in April, 1871; that Mr. Seward examined into the case and decided to send Pease to San Francisco for trial before the United States courts, they being the only tribunals having jurisdiction in the premises; that before an opportunity offered for his transportation the most important witness, and the one upon whose testimony a conviction could only be had, died in jail; that Mr. Seward thereupon determined that the evidence available would not be sufficient to convict the accused, and in the exercise of his authority as consul-general released him, and immediately, to wit, May 11, 1871, reported the circumstances of the case and the occasion for his discharge to the Department at Washington. (Pages 200, 201, cor.)

The Department approved of the action of Mr. Seward in the premises. But, independently of the report of Mr. Seward at the time, and the approval by the Department of his action in the case, the testimony before the committee not only shows that no imputation of improper conduct can justly be cast upon him for his action in this matter, but also conclusively establishes that his conduct was judicious and proper.

It is clearly proved that the principal witness died, as Mr. Seward stated in his communication to the Department of State; and Mr. Myers, whose relation to this investigation and manifest hostility to Mr. Seward compels the belief that he would palliate nothing calculated to give the color of criminality to any of his acts, says, in a communication, under date of March 26, 1877, (cor., pp. 30, 31,) as follows: "I do not know of any reason, consideration, or circumstance upon which an imputation of wrong can be imputed to Mr. Seward in connection with the Pease case."

Mr. Phoenix, another witness principally relied upon for the inculpation of Mr.

Seward, in respect to the various charges brought against him by Mr. Myers, and contained in the report of the majority of the committee, in his affidavit of March 29, 1877, (cor., p. 34,) says as follows: "I never heard any questions raised as to the merits of Mr. Seward's action in the Pease case until the publication in the Courier of the 21st of February was made. I have no reason to believe that any such question was raised. I do not know of any reason why Mr. Seward's conduct in that case should be questioned. I may say the same in regard to all the cases which came before Mr. Seward during my service as marshal of the court over which he presided. His reputation has been and is that of an eminently just man."

In releasing Pease, Mr. Seward was in the exercise of a judicial or quasi-judicial function, and after examination gave a judgment in the order discharging the prisoners. Throughout the entire evidence in this case there is no evidence showing that that judgment was either corrupt or unwise, and unless proof is adduced sufficient to establish at least a prima facie case of corruption in a particular judgment, no sane man will hold that the justice by whom it was pronounced can be impeached or held criminal in any way for having rendered it. In our opinion it was eminently wise and proper in Mr. Seward if he believed that evidence sufficient could not be brought forward to justify the conviction of Pease, to discharge him, and thus save the United States the expense of a useless trial and we may express the regret that other high functionaries of the Government do not seem to be equally considerate for the public time and the public money.

The third specification is that Mr. Seward allowed Mr. Bradford to take jurisdiction over certain seamen, and that Mr. Seward himself arbitrarily increased the sentence of a deserter.

The act of July 20, 1840, section 18, (5 Statutes, page 397,) which is re-enacted in section 1736 of the Revised Statutes, strictly enjoins upon consuls the reasonable performance of all duties enjoined upon them by the laws regulating the shipment and discharge of seamen and the reclamation of deserters on board or from vessels in foreign ports. Section 4600 of the Revised Statutes provides that it shall be the duty of consular officers to reclaim deserters, and discountenance insubordination by every means within their power, and where the local authorities can be usefully employed for that purpose, to lend their aid and use their exertions to that end in the most effectual manner. Desertion and insubordination by seamen are denounced by the penal legislation of the United States as serious offenses. (See section 4596 Revised Statutes.) The penalty for desertion is imprisonment for not more than three months, and forfeiture of clothes and effects of the seaman aboard the vessel and of the wages or emoluments which he has then earned. The penalty for willful disobedience of any lawful command is imprisonment for not more than two months, and also at the discretion of the court the forfeiture of not more than four days' pay.

For continued willful disobedience or continued willful neglect of duty, the penalty is imprisonment for not more than six months, and also, at the discretion of the court, forfeiture for every twenty-four hours' continuance of such insubordination and neglect of a sum not more than twelve days' pay, or sufficient to defray the expenses necessary to provide a substitute. The general maritime law confers power upon the master of a vessel, in extreme cases, to imprison insubordinate mariners upon shore, and in proper cases there can be no doubt that the power resides in consuls to enforce obedience and subordination on the part of sailors in the same manner. As mentioned above, the statute especially renders it the duty of consular officers to reclaim deserters and discountenance insubordination by every means within their power, and strictly enjoins upon them to perform seasonably all the duties imposed by the laws regulating the reclamation of deserters on board or from vessels in port.

The statutes may be correctly said to confer upon consular officers disciplinary jurisdiction over seamen in foreign ports, which is to be exercised conformably to the spirit of the statutes and with reference to the necessities of particular cases, in view of the importance of maintaining the rights of masters and ship-owners and protecting the interests of the commercial marine of the country. This jurisdiction must, of course, be exercised as mildly and considerately as the circumstances of the particular cases will admit of; but before any abuse of power can be justly charged against a consular officer it would be necessary that a full development of the particular circumstances and emergencies of the case should be had. The jurisdiction conferred upon consular officers by the legislation above mentioned is one that is incident to the consular office, which is concerned primarily with the relation of seamen to their ships, as the agencies and instrumentalities of commercial intercourse. The act of 1792 declares that the specification of certain powers to be exercised and performed by consuls and vice-consuls shall not be construed as implying the exclusion of others resulting from the nature "of their appointments or prescribed by any treaty or convention under which they may act."

By the nature of their appointments consular officers have conferred upon them the power, duty, and right to reclaim deserters and discountenance insubordination. This is a function which pertains to them as consular officers, and belongs to all consuls, and as exercised by the consul in China, it is not necessarily exercisable in virtue of special judicial powers conferred upon those consuls. Consuls in China have the same right to reclaim deserters, and discountenance insubordination, and to employ the same means to these ends as consuls in other countries, upon whom no judicial functions are conferred. A deputy consul is a consular officer subordinate to a consul exercising and performing the duties of the consul at the same port or place, (R. S., 1874.) The deputy consul at Shanghai, possessed therefore the same powers and was obliged to perform the same duties which pertain to the consul, in virtue of his consular capacity. He might lawfully exercise the same disciplinary jurisdiction over seamen, with reference to discountenancing of insubordination, which was exercisable by the principal officer.

It is in proof before the committee that Mr. Bradford was deputy consul, and whatever his chief was entitled to do in respect to seamen as a consular officer he was entitled to do in virtue of his appointment.

There is some testimony before the committee that Mr. Bradford exercised this jurisdiction harshly. There is, on the contrary, testimony by most respectable witnesses that his intercourse with seamen was considerate and kindly.

Upon the question of the authority of the deputy consul at Shanghai to exercise the powers in relation to seamen which are incident to and inherent in the office of consul, as consul, no doubt can be entertained.

It is charged in the fourth specification that Mr. Seward allowed Mr. George S. Porter to preside at the trial of one Dominick Lynch, as an accessory after the fact in a case of murder. The only evidence relating to the matter is in the testimony of Mr. Lewis, who stated that Mr. Seward was absent at the time from his office on account of illness. Mr. Porter is spoken of as deputy consul. It is not shown in evidence whether or not he was also vice-consul. If the theory upon which this charge is based is that a vice-consul alone can exercise the judicial functions of a consul in his absence, it would be incumbent upon the prosecution to prove to the committee affirmatively that Mr. Porter was not vice-consul as well as deputy consul and clerk of the court.

The evidence shows that Mr. Bradford held the three appointments of vice-consul-general, deputy consul-general, and clerk of the court, with the knowledge and approval of the Secretary of State, from whom he received his authority both as vice-consul-general and deputy consul. There is no evidence whatever before the committee to show that Mr. Porter did not hold an appointment from the Secretary of State as vice-consul. If it was necessary that he should have been vice-consul, as distinguished from deputy consul, in order to have jurisdiction to try an offender, the legal presumption is that he was the vice-consul as well as deputy consul. The legal presumption in regard to the acts of all the public officers is, expressed by the fundamental manner of the law, omnia presumuntur esse rite acta.

It will not do to charge wrong doing and ask the committee to accept wrong-doing as proven, in the absence of evidence establishing one of the essential elements of the wrong imparted. But the undersigned are not satisfied that it was indispensably necessary that Mr. Porter should hold a separate appointment from the Secretary of State as vice-consul, in order to authorize him to act judicially in the absence of the consul. If in point of fact he had received an appointment as vice-consul from the Secretary of State, the better opinion would seem to be that in the absence of the principal officer he would be entitled to exercise the functions of vice-consul. It is evident that where there is no vice-consul the business of the consulate, in the absence of the principal officer, must proceed. It cannot be pretended that it was ever designed by the law that the statutes against crime should fail of execution in default of the appointment of a vice-consul, where there is a deputy consul competent to exercise the functions of the consul. A deputy consul is expressly described as "a consular officer subordinate to the powers and performing the duties within the limits of the consulate at the same port or place." It would clearly seem that in the absence of the principal officer the deputy might exercise judicial functions when no vice-consul has been in fact appointed by the Secretary of State. There is nothing in the law preventing this same person holding an appointment as deputy consul and vice-consul. Independently of these considerations, it must be observed that no moral complaint has been or can be made against Mr. Seward in respect to this matter. The proof is that he was confined to his home by illness. He had no reason to doubt that in his constrained absence his principal deputy could lawfully perform the duties devolving upon him. It was the interest of the Government and the interest of society that the duties of the consulate should be performed, and to charge him with misdemeanor in relation to such a matter as this is unnecessarily to consume the public time with the consideration of what must be deemed by candid men a frivolous accusation.

It is charged in the fifth specification that Mr. Seward allowed Mr. Bradford to try and determine civil suits of great importance.

It is not known to the undersigned what this allegation is based upon. They have no recollection that such fact is in proof.

The second article presented by the majority of the committee is that Mr. Seward loaned on his own account $20,000 belonging to the Government, foreclosed in his own court certain mortgages of which he was the beneficiary, became the purchaser at the sale, and ratified the sale.

This charge, like the other, embraces several separate and distinct offenses, and is unaccompanied by any specifications.

In regard to that part of it which refers to the loaning of Government funds, it is unjustified and unsubstantiated by any evidence in the case. The proof apparently shows that Mr. Seward did, in the year 1865, loan money on mortgage, but there is no evidence whatever in the record anywhere showing that the money so loaned was the money of the Government. It was claimed by the counsel for the prosecution in argument before the committee that the money used belonged to the seamen's fund, but the only foundation for the claim was that at and about the time of the negotiations in 1865 a considerable amount of this fund had apparently accumulated in the hands of the consul-general; but there was no proof that the money loaned had been drawn from this fund. On the contrary, it was shown that the apparent balance was not the real balance, and that the fund had been greatly reduced by payments made from it for Government account, (as will appear, pages 763, 764, and 765 evidence, and the letter of Comptroller Taylor, page 764.)

It also appears from the evidence that a year or two after the date of the loans Mr. Seward requested the Department to receive from him the balance of the fund then in hand, and tendered the same; but the Comptroller of the Treasury and the authorities directed him to retain it and use it from time to time for the current expenses of his office, instead of subjecting the United States to the burden of the exchange on drafts drawn against the Government, (evidence of James A. Thompson, chief of the division of foreign intercourse in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, pp. 765, 766.)

It further appeared in evidence that at this time, when this account was adjusted as stated on the pages of the evidence above referred to, the loans alleged to have been made by Mr. Seward had not been refunded, but the parties had failed to meet their obligations, and the property mortgaged to secure those loans had passed into the possession of Mr. Seward.

It is, therefore, apparent that the evidence does not show that the money used in the loans referred to belonged to the Government, while there is proof that the money so used did not belong to the Government, but belonged to Mr. Seward himself.

The third article is to the effect that Mr. Seward promoted the construction of the Woosung Railroad.

The undersigned have been unable to discover anything in Mr. Seward's conduct in connection with this enterprise deserving censure or condemnation, and certainly nothing that could be construed into a malversation in office or justify a criminal prosecution.

His letter to Mr. Fish of May 3, 1876, furnishes, in our judgment, a just and correct view of his position and policy in regard to the railway in question. He says: "I have not altogether approved the course taken in starting this enterprise. It presents, nevertheless, so many elements of promise that I felt disposed to give it such support as I could without departing from sound principles. There are indications that the Chinese authorities are looking from behind the veil with interest for the result." (Page 369, cor.)

Mr. Seward appears to have spoken freely with a Tantai at Shanghai, the Viceroy of Tientsin, and the foreign office of the Chinese government, in regard to the railway. In this connection we refer to statement of Dr. Yates, (page 87, cor.) to Mr. Seward's dispatch May 2, 1876, (page 373, cor.) and that of October 16, 1877, (page 381, cor.)

The latter dispatch and its inclosure indicate that Mr. Seward spoke to the government with freedom upon this subject, and his words must commend themselves to all persons as temperate, discreet, and just.

The statement which appears in the evidence, and which does not purport to be founded upon knowledge, but merely upon rumor, that the railroad was disposed of at 100,000 taels above cost, is entirely refuted by the proof (pages 286, 377, evidence) that it passed to the Chinese at "cost less depreciation."

Article 7 is to the effect that Mr. Seward defrauded the Government by charging a premium on currency and Mexican dollars.

The evidence of Joseph A. Thompson, chief of the division of foreign intercourse in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, commencing on page 760 of the evidence, shows that Mr. Seward's accounts were regularly rendered according to the law and the regulations and finally closed by the accounting officers, and that in those accounts so rendered his transactions were fully submitted to the inspection of the Department. To impeach these accounts some satisfactory evidence of fraud or irregularity would be necessarily required. There is no such evidence in this record. It is in proof in the case, and the evidence is furnished by witnesses called for the prosecution, that the Mexican dollars, which constitute the main body of the currency at Shanghai, vary materially in their relative value to each other, and that when passing in any large amounts from hand to hand that value is accurately tested by certain persons known as schroffs and who made this their business. It also appears that what are known as clean Mexican dollars are valued at the mint at 5 per cent. over gold, while the evidence establishes that the Mexican dollars in circulation and passing from hand to hand are considerably depreciated.

Now, the evidence shows that whenever Mr. Seward drew drafts upon the Government and negotiated them in the market at Shanghai, receiving therefor clean

Mexican dollars, he invariably credited the Government and consequently charged himself with 5 per cent. premium. (Page 769, evidence.)

It is therefore apparent that Mr. Seward had no disposition to deal unfairly with the Government in these transactions, but openly charged himself with a premium which he could have concealed had he been so inclined.

It is further in evidence that upon large payments received from ships, the 5 per cent. was credited to the ships. (See Cowles' tables, page 733, evidence.)

It also appears that the 5 per cent. premium in disbursements was charged only on certain accounts when the amounts were considerable, and when, as a consequence, clean dollars would be demanded in payment, while in his general disbursements, such as to seamen, officers of the consulate, &c., no premium whatever was charged.

The character of the currency at Shanghai was perfectly well-known and recognized at the Department, and whenever Mr. Seward charged a premium on his disbursements such charge, in its character as a premium, appeared on the face of his accounts. Thus fully advised, the Department recognized the propriety of the charge and passed the account. In view of this circumstance, and of the evidence above referred to, the simple naked fact that a premium of 5 per cent. was charged in the exceptional cases indicated can neither sustain nor justify the presumption that Mr. Seward's accounts were either fraudulent or erroneous.

The eighth article is to the effect that Mr. Seward defrauded the Government by charging a premium on currency in his transactions with the Post-Office Department.

It appears from the evidence and the correspondence that Mr. Seward's post-office accounts were stated in currency. He charged himself with the face value of all stamps sold; and in crediting himself in disbursements, he added the premium between the local currency at Shanghai and American paper. On certain receipts (those for box-rents and closed mails) the premium was credited to the Government.

Mr. Seward's practice in this respect was fully explained to the Department in his letter, (printed on pages 406 and 407 of the book of correspondence,) which fully met the approval of the Department; and his accounts were settled on that basis, as is shown in the letter from the Department, on page 437.

In the correspondence referred to Mr. Seward stated to the Department that there was a gain to him; and said, as follows: "It would appear to me that as I receive no compensation in any other way for my oversight and responsibility, the Department may very well let the advantage rest with me." (Page 407.) The claim of Mr. Seward was founded upon section 4023 of the Revised Statutes, by which it was provided that the Postmaster-General might allow to the postal agent at Shanghai a "reasonable compensation for his services, in addition to the necessary expenses for rent, furniture, clerk hire, and incidental expenses."

The ninth article is that Mr. Seward received his salary as consul-general for the first quarter of 1876 while he was minister, and the tenth article is of kindred nature, charging that Mr. Seward received salary as consul-general while minister and did not render services as consul-general during the first quarter of 1876.

Mr. Seward, while consul-general at Shanghai in the month of December, 1875, received orders to take charge of the legation. On the 1st of January, 1876, he assumed duty as chargé d'affaires, and on the 12th, having received notice from the Department of his appointment as minister, he assumed duty as such. On the 10th of April he rendered an account for his services in his diplomatic capacity for the previous quarter and drew his drafts upon the Government for his pay, writing at the time to the Secretary of State giving him a full account of the situation, advising him that he had turned over the consulate-general to the vice-consul-general on the 1st of January and submitting all questions for the determination of the Department, (page 552, correspondence.)

Not knowing what view the Department would take of the questions submitted in his communication, it appears that Mr. Seward did not draw for his salary for the second quarter of 1876, that he never has drawn for that quarter, and has never been paid for that quarter. (555, correspondence.) This appears to have been in consequence of the fact that Mr. Fish disallowed his account for the first quarter of 1876 on the ground that he could not be paid as minister prior to his arrival at Peking, (555, correspondence,) and the amount of his drafts charged to him on the books of the Treasury balanced by the absence of any draft for the second quarter of the same year. A full résumé of this entire matter will be found in Mr. Seward's dispatch of January 25, 1878. (556, correspondence.)

The second article is, that Mr. Seward unlawfully suspended Mr. Myers as consul-general.

It appears that Mr. Seward immediately upon suspending Mr. Myers telegraphed the Government to that effect, and the next steamer from Shanghai sent forward a dispatch giving a full account of his action in the premises. He received a reply from the Secretary of State to his telegram that the Department would await the receipt of the detailed statement promised by mail before deciding definitely in regard to further action in the matter. (Page 21, correspondence.) Subsequently Mr. Seward received a communication from the Department of State, informing him that the removal of Mr. Myers met with the approval of the Department, and ratifying his suspension of that officer. (Page 53, correspondence.) At the same time a formal order was sent forward that the President, in accordance with the requirements of title 19 of the Revised Statutes, had, upon consideration of the facts laid before the Department by Mr. Seward, suspended Mr. Myers from office.

The undersigned are of the opinion that this action of the President in the premises had relation back to the time when Mr. Seward, as minister, issued the original order for Mr. Myers's suspension, and that the President thereby assumed the responsibility of Mr. Seward's act.

The thirteenth article charged that Mr. Seward neglected to render true quarterly accounts and pay over balances at the end of each quarter.

The fourteenth article charges Mr. Seward with neglect to account to the Secretary of the Treasury and to hold subject to draft.

The undersigned are unable to discover in the records any evidence upon which either of these charges can possibly be founded. On the contrary the evidence of the accounting officers of the Government is to the effect that Mr. Seward's accounts were rendered with regularity and the funds in his hands held and disposed of according to law and under the instructions of the Department, and there is no testimony surcharging and falsifying the accounts presented by him.

Articles 15 and 16 are of kindred nature, and charge that Mr. Seward released Mr. Bradford from judicial proceedings knowing him to be guilty of embezzlement.

It appears from the communications from Mr. Evarts (page 244, cor.) that Mr. Bradford was released by order of the Secretary of State.

Article 17 charges Mr. Seward with having taken certain books from the archives of the consulate at Peking.

The subject of this article has been fully considered in the report heretofore made by the undersigned in the matter of the alleged contumacy of Mr. Seward as a witness before the committee.

The investigation in this case has occupied the committee through nearly a hundred and twenty sessions during the last thirteen months. It has taken a broad range and extended over the entire official life of Mr. Seward, from 1862, when he had just attained his majority and assumed the important office of consul-general at Shanghai, to the present time. Diligent and searching inquiry has been made into all of his transactions as consul-general and minister, and the committee have had before it as witnesses two of his successors in office, namely Mr. Myers and Mr. Wells, and two of the clerks in the employ of the consulate during the period of Mr. Seward's administration, and who are still in office under the present consul-general, and who are brought here at great expense to the Government.

They have also had before them Mr. Phoenix, who was marshal under Mr. Seward. The prosecuting witness has been represented before the committee by able and diligent counsel, and we are impressed with the belief that nothing that could be brought forward of whatever he may have done during his long official career calculated to inculpate Mr. Seward has been omitted. The trial has been searching and the ordeal has been severe. It has developed defects in the law, vagueness and uncertainties in the consular regulations, and a certain necessity for their revision. But we have failed to find after all this labor and all the mass of testimony laid before us any sufficient ground to justify the views expressed in the report of the majority.

It is proper that we should add, in view of that principle of law which declares that good character is a bulwark of defense to the accused, that gentlemen of acknowledged distinction in their respective departments of life, familiar with affairs at Shanghai under the administration of Mr. Seward, have testified that his reputation as a man of honor and integrity was of the very highest order, and that his services as consul-general at Shanghai were in the most marked degree useful to his countrymen and creditable to his country. Dr. J. P. Newman, special agent of the Government to examine consular matters, in a communication to Mr. Fish, under date of December 19, 1873, (page 225, correspondence,) says of Mr. Seward as follows:

"As an educated gentleman and as a competent and judicious officer, Mr. George F. Seward, consul-general at Shanghai, is deservedly popular with the foreigners and the Chinese officials of that important commercial city, and is an honor to the nation he represents."

Similar high commendation will be found in letters addressed to him by the leading men at Shanghai, accompanying testimonials of their regard, and which letters were laid before the committee, and are printed in the correspondence submitted to the House. Such uniform and unvarying testimony is entitled to serious consideration in an investigation like that the committee has been conducting and in an inquiry such as we are now making.

SOLOMON BUNDY.
THOS. M. BAYNE.
MARK H. DUNNELL.

In view of the great importance of the subject and matters embraced in the report of the majority of the committee in the matter of the proposed impeachment of George F. Seward, for alleged high crimes and misdemeanors, and the complicated questions of law involved therein.

Resolved, That the matters embraced in such report, together with the evidence in the case, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to report at any time and at the earliest practicable hour, with their recommendation as to what action should be taken in the premises.

SOLOMON BUNDY.
THOS. M. BAYNE.
MARK H. DUNNELL.

Mr. BUNDY. I interrupt the reading of the views of the minority, Mr. Speaker, to make a suggestion. In view of the importance of time I ask the Clerk to omit reading the bill further than he has already done and to read the resolution agreed upon by the minority of the committee, waiving the reading of the conclusion of the minority report with the understanding that the same shall be printed in the same manner as the majority report.

Mr. SPRINGER. In record and document form.

Mr. BUNDY. Yes, sir. I do this after consultation with the chairman of the committee, with the understanding that we are to have reasonable time, such time as the House by its indulgence is willing to accord to us, to discuss the two resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution of the minority. The Clerk read as follows:

In view of the great importance of the subject and matters embraced in the report of the majority of the committee in the matter of the proposed impeachment of George F. Seward for alleged high crimes and misdemeanors and the complicated questions of law involved therein.

Resolved, That the matters embraced in such report, together with the evidence in the case, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to report at any time and at the earliest practicable hour, with their recommendation as to what action should be taken in the premises.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the previous question on the original resolution and the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. After the main question has been ordered, I will agree to divide with the other side the hour to which I am entitled under the rules to close the debate.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield now half of the hour to the gentleman from New York. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] I do not desire time myself, but will immediately ask for a vote. No time is lost, for it is only proposed to take up in debate on the resolutions the time which otherwise would have been occupied in reading the report.

Mr. BUNDY. Mr. Speaker, I certainly have renewed occasion to acknowledge kindness and courtesy on the part of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] the chairman of this committee which has had in charge during the last year and a quarter this question, important not only to this House, but to the people of the country, and still more important to the individual charged gravely in seventeen specific articles incorporated in the report of the majority of this committee. I am not unaware of the value of time at this hour when we are about to close the labors of an eventful session. But my proposition to waive the further reading of the report of the minority of the committee which has been prepared thoughtfully, carefully, and, as I believe, conscientiously, enables me to express to the House the convictions of the minority upon the question now pending.

The House will discover, Mr. Speaker, in voting on this question, we must decide upon what is reflected by these reports concerning the evidence before that committee. But while I have not time, should I take the entire half hour allotted to the minority, to go over and discuss the evidence produced by the witnesses I can only take it upon me to say that the proposed articles of impeachment are based upon the evidence of witnesses that appeared before that committee as they cannot appear before this House, and I trust I shall make no remark, no assertion, that gentlemen on the part of the majority will contradict or take issue with, when I say in many cases, if not in a majority of instances, they were witnesses, at the head of which was John C. Myers, who came back to this country smarting under removal instigated by the party charged here and now.

I remember, sir, at the instance and request of my distinguished friend from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] the equally distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] was summoned as a witness to speak well of the character of the witness John C. Myers, and he spoke eloquently of his character and reputation when a young man of the Keystone State, but had my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania been privileged to listen to the evidence of witnesses equally touching the character and reputation of Mr. Myers when in China he would agree with me in charity he would draw the veil over the character and reputation of Myers in China.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me to make a report from a conference committee?

Mr. BUNDY. I yield for that purpose.

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. WINDOM,
S. W. DORSEY,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. D. C. ATKINS,
ABRAM S. HEWITT,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. I shall not detain the House, Mr. Speaker, but a moment in explanation of this report. I am glad to announce to the House that this is the smallest sundry civil bill passed for several years. The estimates as presented in the Book of Estimates were $24,808,478. The manuscript estimates which have come in since the Book of Estimates was sent to us were $7,750,000, making the total estimates $32,558,478.

The bill as it passed the House amounted to $16,909,349.49. The Senate has added $1,565,281, making the grand total $18,469,630.49. The bill of last year amounted, I believe, to about $26,000,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. That included the fishery award.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; that included $5,500,000, being the amount of the fishery award.

Mr. GARFIELD. Leaving that off would show the exact relation of the two.

Mr. ATKINS. Leaving that off, this is the best bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is still less.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes; by several millions of dollars.

Mr. EDEN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to suggest that some two or three million dollars usually provided for in this bill have been transferred to the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. ATKINS. That is true.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. This bill passed the House under a suspension of the rules. The action of the committee of conference on the numerous amendments made by the Senate is indicated by numbers, which do not show what the character of the amendments is. I desire to know whether there is any appropriation in this bill which allows to the Department of Justice any amount of money for the purpose of paying fees of marshals or deputy marshals?

Mr. ATKINS. There is not. So far as I am concerned, I do not know that it is necessary to give any further explanation. I demand the previous question, and after that is seconded I will be ready to answer any questions which gentlemen may desire to put to me.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he agreed to this report?

Mr. REAGAN. I wish the gentleman to state whether this bill as it comes from the conference committee contains the provision that required the Federal Government to pay one-half of the bonded debt of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ATKINS. It does not.

Mr. HOOKER. What does it do in that particular?

Mr. REAGAN. I would like the gentleman from Tennessee to state what provision is made by the bill on that subject?

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. ATKINS. I can answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANKLIN] and the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] at the same time. The gentleman from Texas asks me to state what the bill provides in regard to the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District. This provision is made:

For the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt $1,153,583.55.

About $120,000 of that amount is designed to be a sinking fund, one-half of which is paid by the District of Columbia and the other half by the United States Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I state with perfect frankness to the House that I did not in the conference committee favor that proposition. I would have preferred that that feature had not been put into this bill. But, sir, I was overruled by a majority of the House conferees, and overruled, of course, by a majority of the Senate conferees; and I am not willing, it is equally frank for me to say, to defeat this bill simply because that feature is in the bill, although I was not in favor of it. I have nothing further to say upon that point. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] As the House does not desire that I should go into anything like details, I shall not do so. I am prepared, however, to do so if the House desires it.

Mr. MILLS. The House does desire it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. We want to know the grounds of your objection.

Mr. ATKINS. The ground of my objection was simply that I did not believe it was the duty of the United States Government to assume any portion of that debt. That is the simple reason, very plainly and shortly spoken.

As regards the details that may be in the bill I will state this: the Senate added $175,000 for the purpose of completing the custom-house and post-office at Chicago. And, Mr. Speaker, I really must say that if that had not been accepted we might have had another funeral.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not I who would have been buried. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATKINS. Then $15,000 were added in the Senate for the purpose of giving an iron roof to the custom-house at Nashville. I will say frankly, I did not vote for that, but I was overruled by the committee. We added $75,000 to the bill for new light-houses; $40,000 of which I believe was put into one light-house on the coast of Louisiana; $42,000 were added to the bill in the Senate for the purpose of repairing the post-office in the city of New York, which is very essential, as the papers show; $96,000 were paid for a claim that Baltimore had against the Government of the United States for moneys furnished General Schenck during the war.

Mr. EDEN. That was a war claim?

A MEMBER. Not a poker claim? [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. A loyal claim?

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly. We added $40,000 for new telegraphic lines, most of which were in Texas, Montana, and Dakota. Thirty thousand dollars were added for arsenals, simply repairs.

The largest item in the bill in the way of amendments by the Senate was $300,000 for arrears to land-grant railroads, under a decision of the Supreme Court; and I will state to the House that Attorney-General Devens was before us this morning and said that it was proper and right; that we owed the money, and that it ought to be paid.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. And we put limitations on it in accordance with his suggestion.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, as the gentleman states, we put limitations on it in accordance with the suggestions of the Attorney-General. I suppose there will be no objection to it whatever. There are also added $32,500 for the benefit of the public surveys, which will gratify my friend whom I see standing before me, [Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado.] We give $20,000 each to the different surveys—the Hayden, Powell, and Wheeler geological and geographical surveys—for the purpose of closing up that business. We also give $250,000 for the purpose of building a museum to take care of the property that was given to the Government of the United States by various nations of the earth in 1876, at the close of the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is in the bill as it comes from the conference committee?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am very glad of that.

Mr. ATKINS. Now with regard to the surveys, we have left the sections in the bill relating to surveys precisely as the House sent them to the Senate, with the exception that we have stricken out that part which relates to the publication, which is a very immaterial matter. The Senate conferees felt that at this late hour of the session the senatorial mind could not take in that subject, and consequently they thought they had better leave it out. It involves no money of any consequence, but then it covers half a page of manuscript, and they did not think that the senatorial mind could study its diction at this late stage of the session. With these explanations of the report of the committee I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and agreed to the conference asked by the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPENCER, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. RANSOM conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have seen too much of hasty legislation in the closing hours of the session and of the House agreeing to conference reports to hope for a moment that I shall be able to defeat the feature of the bill upon which I am about to speak, but I desire that the House shall know before it agrees to this conference report precisely what will be devolved upon the Government and the District of Columbia by accepting the conclusion of the committee of conference. The section of the bill in relation to the District of Columbia as sent to us by the Senate had been pressed upon the Committee for the District of Columbia of the House and there defeated.

It provides for a sinking fund of $1,555,583.65. I want to say to the House that this embraces the whole funded debt of the District of Columbia, which amounts to about $22,000,000, out of which is to be taken the $13,000,000 of 3.65 bonded debt. Of that amount, sir, it is claimed that $8,000,000 were issued not only without authority of law but in utter defiance of law. There was a provision of law which declared that the aggregate debt of the District of Columbia should never exceed $10,000,000. The debt of the District of Columbia was then $8,000,000, and $13,000,000 additional was added; a lawless increase of $11,000,000. It is held by many good lawyers, and that opinion is concurred in by many of us who are not good lawyers, that the holders of those $8,000,000 of bonds were purchasers with notice by the serial numbers of the bonds that they were not valid in law, and that a very large proportion of that sum was issued in utter and absolute fraud.

This proposition of this section of the bill is to fasten upon the Government of the United States, for the first time, an obligation to pay half of all this funded debt and leave the people of the District of Columbia, already ground into the earth by taxation, to pay the other half of this debt. The law to-day does not require the Government to pay a dollar. The law requires the United States Government to see that the interest is paid, and that a sinking fund is provided for, and that there shall be taxes levied on the property of the District sufficient to do it.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the Government of the United States is called on to pay this debt?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer that this provision of the report of the committee of conference binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of half the debt.

Mr. MILLS. How much is that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think about $22,000,000 in round numbers. I answer further that, in my judgment, for the payment of $8,000,000 of that sum, neither the Government of the United States nor the District of Columbia nor anybody else is responsible.

Mr. ATKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman that the next Congress can repeal this provision.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is a permanent provision for the payment of a permanent debt.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask if that cannot be repealed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not care to go into a discussion of the constitutional question whether one Congress can repeal the acts of another. I answer the gentleman in this wise: it is a poor defense of a bad bill to say that the next Congress may repeal it. I appreciate the manly opposition offered to this scheme by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I make no charge upon any member of that conference committee, but, on the contrary, I have the most implicit confidence in the honesty of each of them, but I do say that the First National Bank of New York is the holder of five millions of these questionable 3.65 bonds, which it is claimed by myself and others were issued in fraud in the absence of law and in defiance of law, and that this bank and other persons in like interest demanded the incorporation of that provision in the bill.

I will not seek to invade the precincts of the conference committee, but I challenge members to say that there was nothing which occurred there that raised in their minds a doubt as to whether there were not personal interests to subserve.

Mr. HALE. What was the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I challenge the members of this House who are on that conference committee to say whether there was not that manifested which raised a doubt in their minds as to whether or not there were personal interests to be subserved in this matter.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman allow me to answer for myself?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to hear the gentleman, and I also want to hear my friends on my left, [Mr. ATKINS, and Mr. HEWITT of New York,] and the time they occupy I hope will not be taken out of mine.

Mr. HALE. I will say that so far as any anxiety was manifested by parties outside, or so far as any importunities came to my knowledge, they were in the direction of preventing this provision from being retained in the bill. There may have been that anxiety to which the gentleman refers, but I saw none of it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My experience is very different.

Mr. ATKINS. In answer to the gentleman I want to state that no gentleman has mentioned this matter to me within a week. I do not know but one man who has ever mentioned it to me and he is a member of this House.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is mistaken about the solicitude that was shown to us.

Mr. ATKINS. I want to add further that I saw nothing improper in the committee-room. There was not a single man in that committee-room who opened his mouth upon this question, nor was the subject ever mooted at all until it was reached regularly in the bill. That it had warm friends in the committee of conference as a matter of course is true, or it would not now be in the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has not answered. I simply desire to add that the proposition made by this section of the bill is to bind this Government, not as it is by law now bound, and I state this advisedly, simply to see that a sinking fund is provided by the imposition of a tax on the property of this District—

Mr. ATKINS. For its proportion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no proportion about it. These bonds are to run forty-two years yet. Why, then, this haste and hurry? Not more than twelve months ago Congress passed a bill in which it declared that the United States would pay 50 per cent. of the current expenses of this District; nothing more; not that it would pay any of this funded debt. Now at the end of twelve months, or less than twelve months, from the time that law was passed comes in this proposition to bind the Government to pay absolutely one-half of a funded debt of $22,000,000, when we warned you here on this floor that $8,000,000 of that debt was issued not only without authority of law, but in utter defiance of law, and without any consideration to support it either in conscience, in law, or in morals.

Let me go one step further. The estimates submitted to this Congress by the commissioners of the District of Columbia show conclusively that in its present impoverished condition, brought about by maladministration, it is not proper or justifiable for you to fasten upon them this heavy additional burden.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. A question.

Mr. HOOKER. If this law now passes, will not these bonds be given a value; and if they pass into the possession of other holders, can you then repeal the law?

Mr. BUCKNER. I will ask the gentleman, as a lawyer, whether he would say that none of the $13,000,000 of 3.65 bonds was valid as against the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the gentleman, and I thank him for asking me the question. I say that every dollar of that $13,000,000 of 3.65 bonds that was issued, either without authority of law or in defiance of law, and which has passed into the hands of purchasers with notice, is not voidable but is void, and is not an obligation or a debt against this Government or the District of Columbia.

Now, when you agree to this conference report you agree simply to fasten upon the overtaxed, overburdened, and well-nigh bankrupt people of the District of Columbia a debt to run forty-two years that they cannot meet; also to fasten upon the Government of the United States one-half of an obligation of $22,000,000, not one cent of which the Government ever owed or is obligated by law to pay, and $8,000,000 of which I deny that anybody owes. I also assert that a great portion of that which has been issued was issued without any consideration.

Now, here are the facts, and the House can pass upon them. As chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia I feel that I have done my duty. We killed this very proposition when we were called upon by the Committee on Appropriations to make recommendations for the expenditures of this District. This sundry civil appropriation bill passed the House under a suspension of the rules without one solitary provision on this subject. It went to the Senate Chamber and there the provision was inserted, and it now comes back here in the conference committee report with the protest against it of the chairman of the committee himself.

I feel that I have said all that it is incumbent upon me to say. I do insist that this House has the right to know exactly what are the facts before it undertakes to fasten this burden upon the Government and upon the District.

Mr. HENDEE. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] was allowed five minutes, and he has used fifteen. I hope the same courtesy will be extended to me in reply, after the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has had his say.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the extra ten minutes occupied by the gentleman from Kentucky will not be taken out of the hour. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Committee for the District of Columbia asked the Committee on Appropriations to provide for the payment of $1,016,000 toward the annual interest on the bonds of the District of Columbia. The obligation to provide for the payment of this interest is contained in the law under which the 3.65 bonds were issued. The faith of the United States was pledged to provide for that interest, and in the same sentence to provide a sinking fund. These two obligations are not contained in a different provision, but are both incorporated in the same provision of the act.

Now, I am at a loss to comprehend how my able and eloquent friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] can come here and ask us to pay $1,016,000 interest on bonds alleged to be fraudulent, while at the same time he protests against providing the insignificant sum of $138,000 for the sinking fund. If it is wrong to pay money into the sinking fund, then it is wrong to pay the interest.

There is in the legislation now proposed no assumption of the debt; but there is an obligation resting upon the United States under the law to pay one-half of the money necessary to discharge the expenses of this District, and in those expenses are included the interest of this debt and the amount required for the sinking fund.

This matter will be made perfectly plain by reading the provision of the statute. I am sorry to do it, but I am going to make an answer to my eloquent friend from Kentucky, in the language of Mr. BLACKBURN, who addressed this House on the 6th of May, 1878, when my colleague [Mr. COX, of New York] protested that it was wrong even to provide for the interest of these bonds. I send to the Clerk's desk Mr. BLACKBURN'S reply to Mr. COX, and ask that it be read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. While the book is being taken to the Clerk I will ask the gentleman one question, and I am sure his courtesy will not refuse an answer. Did not the law at that time require this Government to guarantee the interest on these bonds?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Let the Clerk read what I have sent up, and I ask the House to listen carefully.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to read a single sentence in an act approved June 20, 1874, in order to let the House see whether he and the gentleman from Ohio are right when they say that the Government is under no obligation whatever in this regard? I read from page 120 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 18:

"And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity."

Mr. COX, of New York. That does not bear out the gentleman's position.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to ask in the face of that provision whether there was to be no proportionate assessment of expenses between the Government and the District.

Mr. COX, of New York. If that were so understood, I would vote to repeal the statute. I do not believe such was the intention when it was passed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the gentleman introduce his bill to that effect; but he should not deny the responsibility of the Government while the statute stands unrepealed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now will the gentleman answer me only this question: Is that not precisely what I have said to the House to-day? I ask the gentleman from New York to reply.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will let the House judge what the gentleman has said. The House has heard it as well as I.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What I have said is that we are bound for the interest, and not for one dollar of the principal.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman from Kentucky in the debate of May 6, 1878, caused to be read at the Clerk's desk an extract from the statutes in which the interest and the sinking fund were provided for in the same passage; and then, on the interrogation of my colleague, who said he did not think the law required the Government to pay the interest, the gentleman from Kentucky said, "will the gentleman pretend that so long as this provision is on the statute-book the Government is not bound to make provision"—for what? For what is provided for in the statute—the interest and the sinking fund.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I never used the words "sinking fund," and the gentleman must not misquote me.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No, I will not misquote the gentleman. He caused to be read the statute containing the words "sinking fund;" and when my colleague put the question whether that bound the Government, the gentleman replied that as long as it was upon the statute-book it did bind the Government.

Mr. BLACKBURN. For the interest and nothing else.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon; not a word was said about interest.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman to be candid.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will be candid.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Was there any question except the question of interest then pending, and does not that statute merely require this Government to have taxation imposed upon the property within the District of Columbia to provide a sinking fund for the payment of that principal? I reiterate every word that I have said.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, the record speaks for itself. I resisted this provision in the sundry civil bill, not because it was wrong, but because it was objected to by my friend from Kentucky; but in the course of the examination I was driven to the conclusion that the faith of the United States was pledged for the establishment of this sinking fund; and for one I will never give a vote or say a word by which the plighted faith of the United States shall ever be called in question.

Mr. ATKINS. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] for ten minutes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I never knew from my personal knowledge any of the circumstances affecting this debt of the District of Columbia, neither do I know where a dollar of it is held to-day; neither have I ever heard until to-day that the First National Bank of New York or any other bank holds a dollar of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia. I know nothing of these matters; and in the investigation of this subject by the Committee on Appropriations and the conference committee there has been no solicitation at the door of that committee on the part of any person evidently having any interest in these bonds. I do know that by the act which has been cited and read the Government is committed to the payment of the interest upon these bonds and to the provision of a sinking fund. I know in addition to that, year by year Congress has been making appropriation with little or no objection for the payment of interest.

I know further, Mr. Speaker, that as years run by when this debt matures there will be more and more pressure upon the Government if this measure does not pass here and now to pay the whole of this debt; and if we do not now provide a sinking fund, the Government appropriating for 50 per cent. of it, but leave it to the termination of the bonds, the Government will in the end pay the whole of it. So as a matter of economy and of good husbandry this is in the interest of the Government and of protecting it. Any man who lives to see these bonds mature at the termination of the time fixed by them, unless we establish this sinking fund, will see such a raid on the Government and Treasury that we will have to pay the whole of it. That is one of the reasons why I sustained with the gentleman from New York the proposition of the Senate. It was to save us in the end. Now, if I have any time left I will yield it to my friend from Vermont.

Mr. HENDEE. Mr. Speaker, I was a little surprised at one feature of the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] and that was this: that these bonds were issued, at least $8,000,000 of them I think he said, without authority of law. I wish to satisfy this House in just one minute of the incorrectness of that statement. There was a law passed in 1872 which said that the debt of this District should not exceed $10,000,000. Remember that was in 1872. In 1874 Congress passed an act, which I have here, approved June 20, which provides that the First and Second Comptrollers of the United States Treasury should examine all claims against the District of Columbia under six heads, and whatever amount they found to be due, the commissioners of the sinking fund should issue 3.65 bonds in payment therefor. Now, although there was the law which said the District should not run into debt beyond $10,000,000, yet Congress two years later passed a law by which it said the debt should be paid in three-sixties, and authorized a way in which to determine the amount and provided no limit whatever as to amount. By this action of Congress the law that required $10,000,000 should be the limit of the debt was repealed. This, I trust, is a sufficient answer and will satisfy the House of the incorrectness of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman state whether it was repealed in terms or by implication?

Mr. HENDEE. It was not repealed in terms, nevertheless the repeal was complete. The indebtedness was for work, sewer certificates, amounts due on contracts of all kinds, for improvements and for damages to property and for property taken. And for the purpose of finding out whether there was fraud, as the gentleman has said, in those contracts and the doings of the board of public works, Congress in 1874 created a special committee, and upon it as chairman in this House was Mr. Wilson, of Indiana, and in the Senate Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa. On that committee was Senator THURMAN, who gave his strict personal attention for ninety-odd days to ascertain whether there was fraud in those contracts. In 1876 we went through similar proceedings for the purpose of finding out whether there was fraud in those contracts. After the first examination had been made the special committee of this House and Senate, before spoken of, jointly recommended the law of June 20, 1874, which said that all the debts of the District of Columbia should be ascertained by the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury and that payment should be made in these bonds. With such a law I want to know how you can consistently say there can be any of these bonds outstanding that the Government can get rid of paying? It is impossible.

Mr. TUCKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENDEE. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. You say Congress authorized the issue of these bonds—do you mean three-sixty-fives?

Mr. HENDEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. And that the credit of the Government was pledged?

Mr. HENDEE. Precisely. I will read what that act contains upon that point. It contains these words. After going on to say the debt shall be ascertained in a certain way and that it shall be paid in 3.65 bonds, then follow these words:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such tax as would do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

There can be no language plainer than that. The United States are not only bound under that law to take care of the interest or see that it is paid, but we are also bound to take care that the principal is paid or provide a sinking fund for that purpose.

Mr. TUCKER. Let me ask another question.

Mr. HENDEE. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. Something is said about a proportional appropriation—what was that? Had that been fixed by any previous law?

Mr. HENDEE. It had not. By the organic act which governs this District to-day, passed last year, we provided that the proportional part of the United States should be 50 per cent., and that the District people should pay 50 per cent. That has been established by law, and my friend from Kentucky supported a proposition last year which provided for the payment of the interest on these fraudulent bonds, as he denominates them, and now opposes a sinking fund because, as he says, they are fraudulent. This is hardly consistent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENDEE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman has just admitted that the act of 1872 did limit the aggregate debt of the District of Columbia to $10,000,000, and that the act of 1874, under which these claims were audited and adjusted, did by inference at least repeal the act of 1872. Will the gentleman be kind enough to take that act which he has lying upon his table and read the tenth section, which is only five lines long?

Mr. HENDEE. Do not be in a hurry about that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman answer me? The very act in his hand supplies the proof.

Mr. HENDEE. It does not. I believe I have the floor, and I shall hold it if in my power to do so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor.

Mr. HENDEE. Only for a question; not for an argument. I said the gentleman proposed last year to pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds which he now says are fraudulent. The interest alone, which he said should be paid on these bonds, is over half a million annually, and this, the sinking fund for the same, is not $100,000 a year. It amounts to about $91,000. That is the amount of the sinking fund which he makes his point against, while he agrees the interest shall be paid, amounting to half a million dollars. The interest on the entire District debt is over a million dollars.

Now, why do we want a sinking fund? Simply because Congress has agreed to create one; and in the second place, because by legislation last year we agreed to assume one-half of the burdens of this District. Now, this is a fair contract. Let us live up to it. We have let four years pass without creating any sinking fund, and it is time it should be done. And why? The longer we delay the greater will that sinking fund have to be. If you make a sinking fund to-day under this act, a dollar put at interest as provided in the act will when the bonds mature be worth $6. If you wait ten years it will be less, and in proportion as the time is shortened. As a matter of course, if you do not make your sinking fund to-day, when it will be a little over $90,000, next year it will be $100,000, the following year $110,000, and so on. I mean in that proportion; I do not pretend to give the figures exactly. Therefore, it is in the interest of the people of this District, as well as in the interest of the United States, to make this sinking fund at once. I believe no bond should ever be put upon the country without an adequate corresponding sinking fund to take care of it. For these reasons I am in favor of this provision. Another reason: by a sinking fund we reduce the interest annually, as a matter of course, for the principal is reduced annually by the amount of the sinking fund.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this fund is recommended in plain and certain language by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the commissioner of the sinking fund, who is the Treasurer of the United States, and by the commissioners of the District.

For the reasons I have given, I hope the House will agree to the conference report.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCKNER. Last year, when the bill providing a permanent form of government for the District was before the House, I moved an amendment to accomplish the object which this clause of the bill now reported by the committee of conference is intended to carry out. That is, that of an appropriation for one-half of the expenses, which the Government of the United States has agreed to pay, a sufficient sum should be set apart to pay this sinking fund. Why should this be done? Simply because it is necessary to carry out a law passed in 1874, under which the Government of the United States agreed to do this.

I understand the Government of the United States is just as much bound by proportional appropriations and by the taxation of this District to take care of the sinking fund as it is to provide for the ultimate payment of this debt when it is due and as it is to provide for the interest. We have time and again, year after year, appropriated money from the Treasury of the United States to pay the interest on the three-sixty-five debt. We did so upon the ground that it was due as the plighted faith of this Government that this interest should be paid. Shall we go on and make no provision for the ultimate payment of the debt by a sinking fund or otherwise by means of taxation or appropriation until fifty years shall have elapsed, and let the whole burden then come at once on the Government? Is that the proposition?

I say that would be not only bad faith but bad policy. I say the Government is bound to take charge of and pay a share of this sinking fund in order to pay off this debt of $13,000,000.

My friend from Kentucky says that the bond is void. I deny the proposition as a legal proposition, and I think I know something about it. I believe the board of audit transgressed its power. They violated, in my judgment, the law under which they acted. The commissioners of the District did the same thing. But the bonds were issued by another set of men, many of them upon certificates; and, in my judgment, when the bonds were issued there is no pretense for saying they are void in the hands of anybody that holds them.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not know that I have any time to yield. As I have said, I moved this proposition as an amendment to the bill last year. My friend from Kentucky will recollect that he asked me not to insist upon it, and I did not, because I believed it might imperil and jeopardize the success of the bill that passed providing for a permanent form of government for the District.

The Government of the United States, whether right or wrong, having pledged its faith in the first instance to the payment of this interest, and the proportion of the expenses of the District to be borne by the Government of the United States having been fixed at one-half, I say it is right, and it does not matter who is benefited or who is injured by it, that the Government should comply with its contract made by the law of 1874. I have understood there was no limitation as to the amount. It was supposed that ten millions would cover the entire debt, but in consequence of an improper construction of the law by the commissioners and the board of audit it ran up beyond that. But whether that be right or wrong, or whether the commissioners or the board of audit performed their duty or not, is not the question, because the bonds were issued by another authority and they had nothing to do but to give the bonds in the place of certificates. In the hands of third parties the bonds are good, and the District government, in my judgment, can never go back upon them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 2518) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the schooner Don Pedro;

A bill (H. R. No. 6242) for the relief of soldiers and sailors becoming totally blind in the service of the country; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6270) for the relief of Joseph B. Collins.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. ROLLINS, and Mr. MERRIMON the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 1655) to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 5231) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and the amount thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MAYHAM.]

Mr. MAYHAM. Mr. Speaker, I cannot enter into a discussion of the question whether these bonds are valid or not in five minutes. It seems to be enough for the purpose of a discussion upon this question to look at the statutes under which they were issued, and from that determine whether bona fide holders of these bonds are entitled to payment of them from the Treasury of the United States.

I call attention to the provisions of an act approved February 20, 1875:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia, makes any question as to the Federal Government being liable to make provision for the interest on the bonds, and under the plain language of the statute there can be no distinction made between providing for the payment of the interest and the bonds at maturity by the creation of a sinking fund. If the one is binding and obligatory on the Government, the other is equally so.

The same paragraph provides that the Government shall by proper appropriations provide for the interest and provide for a sinking fund sufficient to meet the principal of the bonds at maturity.

Now, if that is so, and if the bonds have been issued and that provision of the statute has been carried out by the officers of the Government, and on the faith of that provision of law these bonds have been issued and gone into circulation, by what principle of justice and good faith can it be said that the Government has to-day been relieved from the obligation of the statute?

I yield the remainder of my time to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ATKINS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

Mr. MILLS. I was a member of the Forty-third Congress, when this act was passed, and my recollection is that it was reported by Mr. Wilson, of Indiana. If the gentlemen will take the trouble to turn to the RECORD and read the debate when that measure was before the House they will find that there was a disclaimer made at that time that there would be any obligation resting on the Government to pay any part of the principal of the bonds, but that it should provide for the payment of the interest. That disclaimer has been repeated every time this question has come up in the House until to-day. To-day, for the first time in my recollection, it has been asserted on the floor that the Government of the United States is responsible for the sinking fund, or any part of the principal of the bonds.

Mr. MAYHAM. Does it not provide that the Government shall itself pay the bonds?

Mr. MILLS. No, it does not, and it never has been so understood heretofore.

Mr. ATKINS. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Give me five. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] took occasion to make a broad issue as to the legality or illegality of these bonds. He held in his hand what he represented to be the act of 1874. He admitted that the act of 1872 declared that the aggregate debt of this District should not exceed $10,000,000. He will not deny that the aggregate debt of this District at that time was, in round numbers, $8,000,000. Therefore this board of audit, consisting of the First and Second Comptrollers, were authorized, under the act of 1874, to issue bonds only to the extent of $2,000,000 unless the act of 1872 was repealed by the act of 1874.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] says that that act was repealed by the act of 1874, not in terms, but necessarily. Now the tenth section of the act of 1874, which act he held in his hands, and which he says repealed the act of 1872, provides:

That the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia entitled "An act to fund unsettled liabilities of the city of Washington, and providing for the issuing of the bonds, and levying and collecting taxes to pay the same," approved June 20, 1872, is hereby—

What? Repealed? No, sir—is hereby ratified and approved.

Mr. HENDEE. What was that act?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the gentleman answer in his own time. He would not give me any.

Mr. HENDEE. I supposed that you knew.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I propose to say further that the Congress of the United States showed that it understood that these bonds were issued in defiance of law.

Mr. HENDEE. The Attorney-General said—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not propose to yield to the gentleman now. I will not answer myself nor let him answer. I say that the Congress of the United States showed that it understood that the bonds were issued in defiance of law. If not, then why did both Houses of Congress pass a joint resolution stopping the First and Second Comptrollers from issuing these very bonds after they had issued $13,000,000 and left $2,250,000 yet unprovided for?

Now as to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.] I do not think it was the deliberately formed purpose of that gentleman to be ungenerous or unfair. But when he undertook to put in my mouth a declaration in a session of a former Congress of my conviction that the Government of the United States was bound for the principal of this debt or for one dollar of it, the gentleman in order to sustain his well-earned reputation for fairness must plead ignorance of the record from which he was quoting excerpts. His fairness can only be established at the expense of his information.

That record shows conclusively that I did not utter one word then that I did not utter here this afternoon when I first addressed the House. I said then that the Government of the United States was fairly bound to see that the interest of this debt was paid and that a tax was levied on the property of this District to pay the principal of that debt. But is there no difference between my being bound to impose a tax on your property to pay a certain debt and my being bound to assume that debt myself? That is the issue, and you cannot make anything more out of it. When the original act was passed, upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] rely, Mr. Wilson, who reported the bill from the Committee for the District of Columbia, in answer to the following question, said:

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is there anything in the bill which commits Congress to the indorsement or the payment of the District debt?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. No, sir. I will call attention to that in a few moments. I think I can show that the committee has been careful about that.

Further on—

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. * * * The pledge given is simply this: that the Government of the United States having ascertained through an act of Congress hereafter to be passed what will be the proper proportion, then the Congress of the United States pledges itself to pay that proportion, whatever it may be, and by causing taxes to be levied on the property of the District will provide the necessary means to pay the interest and principal at maturity.

It is now simply a question for this House to determine whether, in the face of the estimates of the commissioners for this District, which show conclusively that you will throw this people into bankruptcy if you put this additional burden of taxation on them, and after you have done that to pile upon the Government itself one-half of the $22,000,000 of bonds, $11,000,000, which I assert here were issued outside of the statute and in defiance of the law, and a further issue only stopped by a joint resolution of both Houses of Congress declaring that such pilfering should no longer be tolerated—I say the question is, whether you will impose this additional burden on this District and fasten upon the Government a debt that it never owed, and which no rule of law or morals imposes upon it, for payment. If fair dealing is to prevail this amendment must fail. If bank schemes are to triumph, then let it pass. I cannot hope, sir, to defeat this proposition of the committee, but I am content to have warned this House of the results of its hasty action.

Mr. ATKINS. I now yield the remainder of my time, excepting one half minute, to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I shall not want all that time. I think that I can appeal to this House for the proof that at no time during the four years that I have had the honor to occupy a seat on this floor have I ever been knowingly uncandid or ungenerous toward any man. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] in even suggesting for a moment that I have been so by inadvertence simply begs the question. I never charged him with having said that this Government was responsible for the principal of these bonds. I caused to be read his own language, and that language of his was that the Government was bound to provide by taxation upon the people of this District for the interest of these bonds; and he at that time caused to be read the clause of the statute which says that provision shall be made in that way for the interest and sinking fund. Now, the Government is as much bound to provide for the sinking fund as it is for the interest. And this provision which we have brought in here to-day in the sundry civil appropriation bill is a provision for the sinking fund and nothing else; it does not assume the payment of a single dollar of the principal.

Mr. HENDEE. I wish simply to say that I have here the act referred to in the tenth section. If the gentleman wishes to read it he can do so. It has no relation at all to the ten-million-dollar debt.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am anxious the House shall understand this question. I can make it plain in one minute. We agreed, by the imposition of the necessary taxation upon the District of Columbia, to provide for this interest and the sinking fund. We pledged the faith of the United States to that effect. We have assumed the payment of one-half the expenses of this District by an act brought in here by the gentleman from Kentucky himself; and all that this sundry civil bill does is to say that out of the fund thus created, of which the United States Government has agreed to pay one-half, the pledge of the Government to establish a sinking fund shall be fulfilled.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. BLACKBURN called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 107, not voting 35; as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the question of privilege interrupted by the conference report.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to make a report on a cognate subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. But not to take the gentleman from the floor on the question of privilege.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order. I yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNDY] for debate, and not to yield to other business.

Mr. BUTLER. This is a report of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that.

Mr. BUTLER. It was ordered to be made as soon as practicable by the House.

The SPEAKER. One question of privilege is already pending, and cannot be interrupted by another and previous question in force.

Mr. BUTLER. It is about the same matter.

The SPEAKER. It is on a different subject, and the gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move the House take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York must occupy his time now, or I will claim the floor and demand a vote.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKS. The House has referred to the Judiciary Committee instructions to inquire into a breach of the privileges of the House by Mr. Seward. That committee is ready to report, and it was instructed to make report as soon as practicable. It has direct bearing on the question presented by the committee of which the gentleman from Illinois is chairman. It ought to be received now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, as there is already one question of privilege pending and previous question prevailing.

Mr. BANKS. This is the same question, and I make another suggestion to the Chair which I think is worthy of consideration, and it is pertinent to this case. This is the report of the Committee on the Judiciary upon resolutions which includes the report of the committee represented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in reply that if he were permitted to receive the report of another committee while one was pending as a question of privilege, still he could not do it at this time, because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is upon the floor and does not yield the floor for such purpose.

Mr. BANKS. The Chair does not appreciate the point of order that I make. The report that the Committee on the Judiciary desired to make relates to the same subject-matter which the gentleman from Illinois has brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is true that it relates to another branch of the subject, and the Chair would be very glad to have it come in, but he has no power under the rule to do so except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKS. The person sought to be impeached is charged with a breach of the privilege of the House and ought to be relieved of that charge. That is a most important principle, the right of a citizen and public officer, and the House cannot neglect to relieve him from it without dishonor. This public officer is charged with a breach of the privileges of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the gentleman to order. I did not yield for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is hearing the gentleman from Massachusetts upon the point of order.

Mr. BANKS. We sent this matter to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the committee is ready to report upon the question of excluding that report. We are now required and compelled to vote on the question of the impeachment of this citizen and public officer.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to make a single suggestion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I cannot yield for any suggestion.

Mr. BUTLER. One of the articles of impeachment now before us is, that Mr. Seward ought to be impeached because he has retained these books. As the organ of the Committee on the Judiciary I am instructed to report that he was justified, in our opinions, in retaining these books. That is the report of the Committee on the Judiciary after a full consideration of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize a report from one committee while the House is engaged in the consideration of a report from another committee, with previous question prevailing. It would be impossible, without violating the rule of the House which requires the disposition of one subject under previous question before another is entertained.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am instructed to withdraw the seventeenth article of impeachment from the resolutions.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a single point, and it is, that this is a charge upon which the Committee on the Judiciary desires to report; and it is the charge of a violation of the privilege of the House. It therefore can interrupt any question; can take any member off the floor. It is a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that it can interfere with and interrupt the consideration of the question of the impeachment of a public officer?

Mr. BANKS. Unreservedly and assuredly, I say that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs from the gentleman.

Mr. BANKS. It concerns the privileges of the House and does not touch the question of impeachment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House has already discharged this witness. [Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BUTLER. He is upon the pledge of his personal honor, to be here if needed.

Mr. BANKS. The question was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it is one that could take any man upon this floor off of the floor, because it relates to a breach of the privileges of the House, and I demand that the report of the Committee on the Judiciary be received.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to make a discrimination which the gentleman from Massachusetts fails to draw; whereas in the one case it is an attachment for contempt for disobeying the order of the House, the other is a case of impeachment or indictment for public crime, and utterly unlike one from the other. You cannot attach the one to the other no more than you can hold the witness for contempt in court when an indictment is being tried.

Mr. BUTLER. Then when a court of justice brings a witness before it for contempt of its proceedings he must await in custody for three, four, or six weeks, until the case on trial is determined, before he can be relieved by that court from his contempt even, although the court do not believe him to be in contempt.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is the practice in the courts always. [Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BUTLER. Let us follow this matter out. When a party is brought before the jury and is said to be in contempt of the court by withholding competent evidence from the jury, he asks the right to be heard, and that there shall be no issue made which may act so as to prejudice the jury against him.

The court is willing to say no, so that the jury may go on and proceed against him. But it is said that the trial must go through, and he must be indicted and convicted before the fact can be officially known that he is not in contempt and has suppressed no evidence whatever.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to inquire of the gentleman whether or not a court ever discharges a witness in contempt until after the case is tried? The uniform practice of every court of competent jurisdiction is to keep him in custody.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no. It always discharges the man. It always acts in favor of personal liberty, the highest privilege under God. A man is always discharged when there is nothing against him.

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes, but there is something against this man; there is an indictment.

Mr. BUTLER. No, there is not; but you are trying to get one.

Mr. SPRINGER. On motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts himself, the House has already discharged Mr. Seward; "to report on notice" were his words.

Mr. BUTLER. Discharge him on his own recognizance. You would not have him in jail, would you?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] whether the report he makes here is based upon evidence derived from these books or upon evidence aliunde?

Mr. SPRINGER. Aliunde, outside of the books; we have not seen the books.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to be heard on the point of order. I have heard a great deal said here about this being a court of justice. I never knew that this body was invested with judicial powers.

Mr. BUTLER. I thought it had some.

Mr. McMAHON. What judicial powers?

Mr. BUTLER. To try its own members.

Mr. McMAHON. Is Mr. Seward a member of this House? By no means. He is simply a public officer. He cannot be deprived of liberty or of his property by any proceeding on the part of this House except when he is in contempt of this House. This House sits as a grand jury, or partly as a grand jury; not like ordinary grand juries. In the case of ordinary grand juries counsel for the defense are not present, nor are the witnesses for the defense allowed to be present. But in this grand inquest of the nation we allow the witnesses for the defense and the counsel for the defense to be present. This is simply the great body of the people through their representatives inquiring whether a party has done wrong.

This man is brought up before this House, before one of the committees of this House, and asked a question. He refuses to answer that question, and the House refers that matter to the Committee on the Judiciary. The case is still proceeding. Where? Now, here, in the grand jury. Where is the rule of law that requires the grand jury to stop in a case simply to determine whether a party has been guilty of contempt or not, when the other question pending before the grand jury is, Shall he be indicted? The question whether he shall be tried for contempt may be determined now or next week or next month. But the question now pending here is, Shall he be indicted?

I am astonished to hear gentlemen talk about the liberties of the citizen being violated, when the party in this case has been discharged; not actually nor technically, but he is permitted to go free.

Mr. CONGER. Does not one of the articles of impeachment charge that he refused to produce these books?

Mr. SPRINGER. That has been withdrawn.

Mr. CONGER. No member has a right to withdraw it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have done it.

Mr. McMAHON. It does not make any difference whether that article is withdrawn or not. The question whether that was or was not an impeachable offense was not the question referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The question referred to that committee was whether his refusal to answer the question propounded to him was a contempt of this House; not whether it was an impeachable offense, but whether it was a contempt of the privileges of this House.

Mr. HANNA. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANNA. Who withdrew that charge?

Mr. McMAHON. The chairman of that committee.

Mr. HANNA. Is this, then, simply a proceeding of Mr. SPRINGER against Mr. Seward? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that the gentleman from Indiana has learned enough of the rules of this House to know that the mover of a proposition may withdraw it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Permit me to say a single word. I desire to call the attention of this House to the fact that here is a proceeding begun in the first place by bringing a party before the House for contempt. He is under arrest; he is in our custody legally and technically. Our hand is upon him; he is by us restrained of his liberty. Now, while that restraint is still upon him, while he is still not at liberty, a proposition is made here to impeach him.

Now, we on this side say that the two propositions relating to this party are, first, the question of personal liberty; and, second, the judicial proceeding against him. The personal-liberty feature is the higher privilege, and ought to be heard first. A man ought to be free when we proceed to impeach him. To put him in jail, in law; to strike him while he is in jail, is to say that we will follow the law of Rhadamanthus, to punish and then hear. That is not American law, and is not American liberty. The question of his liberty ought to be heard first.

Mr. SPARKS. Is the man restrained of his liberty?

Mr. BANKS. Yes; he is under arrest.

Mr. BUTLER. He must come in here when he is called.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must be in order. That is first necessary. [A pause.] The gentleman from Massachusetts claims a right to interfere in the proceedings now going on, and to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary on the subject of the detention of a witness. The Chair does not intend to discuss the practice of the courts in such proceedings as have been cited. The duty of the Chair is to administer the rules only. If left to his own volition, he would prefer to read at once a decision of a question relating to the detention of a citizen now in custody rather than any other subject. But under the rules the House has decided to consider this question; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is on the floor discussing it; and the rules do not allow him, so far as the Chair is at present advised, to be taken from the floor except in the manner stated in the rules—by a motion to adjourn, by the entering of a motion to reconsider, or by the presentation of a conference report. Therefore the Chair decides that it is not competent for one committee to interfere with the report from another committee when the gentleman who makes the report is on the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. BANKS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair on that question; and in order that the Chair and the House may understand that I take no exceptions thereto I wish to state briefly the grounds on which I make this appeal. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to discussion. The previous question has been ordered; and all questions of order that may intervene are subject to the operation of the previous question, and must be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate. Rule 133 settles the practice.

The SPEAKER. But this is an appeal from the decision of the Chair touching the subject under consideration. The Chair has decided that under the rules the gentleman from Illinois cannot be taken from the floor, if he claims it, except in the manner allowed by the rules. The gentleman from Massachusetts appeals from that decision, and the Chair is bound to hear the appeal.

Mr. BANKS. I say again that I take no captious exception to the ruling of the Chair, and as the House will bear witness I seldom interfere on questions of order; but this involves so important a question of principle and is likely to lead to such serious consequences if the decision of the Chair should be sustained, that I desire to express my dissent and to ask the judgment of the House upon it.

Let me state the ground upon which I take the appeal. A citizen of the country and a public officer is charged with crime. A committee of the House is instructed to inquire into the nature, the extent, and grounds of this charge against him. That committee, proceeding in the inquiry, calls upon this citizen, this public officer, to give his testimony under oath and to produce certain documents or books which are said to be in his possession. He refuses to do this on the ground that the Constitution protects him in such refusal. He is brought to the bar of the House to answer for a breach of its privileges. Now, that is the point upon which I stand. I do not speak of the question of personal liberty, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has rightly and properly spoken; I do not speak of the practice in courts of justice, of which my honorable colleague [Mr. BUTLER] has so earnestly and ably spoken; but I speak of the fact that this man who was under examination by the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and who is charged with crime, had been brought before the bar of the House to answer for a breach of its privileges in refusing to comply with the demands of the committee. It is the breach of the privilege of the House that is in question; and until that question is decided no action of this House can be taken upon the general subject of the crime charged against him. The breach of the privileges of the House is the first point to be decided. The House, in acting upon this question of the invasion of its privileges, referred it to the Judiciary Committee; and the instruction given to that committee was to report as early as practicable what action in their judgment should be taken by the House in relation thereto. This man, charged with crime and brought to the bar of the House for a violation of its privileges and the right of its members, is a prisoner of the House. We send the question as to the breach of our privileges to the Judiciary Committee, this man remaining meanwhile in custody. He is now under bonds. He cannot leave this District. He must be at the beck and call of this House until his case shall be decided.

One point beyond this, which is strictly and clearly pertinent, I desire to state. In the order referring this subject to the Committee on the Judiciary "all the evidence and papers pertaining thereto" were also sent to that committee. The Chair properly decided that this referred to the question of the breach of privilege; and so far the Chair was right. But there is another point in this resolution to which I ask the attention of the Chair. The words following those I have just read are, "together with the reports of the committee." Now, sir, the reports of the committee do not refer to the breach of privilege; they refer to the original charges against the prisoner of the House. The Judiciary Committee, therefore, has two subjects within its keeping: one is embraced in the paper relating to the breach of privilege; the other is the reports of the committee upon the whole subject. A reference of the whole subject was necessary in order that the Judiciary Committee should properly comprehend the important questions involved in the reference. The Committee on Expenditures of the State Department was, for the moment, deprived of its jurisdiction of this question by the order of reference to the Judiciary Committee.

Now I come back to my point, which is a very simple one, that until this question of the invasion of the privileges of the House is determined the House is forbidden by every principle of parliamentary law and by every consideration of honor and of justice to pursue its proceedings under the process of impeachment until the rights of the House and its members have been vindicated.

Gentlemen around me say that I am mistaken as to the matters referred to the Judiciary Committee; they say the papers relate to the breach of privilege. I know they do; but there are other papers which do not relate to the breach of privilege.

Mr. DEAN. There were no reports upon any other subject.

Mr. BANKS. Very well; the resolution which the Committee on the Judiciary had before it is a report. The very charge against this man is a report. The evidence against him is a report. Every paper from the beginning of this case should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and it would be an offense against justice and the honor of the House as well as the dignity of the Government to say that he can be impeached here when he stands charged with a breach of the privileges of the House and is in the custody of the House for that offense.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he draws a broad line of separation between the subject-matter under consideration and the administration of the rule which regulates the consideration of the subject. Now the previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered on this subject; and the Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how he can under such circumstances inject another question on the House in that way?

Mr. BANKS. That is a point to which I was coming, on which I wish to express my opinion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to express my opinion honestly and clearly. The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BANKS. The Chair has stated the rule and the practice of the House correctly. The rules to which the Chair has referred and the motions that are to be received, when any question is under consideration, apply to the report or the proposition presented by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] who represents the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department. That is one subject to which the order of motions cited by the Speaker properly applies. When an invasion of the privileges of this House and of the rights of its members occurs, and is submitted by the Chair to the House, then the same order of motions which in the first instance applied to the subject presented by the gentleman from Illinois, applies to the question connected with the breach of the privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. This is not a violation of the privileges of a member of this House.

Mr. BANKS. It is a violation of the privileges of every member of the House; because a citizen and public officer has been brought to the bar of the House and arraigned for a violation of its privileges; and that is the only subject now before the House. He is under arrest. If he is not in presence of the House it is only by tolerance. We can bring him to the bar of the House if we please.

The SPEAKER. This is a question of impeaching this same man involved in both proceedings suggested; and how is the Chair to draw a line between the contumacy of a witness and a case of impeachment?

Mr. BANKS. They are different; one has no connection with the other. One is an ordinary act of legislation and the other is a measure to vindicate the right of its members to act as legislators.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BANKS. The question as to a breach of the privileges of the House is an interlocutory proceeding. It is exactly like this question of order. There is in the first instance an impeachment; secondly, a charge of violating the privileges of the House, and, thirdly, a question of order which I make myself. Each question is independent of the other, although arising out of the same general cause, and the House must, upon every principle of law and justice, first decide the question of order, then that of the violation of its privileges, and then of the matter of impeachment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not say that this is not a question of high privilege; but he does say that, under the rules of this House and under the action of this House under the rules, it is not now in order to precipitate this question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say one word.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have moved to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BANKS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. A motion to lay on the table is not debatable; but the Chair would prefer that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] should allow a reasonable number of minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPRINGER. I cannot yield.

Mr. BANKS. I had the floor and yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would yield to the gentleman but for the great pressure of public business.

Mr. GARFIELD. Upon the precise point last made by the Speaker I wish to call attention to one fact. The Speaker makes the point that the House is now acting under the previous question; and while he believes in the superior privilege of a question of personal liberty as a general proposition, the rule of the House holds him that here is a previous question by order of the House laid on this proceeding. Now I call the attention of the House to the fact that since this previous question has been ordered the gentleman from Illinois has been interrupted by a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated distinctly that a conference report was in order under the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. And by that conference report he was taken off his feet.

The SPEAKER. That could interrupt even a motion to adjourn. The Chair made that exception.

Mr. BANKS. He was interrupted also by a question of order. The Chair should make that exception also.

Mr. GARFIELD. Therefore two things have occurred, a motion to adjourn and a motion to consider a conference report. A point of order made by my friend from Massachusetts is a third thing which has taken the gentleman off his feet. Now I claim there is a fourth thing which can take him off his feet. What is that? It is the authority given before he called the previous question to the Committee on the Judiciary to report at any time on this question of the personal liberty of a citizen.

And now in one sentence more I leave it. When the motion to refer the consideration of this question to the Committee on the Judiciary was made the Speaker said—I read his words from the RECORD:

It is a question of privilege, and the Committee on the Judiciary can report it back at any time.

And it is repeated again below.

Now, below that point the Speaker says the same thing. He says "the committee on such a subject as this would have the right to report at any time." We have the statement there repeated.

The SPEAKER. At any time when the business of the House is not regulated by the order of the House. Now, what is the fact here?

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the attention of the Speaker to one thing more, and then I will close. What is this proceeding of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER?] It is claimed that his committee shall have the power necessary to carry articles of impeachment to the Senate and arraign at their bar Mr. Seward.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the gentleman to order. He is discussing the merits of the resolution, and not the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I say that the moment they do that the Senate has a right to demand the body of Mr. Seward to be brought before the bar, but they cannot have it. Why? Because he is in our custody for a separate offense, a contempt of this House, and before we have settled that question and released him from our custody, we have no right to bring articles of impeachment against him. Can you bring a man into court chained, and require him to stand up with manacles on his hands?

The SPEAKER. This appeal is upon the ground that the Chair declines to allow the order of this House by the ordering of the main question on the question of impeachment to be interrupted by a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BANKS. That is not the point. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The Chair has mistaken my point of order, and the Chair has no right to state it in another form.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be kind enough to reduce it to writing.

Mr. BANKS. My point of order is that when an impeachment against a citizen and public officer is pending, and that citizen is charged with a breach of the privileges of the House, and the question as to that breach of privilege is referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that interlocutory proceeding stops the proceeding for impeachment; and under the order of the House the Judiciary Committee have a right to present their report at any time.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is repeating his argument; and I must insist upon the motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. BANKS. The language of the resolution was that the committee should report as soon as practicable. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. That does not authorize the committee to interfere with the business of the House which has been fixed by the House. The question is upon laying the appeal upon the table.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 1837) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens, postmaster at Manchester, in New Hampshire; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employes of the Senate and House of Representatives.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to make a report from the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate do recede from its amendments numbered 3, 8, 9, 13, 14, 21, 26, 27, 37, 39, 40, 41, 48, 62, 65, 77, 86, 91, 93, 96, 101, 107, 108, 113, 126, and 127.

That the House do recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 64, 7, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 25, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 38, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 88, 84, 85, 87, 88, 89, 90, 94, 95, 97, 98, 99, 100, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 109, 111, 111, 112, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 128, 129.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 24, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out, in lines 19 and 20, page 4 of the bill, the words, "two hundred and fifty thousand," and insert in lieu the words "two hundred thousand."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 34, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out from line 7 to line 12, both inclusive, page 7, the whole paragraph, and insert in lieu as follows:

"For improving Mississippi River from Saint Paul to Des Moines Rapids, $100,000: Provided, That not exceeding $20,000 thereof may be used by the Secretary of War, in his discretion, in making a practical test of the flume invented by M. J. Adams, said test to be made under the supervision and direction of said Adams, but without compensation to said Adams for his services: And provided further, That such test shall not be made until the right shall be secured to the United States to use said flume in the event of the favorable result of said test, upon terms satisfactory to the Secretary of War."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 61, with an amendment as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 73, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out, on line 21, page 12, the words, "seven thousand" and insert in lieu the words "five thousand."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 74, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out, in line 25, page 12, the words "twelve thousand" and insert in lieu the words "seven thousand."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 79, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out, in line 20, page 13, the letter "s" from the word "rivers."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from all of its amendment numbered 92, except on line 17, page 15, the word "fifty."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 125, with an amendment as follows:

Insert before the words "Saint Mary's," in line 13, page 22, the words "approaches from Lake Superior to."

And the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. E. SPENCER,
S. J. R. McMILLAN,
M. W. RANSOM,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN H. REAGAN,
JNO. E. KENNA,
JAY A. HUBBELL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but a few moments. This bill as it passed the House appropriated, I believe, about $5,600,000. Amendments aggregating between $800,000 and $900,000 were added by the Senate committee, and the Senate itself put upon the bill additional amounts. I have not been able to aggregate all these amounts, but we suppose the bill as it passed the Senate appropriated about $7,000,000, independently of an item in relation to the Eads jetties.

Mr. EDEN. I would like the gentleman to state how much the bill appropriates for the Eads jetties.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will let me go on a few moments, I will tell him everything he wants to know.

Mr. EDEN. I believe we have already appropriated for the Eads jetties about a million dollars more than we owe.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the other appropriations made by the Senate, which we have not had time to aggregate, the Senate has inserted a provision to which we have agreed in conference for the construction of a bridge over the Arkansas River at Little Rock. The bill as amended by the Senate contains also provisions modifying the terms of the contract with J. B. Eads for the construction of jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River. These modifications authorize the payment of about $750,000 in advance of the time when it would have been paid, or at least under different conditions. I suppose it is not improper for me to state what appears in the RECORD that this proposition had the favorable report of the Senate committee, that it received the support of thirty-eight Senators to ten, and had the almost unanimous concurrence and recommendation of the Committee on Commerce of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand the gentleman to say that the bill as now reported changes the original contract entered into with Eads.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; in a measure it does.

Mr. SPARKS. And the bill authorizes him to be paid absolutely money which according to existing law would be paid on conditions.

Mr. REAGAN. We authorize payment as the work goes on. Under the original law he was to be paid so much upon every increase of two feet. Under this bill he will be paid so much upon every increase of one foot. He is also in this bill relieved to some extent from the necessity of preserving the original width intended for the thirty-foot depth of channel. That width may be brought down, I believe, to two hundred feet instead of two hundred and fifty.

Mr. SPARKS. Then, as I understand, the bill as reported about lets him out of his contract.

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; he is still required to make a depth of thirty feet; but he is not required to make the same width of channel which was required under the original contract.

Mr. ROBBINS. I understand—

Mr. REAGAN. Wait a moment. If gentlemen will not be in such a hurry, they shall know all they want to know about this bill, if I know it myself.

Under the law of last session an examining board composed of five engineers of the highest rank in the Army was appointed to examine into this work, to ascertain its permanency and generally the success of the structure. Among the subjects examined was, as to whether it would endanger the existing work to preserve a width of three hundred and fifty feet and a depth of thirty feet. They have examined that work, and I say for myself, and I believe that I express the views of our committee almost without exception, that this report is the first report that has relieved our minds of doubts of the success of that work and has shown that the work is a success. It has already obtained a depth of twenty-three feet of water for the whole length of the jetties, with the exception of one hundred and sixty feet where the water is twenty-five feet deep, and sixty feet where it is twenty-four feet deep. When the upper ends of the jetties shall have become settled and consolidated so as to retain the water, the engineers report that it will produce a channel depth of twenty-five or twenty-six feet.

That report also removed from our minds another apprehension that I and many others had in reference to the success of this work. We feared that the sediment flowing out of the river would be deposited in front of the jetty channel and shoal the water there. The report shows that not only does it not have that effect, but that during the last year the water in front of the jetties and so on outward has deepened more than one foot instead of shoaled.

Mr. ITTNER. Are the engineers unanimous in their report?

Mr. REAGAN. One other point. It is right that I should mention it, because if we modify the contract in one respect, the question is whether other modifications ought not also to be made. In the first place the engineers testify, one of them at least testified rather than reported, that if thirty feet depth for three hundred and fifty feet width was maintained it would change the regimen of the river at its mouth, increase the volume of water through South Pass and reduce the volume through the Southwest Pass and Pass l'Outre.

They say that to do that would throw a volume of water in the South Pass that would endanger the permanency of the jetties. General Wright in his testimony before the Senate committee said that if he were in charge of the work he would not advise that that should be done. Upon this idea it was thought best to provide for a channel two hundred feet wide and thirty feet deep, rather than one of three hundred and fifty feet in width and thirty feet in depth, so that the work should not be endangered. It is also shown by these engineers that already they have twenty-three feet of water which accommodates the larger part of the commerce that comes into the Mississippi River; about 87 per cent.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. In one moment.

Mr. HOOKER. What is the aggregate amount appropriated by this bill, including that given for the jetties; and what is the change made in the contract with Captain Eads as to the work to be done at the jetties?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. He is telling us that now.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state the whole matter as briefly as I can. Under the original contract and law it was agreed that $5,250,000 should be paid for this work. There has been paid by the Government about $2,000,000. The contractors have paid out about $1,600,000 more than the Government has paid them. Therefore, if we pay the $750,000 here provided we will not then have paid more than one-half of the amount which has been expended on that work for the benefit of commerce in addition to what the Government has already paid.

One word as to that. The commerce of that river is not to be measured as we would ordinary streams. It is the outlet to the ocean of the commerce of the vast valley of the Mississippi and its tributaries. When we succeed in securing facilities for that commerce to go to the sea and return to the river without interruption we have achieved a great result. When this work was undertaken it was undertaken as an experiment.

Mr. ATKINS. What is the depth at the mouth of the Mississippi River now?

Mr. REAGAN. Twenty-three feet.

Mr. ATKINS. What is the evidence of that?

Mr. REAGAN. The report of five ranking engineers of the United States Army recently made.

Mr. EDEN. Was it not reported at the last session to this House that it was twenty-four feet?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not remember about that, but the report is before the House and the country. It shows that in time, as the operation of the channel is confined by these jetties, a depth of twenty-five or twenty-six feet will be obtained as soon as the jetties are built to the flood-tide and consolidated, so as to confine the water within them.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois when he asks whether it was not reported that the depth was twenty-four feet: No; the board of engineers now report "that there has been a constant, progressive, general improvement in the jetty channel, at no time more evident than at present." This is the official report, dated January 23, 1879.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas one question. I understand the gentleman to say they had agreed—

Mr. REAGAN. If gentlemen will ask questions one at a time I will yield to them.

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to a point of order. No one can hear what is going on.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a question which is not unfriendly to his proposition.

Mr. WADDELL. We had better take a vote.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me answer. I feel bound to let gentlemen know what we have done about this bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. I understand the gentleman to say he had agreed to change this contract so as to pay Mr. Eads when he had increased the distance by a foot.

Mr. REAGAN. That is a change.

Mr. ROBBINS. Do you pay half as much for a foot as for two feet?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBBINS. Now, another question.

Mr. TUCKER. I should like to ask my friend from Texas a question.

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. I understood something has been appropriated by an amendment in the Senate to build a bridge across the Arkansas River at Little Rock.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. On what ground?

Mr. REAGAN. Because the Senate had the power to do it and did it. I do not know any other.

Mr. TUCKER. But had they the constitutional power to do it?

Mr. REAGAN. We have built bridges across the Mississippi and the Ohio Rivers and many other streams, numbers of them, under the authority of the Constitution.

Mr. TUCKER. When?

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot tell you. There are five or six over the Ohio and the same over the Missouri.

Mr. EDEN. I ask the gentleman to let us take a recess so we may figure up and see how much money is appropriated by this bill.

Mr. KENNA. I warn the gentleman from Texas that if he yields to the motion to take a recess this bill will be killed.

Mr. REAGAN. Whether the bill appropriates $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 the gentleman from Illinois would oppose it.

Mr. EDEN. I presume the House would like to know exactly how much it does appropriate.

Mr. REAGAN. Nothing can satisfy the gentleman in this bill, and therefore after I have answered questions I propose to call the previous question.

Mr. SPARKS. Let me submit to the gentleman, ought not the House to know the amount of money to be taken from the Treasury by this bill? Now, ought it not to know that fact?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will suspend until the members are willing to be seated.

Mr. TUCKER. I would like to ask my friend—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear nothing till order is restored.

Mr. TUCKER. If he does, he hears more than anybody else. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. (after a pause.) The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. What I wished to ask my excellent friend was what is the amount appropriated for a bridge across the Arkansas River, and are not the abutments of that bridge on the opposite sides of the river within the same State of Arkansas? Can the gentleman show any precedent for the building of a bridge across a river in a single State?

Mr. GARFIELD. We are not building any bridges, are we?

Mr. REAGAN. There is no money appropriated to build that bridge. There is simply a privilege given to others to build the bridge.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman has not stated that the Government is building the bridge out of money from the Treasury?

Mr. REAGAN. Not at all. The Government has never built a bridge with money out of the Treasury. It has simply given privileges to others to build bridges.

Mr. HANNA. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. How much money does this bill now appropriate as it comes from the conference committee?

Mr. REAGAN. I have already stated the amount, and I will repeat it.

Mr. HANNA. We could not hear you.

Mr. REAGAN. As the bill passed this House it appropriated $5,000,000. With the amendments placed on it by the Senate, as modified by the conference committee, it is our belief that the amount has been increased about a million dollars, a little more or a little less, independently of what is provided for the payment of the Eads jetties, which is covered by another law. I believe the bill as it now comes from the committee of conference appropriates a little less than $7,000,000. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HANNA. I desire to ask another question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MCCOOK. I would like to know what is the aggregate amount of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The main question having been ordered, the question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HANNA. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] It is the only means we have of recording our protest against this bill.

The question being put on ordering the yeas and nays, there were yeas 34, not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. EDEN. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. EDEN and Mr. REAGAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 35, noes 110.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks that the Clerk of the House may be authorized to employ four additional clerks during the remainder of the session, to be paid out of the contingent fund such compensation as may be fixed by the Committee of Accounts.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. PRICE. Is it in order to move that the House take a recess?

Mr. REAGAN. Let us finish this.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the House take a recess until half past eight o'clock.

Many MEMBERS. Make it nine o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first submit the question on taking a recess until nine o'clock.

Mr. KENNA. I want to say if a recess is taken and this bill does not go to the enrolling clerk it will be defeated for want of time. I want the House to understand that fact. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The motion to take a recess till nine o'clock was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion that the House take a recess till half past eight o'clock. The Chair will submit the question whether the vote shall be taken by tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. REAGAN, and Mr. WHITE of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 52, noes 97.

So the House refused to take a recess.

The question recurred on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 63, not voting 120; as follows:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 2518) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the schooner Don Pedro.

ASSAY OFFICE IN ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio, in the chair,) laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Arizona, praying for the establishment of an assay office at the capital or some other convenient point in said Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at nine o'clock p. m.

PAY OF COMMITTEE CLERKS, ETC.

Mr. ROBERTS. I move to suspend the rules in order to pass Senate joint resolution No. 71.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBERTS. I will do so, and in order that the House may understand what I desire to have passed I will ask that the joint resolution be now read. It is joint resolution (S. No. 71) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employes of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to pay the committee clerks, pages, messengers, and other employes of the Senate and House of Representatives who do not receive annual salaries their present rate of compensation, respectively, for thirty days from the date of the adjournment of this Congress; and the money required to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available. And further, that the provisions of this resolution shall apply to the persons holding their respective positions at the date of its approval, and they shall receive no other compensation for said time than that herein provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering at this time the joint resolution which has just been read?

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. There ought to be no objection to that.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a privileged question, and I desire to present the report and resolutions of the Committee of Elections in the contested-election case of Haralson vs. Shelley, from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. There is one question of privilege already pending, and this cannot be received except by consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I cannot consent to have that brought in now.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MILLS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to consent that the post-route bill be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments concurred in. It is a large bill, and in order to have it properly enrolled it should be placed in the hands of the enrolling clerks as soon as possible.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that myself.

Mr. WADDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the post-route bill with the Senate amendments thereto be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is there anything of a legislative character in that bill?

Mr. WADDELL. I have not read the bill myself, every word of it, but I am assured by the clerk of the committee that there is nothing else in the bill but post-routes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he can give the assurance that there is nothing of a legislative character in the bill.

There was no objection; and the bill (H. R. No. 6126) to establish post-routes in the several States herein named, returned from the Senate with amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments concurred in.

Mr. WADDELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask consent that the arrears of pensions appropriation bill, returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments concurred in.

Mr. ROBERTS. I object.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to print the report of J. W. Powell.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 247) granting a pension to George D. Phillips, a soldier of the war of 1812;

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department in relation to the impeachment of George F. Seward, upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNDY] is entitled to the floor for the twenty-six minutes remaining of his time.

Mr. BUNDY. Mr. Speaker, laboring under the disadvantage of having been necessarily interrupted by a report from a committee of conference, I now will attempt to resume at the point where I was when interrupted.

I had referred to one of the principal witnesses called to establish the alleged facts set forth in the report of the majority of the committee. Having no time to refer to all I will refer to but one other of the witnesses called. I said in the first place that I should endeavor to keep within the facts which will not be controverted or attempted to be controverted by any member of the majority of this committee.

I hold in my hand a volume of closely printed evidence, but a quarter part perhaps of all the evidence taken in this case. The testimony upon which these proposed articles of impeachment have been framed comes but from three or four witnesses. The second witness is one Richard Phoenix, who was brought home from China to this country by the power of the House in order to testify against the fair fame and name of Minister Seward.

Without discussing the manner in which he was photographed before the committee by the manner and matter of his testimony, I will refer but to one instance. It will be borne in mind that the evidence shows that this man Richard Phoenix, while acting as marshal and jailer at Shanghai, became the legal custodian of one Pease, referred to in the proposed articles of impeachment. It is alleged that this Pease was a notorious pirate. The evidence of Mr. Phoenix is relied upon to frame articles of impeachment against Mr. Seward. This man Phoenix unblushingly admitted before the committee that while that notorious pirate Pease was in the jail, the key of which was held by this marshal, Phoenix, Pease offered him $1,000 to release him. When the witness was asked why he did not take the bribe and set the criminal free he replied that he did not believe that he would keep his contract to pay the money. That is the character of one of the witnesses on whose testimony these articles of impeachment are founded.

Now, the witnesses called on the part of the prosecutor, Myers, it is true, had access to the office of the late consul-general, Mr. Seward. These several witnesses, basing their evidence and detailed stories upon what they observed about and concerning the books and official transactions of Mr. Seward, have come before this committee and testified as to his improprieties and irregularities. But I take it upon me to say that these witnesses had no better opportunity to examine and judge and testify, simply because they were about the office and had occasional opportunities to examine the books, than other commercial men who were doing business at Shanghai and other Chinese ports.

Mr. Seward in his behalf called to the witness stand twelve commercial men having intercourse with him, doing business at the consulate daily, men at the head of heavy commercial houses, knowing the atmosphere in which Mr. Seward lived and moved, having better access to his books in one sense and knowing better the reputation of Mr. Seward as consul-general than those men who were hanging about the jails of Shanghai, refusing the offer of bribes only because they believed they would not receive the money. At the head of the list is the name of S. Wells Williams, D. D., for twenty years secretary of legation at Peking, and many years at Shanghai, holding official position. If time allowed me to go through the list I could bring before this House an array of names of individuals almost as high in experience as Dr. Williams. What is the evidence of Dr. Williams and these other witnesses? After all their opportunities to know not only how Consul-General Seward did his business from actual observation, but by his character established in the public mind at Shanghai, Dr. Williams, called on behalf of Mr. Seward, when asked what was the character of this officer at Shanghai, said, "No man ever had better." This was the uniform evidence of these witnesses, men of high character themselves, standing high in the estimate of commercial houses at Shanghai, standing high throughout the country of their adoption as well as in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I read in a morning paper that this House should do its duty though the name of forty Swards stood in the way. I suppose the writer of that article had possibly the idea that because the person involved in these charges bears the proud name of Seward, some members of this House might shrink from duty. I ask no favor for Mr. Seward simply for the sake of his name. I desire to state the stand-point from which I take my present position. I have listened attentively for at least one hundred patient sittings of this committee to the evidence adduced. I do not believe to-night that if this case were to go to the Senate upon the evidence just as it was produced before our committee, that that body, sitting in judgment upon the case, would hesitate a single minute, if they saw the witnesses as we saw them, to pronounce the same verdict as the members of the Judiciary Committee informed us to-day they have reached upon the question of contempt—that this man, pursued as he seems to be by men of malice, is not guilty.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that if this case were to go to the Senate a conviction would follow. Thus believing in sincerity, I say that I cannot subscribe to the findings embodied in the report of the majority of the committee, but have cheerfully, conscientiously, and unhesitatingly set my hand to the findings of the minority as read at the Clerk's desk. And, Mr. Speaker, when I remember the manner in which this accused man came upon the floor of this House but two or three days since, and when I remember his words, so eloquent and yet so precisely reaching the vital point of this case, I cannot do better than quote them in substance, and say that he is the victim of persecution. Mr. Seward stands ready, I doubt not, to join with me to-day in saying that he has received from this committee nothing but fairness and courtesy in the manner of conducting this investigation. But, Mr. Speaker, the truth will not down, that the witnesses who have come in here and followed Minister Seward have come in a spirit of revenge, smarting under removal by higher authority, hoping to visit upon him punishment for what they believe he may have indirectly brought about. Now, it remains for this House to decide whether, upon evidence of the character which I have conscientiously and I believe truthfully represented and quoted, we will bring down the good name and fair fame of a man of whom Dr. Williams (who had close and intimate relations with the accused for twenty years) says that the verdict of the commercial people and all having relations with him at Shanghai was that the name and fame of no man ever stood higher.

Mr. Speaker, it is not a trifling thing to lend our aid in furtherance of persecution, if that be, as I believe, the animating spirit of this proceeding. I ask the House to pause here now and adopt what the minority of the committee have prudently and reasonably, as I claim, recommended in the resolution appended to the minority report, which I ask may now be read.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Was not Mr. Seward formerly consul-general?

Mr. BUNDY. Certainly; at Shanghai.

Mr. FRYE. And he is now minister?

Mr. BUNDY. He is now minister at Peking, and has been for several years.

Mr. FRYE. One question further. Does the evidence touch his acts as consul-general or as minister?

Mr. BUNDY. His acts alone as consul-general, dating back for a series of years.

Mr. SPRINGER. As minister also.

Mr. BUNDY. I am not aware of any charge brought against Mr. Seward as minister.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. FRYE. I would like to ask one further question. Has the committee examined the law in relation to the question whether Mr. Seward if accused as consul-general can be impeached while not in that office, but holding the office of minister?

Mr. BUNDY. To my recollection, Mr. Speaker, that question has not been so far considered that any vote was taken thereon by the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, yes; it has been discussed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Senator Carpenter was there and discussed that very ably, taking the ground it could be done.

Mr. FRYE. Is it the opinion of the chairman of the committee that Minister Seward can be impeached as minister for acts done as consul-general?

Mr. SPRINGER. Senator Carpenter was in the committee and discussed that question at length, and he was of the opinion, with all the gentlemen who have signed the report, that Mr. Seward could be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors while in office. He is in office, and the object of impeachment is to remove an improper person from office.

Mr. BAYNE. The minority of the committee do not entertain any such opinion.

Mr. BUNDY. I desire to say further, in reply to the inquiries of the gentleman from Maine, that it appears there is one article charging Mr. Seward since he was minister to Peking with a "crime and misdemeanor" in removing John C. Myers, then consul-general at Shanghai.

I ask the Clerk to read the resolution of the minority of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In view of the great importance of the subject and matters embraced in the report of the majority of the committee in the matter of the proposed impeachment of George F. Seward for alleged high crimes and misdemeanors, and the complicated questions of law embraced therein:

Resolved, That the matters embraced in said report, together with the evidence in the case, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to report at any time and at the earliest practicable hour, with their recommendation as to what action should be taken in the premises.

SOLOMON BUNDY.
THOMAS M. BAYNE.
MARK H. DUNNELL.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY,] which has just been read.

Mr. BUNDY. How much time have I remaining?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire to discuss the matter at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I present the report of the committee of conference on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 22, and 23, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

As to 23, in lines 6 and 11 of amendment 20, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "one";

As to amendment 22, in line 5, strike out "40" and insert "15";

As to amendment 23, in line 4 of said amendment, strike out "30" and insert "20";

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 51, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment except these words: "For bringing up arrears in draughting and other work in relation to private land claims, $3,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 52, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment after the word "prisoners," in line 6 of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 53, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Substitute for the matter stricken out the following: "And no clerk of the district or circuit courts of the United States or their deputies shall be appointed a receiver or a master in any case except where the judge of such court shall determine that special reasons exist therefor, to be assigned in the order of appointment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 80, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Correcting the spelling of the name of "Shepherd" so that it will read "Shepard."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 88, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Add after said amendment the following as a new paragraph:

"For the payment of the following-named persons for reporting testimony before committees of the House of Representatives at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress at times when the official stenographers were engaged with other committees, namely: Joseph I. Gilbert, E. W. Grant, E. C. Bartlett, E. D. Easton, C. J. Hayes, and William F. Bonynge, $3,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary, on accounts to be rendered by them respectively, certified by the official stenographers for the committees of the House, and approved by the chairmen of the several committees for which the work was done, and by the Committee of Accounts. To pay Henry G. Hayes and Andrew Divine, official stenographers for committees of the House of Representatives, the difference between their compensation as fixed by law and that actually received by them during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and in the months of July and August, 1876, $300 each, $1,800. To pay J. C. Kondrup for services as messenger for official reporters of debates during the present session, $250."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 94, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment from the beginning down to and including the word "and," in line 4, and in line 8, after the word "intended," insert the word "hereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
W. A. J. SPARKS,
JOHN H. BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
S. W. DORSEY,
W. A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

Mr. BUNDY. I was about to say, when interrupted, that I trust that after careful consideration, and after realizing, as I trust gentlemen do, the great importance of this question, not only to us, but more especially to the accused, and in consideration of the legal questions that pervade the entire case, they will allow the case to go to the Legal Committee of the House for them to say whether articles of impeachment should be prepared, and, if so, to formulate the same.

Now, if I have any time left, I yield it to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only wish to make one suggestion to the House. This side of the House does not propose by dilatory motions to resist the will of the majority in a matter of this kind, but I suggest to gentlemen on the other side whether they do not see at once the thorough impracticability of carrying impeachment articles to-night between now and twelve o'clock, well knowing that no possible action can be taken on them by the Senate between now and the close of this Congress. A new House will be here before whom a trial can be had, and it will rest with that House to say whether they will prosecute the impeachment or not. A new Senate will be organized before anything can be done, and before that new Senate articles of impeachment should be carried if carried at all. Why not do that which has been done in similar cases—order the Clerk of the House to seal up all the testimony and seal up these reports under the seal of the House, with an order that he transmit them to the Speaker of the next House when elected, upon which the next House can take what order it chooses? That will be the House that can present articles of impeachment, and there will then be a Senate before which the impeachment can be tried. But to adopt the articles of impeachment at this hour on the last night of a dying Congress does not have any meaning in the world except to be able to say that the House has carried articles of impeachment against Mr. Seward. I ask gentlemen, as a matter of fact, if that is not the only proper and practical way to do? I do not, of course, ask it in a spirit of controversy; I make it as a suggestion; but I want to say in conclusion that I do hope for the honor of this House, and the lawyers in it, and the American citizens in it, that we will not just throw a mere fling which can have no possible result, whether this man be justly guilty or not, for the sake merely of saying that we have adopted articles of impeachment against a citizen, and let him stand in the situation of being without a possibility of being tried, without a possibility of vindication leaving him in a position in which he can neither be vindicated nor punished.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will ask if the gentleman from Ohio is authorized to say that it shall be agreed that the books belonging to Mr. Seward shall also be sealed up?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not now say anything about Mr. Seward's books, because I do not know anything about them; but I take it for granted that the State Department will take care of any books belonging to that Department. I do not understand that Mr. Seward has ever refused to give up the books to that Department.

Mr. COX, of New York. They have not these books, however, at has ever the Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer in one moment the question put to me by the gentleman from Ohio. This House is now acting as a grand jury. We are acting upon our own finding. The next Congress will not have this question before them unless a new investigation takes place. The Senate is the court where this trial can take place. As soon as the articles of impeachment are presented the court may continue the case until the next term. Therefore, if we fail to take this step all the work taken by the committee falls to the ground. This is the work of a patient, laborious, and industrious examination by the committee after thirteen or fifteen months. We have in this report presented the facts.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman as to the articles of impeachment.

Mr. SPRINGER. The articles have been read in the hearing of members, and this is not a bill that has to be read three times.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the articles of impeachment.

The SPEAKER. They have already been read, as the Chair is advised.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to a rereading. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the proposition submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY.]

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONGER. My point of order— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I will, as soon as these angry passions subside for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to make his point of order, if he has one. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that, since the articles of impeachment reported by the committee were read, the chairman of that committee in his place, in answer to an inquiry, stated that one of those articles had been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the gentleman has a right, after the main question has been ordered, to withdraw anything.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman has told this House that he has withdrawn one of the articles.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that.

Mr. CONGER. And I desire to have them read so that we may know what remains.

The SPEAKER. They have been twice read, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] objects to the third reading.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to lay them on the table. There should be some way in which we can have an opportunity to understand what they are.

The question was taken upon a re a voce vote, when,

Mr. CONGER called for tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. We may as well make a test vote of this and take it by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The call for yeas and nays supersedes the call for tellers.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 138, not voting, 41; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SAMPSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 934) for the relief of H. M. Billingsley;

An act (S. No. 1087) to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries of public lands; and

An act (S. No. 1685) to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. RAINEY, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 31) approving the adverse decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the matter of the claim of Anna M. Clark;

An act (S. No. 373) to amend an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the Confederate Otee and Missouri and the Sac and Fox of the Missouri tribes of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska; and

An act (S. No. 959) for the protection of homestead settlers on the public lands.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

The House resumed the consideration of the report from the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department relative to the impeachment of George F. Seward.

Mr. CONGER. I again request that the proposed articles of impeachment may be read, as many gentlemen are present who have not yet heard them, and this side of the House has already indicated by its votes a desire to hear these articles of impeachment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks consent that the proposed articles of impeachment be again read.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I object.

The SPEAKER. There is objection.

Mr. CONGER. I ask of the Chair as a right that they be read.

The SPEAKER. They have been read twice.

Several MEMBERS. Only once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that they have been read twice; he knows nothing about the matter himself.

Mr. CONGER. When any considerable number of members desire a paper read the second time, I have never heard it refused.

Mr. BUNDY. The proposed articles of impeachment are embodied in the majority report and certainly have been read only once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is now informed that the articles of impeachment have been read only once. The resolutions were read twice. Is there objection to reading the articles of impeachment again?

Several members objected.

Mr. POTTER. I ask unanimous consent to present a privileged report. I do not ask for the reading.

Mr. CONGER. Is the request of this side of the House for the reading of these articles of impeachment denied?

The SPEAKER. Several members objected.

Mr. CONGER. Well, I ask the Chair to decide that members of the House may be informed what they are to vote upon. I think our request is reasonable.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] asks unanimous consent to present various reports from the majority, the minority, and a single member of the committee appointed to investigate alleged frauds in the late presidential election. Is their objection?

MEMBERS. Reports on what case?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] asks to present the views of the majority, of the minority, and of a single member touching the questions which were referred to a select committee concerning alleged frauds in the late presidential election. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMPSON and others. Let them be read.

Mr. FINLEY. Are they to be read? If so, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. We want to hear these reports read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a vote upon the pending amendment to the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for the reading of the reports just presented.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 4228) to provide for the education of the blind.

The message also announces that the Senate had adopted the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for a vote on the resolution of impeachment.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I present a conference report, and ask that it be read.

Mr. CONGER. In the mean time those reports have not been read.

The SPEAKER. They have not been read, but they have been received.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of those reports.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have made a report from the committee of conference, and ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, and 17.
That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 16, and 18.
And agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$425,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$90,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$9,150,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$5,457,376.10."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

Sec. 3. The Postmaster-General shall, in all cases, decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed.

Sec. 4. That all cars or parts of cars used for the railway mail service shall be of such style, length, and character, and furnished in such manner, as shall be required by the Postmaster-General, and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, and lighted by and at the expense of the railroad companies.

Sec. 5. That the Postmaster-General shall deduct from the pay of the railroad companies, for every failure to deliver a mail within its schedule time, not less than one-half of the price of the trip, and where the trip is not performed, not less than the price of one trip, and not exceeding, in either case, the price of three trips: Provided, however, That if the failure is caused by a connecting road, then only the connecting road shall be fined. And where such failure is caused by unavoidable casualty, the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, may remit the fine. And he may make deductions and impose fines for other delinquencies.

Sec. 6. That the Postmaster-General shall request all railroad companies transporting the mails to furnish, under seal, such data relating to the operating, receipts, and expenditures of such roads as may, in his judgment, be deemed necessary to enable him to ascertain the cost of mail transportation and the proper compensation to be paid for the same; and he shall, in his annual report to Congress, make such recommendations, founded on the information obtained under this section, as shall, in his opinion, be just and equitable.

Sec. 7. That mailable matter shall be divided into four classes:

- First, written matter;
- Second, periodical publications;
- Third, miscellaneous printed matter;
- Fourth, merchandise.

Sec. 8. Mailable matter of the first class shall embrace letters, postal cards, and all matters wholly or partly in writing, except as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 9. That on mailable matter of the first class, except postal cards and drop-letters, postage shall be prepaid at the rate of three cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof; postal cards shall be transmitted through the mails at a postage charge of one cent each, including the cost of manufacture; and drop-letters shall be mailed at the rate of two cents per half ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and one cent for each half ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established. The Postmaster-General may, however, provide by regulation for transmitting unpaid and duly certified letters of soldiers, sailors, and marines in the service of the United States to their destination, to be paid on delivery.

Sec. 10. That mailable matter of the second class shall embrace all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals, and as frequently as four times a year, and are within the conditions named in sections 12 and 14.

Sec. 11. Publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news-agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news-agents, shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at two cents a pound or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law.

Sec. 12. That matter of the second class may be examined at the office of mailing, and if found to contain matter which is subject to a higher rate of postage, such matter shall be charged with postage at the rate to which the enclosed matter is subject: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit the insertion in periodicals of advertisements attached permanently to the same.

Sec. 13. That any person who shall submit, or cause to be submitted, for transportation in the mails, any false evidence to the postmaster relative to the character of his publication, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500.

Sec. 14. That the conditions upon which a publication shall be admitted to the second class are as follows:

First. It must regularly be issued at stated intervals, as frequently as four times a year, and bear a date of issue, and be numbered consecutively.

Second. It must be issued from a known office of publication.

Third. It must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

Fourth. It must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and having a legitimate list of subscribers: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation or for circulation at nominal rates.

Sec. 15. That foreign newspapers and other periodicals of the same general character as those admitted to the second class in the United States may, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, on application of the publishers thereof or their agents, be transmitted through the mails at the same rates as if published in the United States. Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to allow the transmission through the mails of any publication which violates any copyright granted by the United States.

Sec. 16. That publishers of matter of the second class may, without subjecting it to extra postage, fold within their regular issues a supplement; but in all cases the added matter must be germane to the publication which it supplements, that is to say, matter supplied in order to complete that to which it is added or supplemented, but omitted from the regular issue for want of space, time, or greater convenience, which supplement must in every case be issued with the publication.

Sec. 17. That mail-matter of the third class shall embrace books, transient newspapers, and periodicals, circulars, and other matter wholly in print, (not included in section 12,) proof-sheets, corrected proof-sheets, and manuscript copy accompanying the same, and postage shall be paid at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fractional part thereof, and shall fully be prepaid by postage-stamps affixed to said matter. Printed matter other than books received in the mails from foreign countries under the provisions of postal treaties or conventions shall be free of customs duty, and books which are admitted to the international mails exchanged under the provisions of the universal postal union convention may, when subject to customs duty, be delivered to addressees in the United States under such regulations for the collection of duties as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General.

Sec. 18. That the term "circular" is defined to be a printed letter, which, according to internal evidence, is being sent in identical terms to several persons. A circular shall not lose its character as such, when the date and the name of the addressee and of the sender shall be therein written, nor by the correction of mere typographical errors in writing.

Sec. 19. That "printed matter" within the intentment of this act is defined to be the reproduction upon paper, by any process except that of handwriting, of any words, letters, characters, figures, or images, or of any combination thereof, not having the character of an actual and personal correspondence.

Sec. 20. That mailable matter of the fourth class shall embrace all matter not embraced in the first, second, or third class, which is not in its form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise damage the contents of the mail bag, or harm the person of any one engaged in the postal service, and is not above the weight provided by law, which is hereby declared to be not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof, except in case of single books weighing in excess of that amount, and except for books and documents published or circulated by order of Congress, or official matter emanating from any of the Departments of the Government or from the Smithsonian Institution, or which is not declared non-mailable under the provisions of section 283 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of July 12, 1876, or matter appertaining to lotteries, gift concerts, or fraudulent schemes or devices.

Sec. 21. That all matter of the fourth class shall be subject to examination and to a postage charge at the rate of one cent an ounce or fraction thereof, to be prepaid by stamps affixed. If any matter excluded from the mails by the preceding section of this act, except that declared non-mailable by section 3993 of the Revised Statutes as amended, shall, by inadvertence, reach the office of destination, the same shall be delivered in accordance with its address: Provided, That the party addressed shall furnish the name and address of the sender to the postmaster at the office of delivery, who shall immediately report the facts to the Postmaster-General. If the person addressed refuse to give the required information, the postmaster shall hold the package subject to the order of the Postmaster-General. All matter declared non-mailable by section 3993 of the Revised Statutes as amended, which shall reach the office of delivery, shall be held by the postmaster at the said office subject to the order of the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 22. That mailable matter of the second class shall contain no writing, print, mark, or sign thereon or therein in addition to the original print, except as herein provided, to wit, the name and address of the person to whom the matter shall be sent, and index-figures of subscription-book, either written or printed, the printed title of the publication, the printed name and address of the publisher or sender of the same, and written or printed words or figures, or both, indicating the date on which the subscription to such matter will end. Upon matter of the third class, or upon the wrapper inclosing the same, the sender may write his own name or address thereon, with the word "from" above and preceding the same, and in either case may make simple marks intended to designate a word or passage of the text to which it is desired to call attention. There may be placed upon the cover or blank leaves of any book or of any printed matter of the third class a simple manuscript dedication or inscription that does not partake of the nature of a personal correspondence. Upon any package of matter of the fourth class the sender may write or print his own name and address, preceded by the word "from," and there may also be written or printed the number and names of the articles inclosed; and the sender thereof may write or print upon or attach to any such article by tag or label a mark, number, name, or letter for purpose of identification.

SEC. 23. That matter of the second, third, or fourth class containing any writing or printing other than indicated in the preceding section, or made in the manner other than therein indicated, shall not be delivered except upon the payment of postage for matter of the first class, deducting therefrom any amount which may have been prepaid by stamps affixed to such matter; and any person who shall conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class in that of a lower class, and deposit, or cause the same to be deposited, for conveyance by mail, at a less rate than would be charged for both such higher and lower class matter, shall, for every such offense, be liable to a penalty of $10: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent publishers of the second class and news-agents from inclosing, in their publications, bills, receipts, and orders for subscriptions thereto; but such bills, receipts, and orders shall be in such form as to convey no other information than the name, location, and subscription-price of the publication or publications to which they refer.

SEC. 24. That the Postmaster-General may prescribe, by regulation, the manner of wrapping and securing for the mails all packages of matter not charged with first-class postage, so that the contents of such packages may be easily examined; and no package the contents of which cannot be easily examined shall pass in the mails, or be delivered at a less rate than for matter of the first class.

SEC. 25. That publications of the second class, one copy to each actual subscriber residing in the county where the same are printed, in whole or in part, and published, shall go free through the mails; but the same shall not be delivered at letter-carrier offices, or distributed by carriers, unless postage is paid thereon at the rate prescribed in section 13 of this act: Provided, That the rate of postage on newspapers, excepting weeklies, and periodicals not exceeding two ounces in weight, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, shall be uniform at one cent each; periodicals weighing more than two ounces shall be subject, when delivered by such carriers, to a postage of two cents each, and these rates shall be prepaid by stamps affixed.

SEC. 26. That all mail matter of the first class upon which one full rate of postage has been prepaid shall be forwarded to its destination, charged with the unpaid rate, to be collected on delivery; but postmasters, before delivering the same, or any article of mail matter upon which prepayment in full has not been made, shall affix, or cause to be affixed, and canceled, as ordinary stamps are canceled, one or more stamps equivalent in value to the amount of postage due on such article of mail matter, which stamps shall be of such special design and denomination as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, and which shall in no case be sold by any postmaster nor received by him in prepayment of postage. That in lieu of the commission now allowed to postmasters at offices of the fourth class upon the amount of unpaid letter-postage collected, such postmasters shall receive a commission upon the amount of such special stamps so canceled, the same as now allowed upon postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and newspaper and periodical stamps, canceled as postages on matter actually mailed at their offices: Provided, The Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, prescribe instead such regulation therefor at the offices where free delivery is established as, in his judgment, the good of the service may require.

SEC. 27. That any postmaster or other person engaged in the postal service who shall collect, and fail to account for, the postage due upon any article of mail-matter which he may deliver, without having previously affixed and canceled such special stamps, as hereinbefore provided, or who shall fail to affix such stamp, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of $50.

SEC. 28. That any person who shall use, or attempt to use, in payment of postage, any canceled postage-stamp or postage-stamps, whether the same have been before used or not, or who shall by any means remove, or attempt to remove, or assist in removing, marks from any postage-stamp or postage-stamps, with intent to use the same in payment of postage, or who knowingly shall have in his possession any postage-stamp or postage-stamps canceled, with intent to use the same, or from which such cancellation marks have been removed, or who shall sell or offer to sell any such stamp or stamps, or who shall use or attempt to use the same in payment of postage, or who shall remove the superscription from any stamped envelope or postal card that has once been used in the payment of postage, with intent to again use the same for a like purpose, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each offense, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 29. The provisions of the fifth and sixth sections of the act entitled "An act establishing post-routes, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, for the transmission of official mail matter, be, and they are hereby, extended to all officers of the United States Government, and made applicable to all official mail matter transmitted between any of the officers of the United States, or between any such officer and either of the Executive Departments or officers of the Government, the envelopes of such matter in all cases to bear appropriate indorsements containing the proper designation of the office from which the same is transmitted, with a statement of the penalty for their misuse. And the provisions of said fifth and sixth sections are hereby likewise extended and made applicable to all official mail matter sent from the Smithsonian Institution: Provided, That this act shall not extend or apply to pension agents or other officers who receive a fixed allowance as compensation for their services, including expenses for postage.

SEC. 30. That section 3955 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "The Postmaster-General, whenever he may deem it consistent with the public interest, may accept or require new surety upon any contract existing or hereafter made for carrying the mails, in substitution for and release of any existing surety."

SEC. 31. Any person performing the duties of postmaster, by authority of the President, at any post-office where there is a vacancy for any cause, shall receive for the term for which the duty is performed the same compensation to which he would have been entitled if regularly appointed and confirmed as such postmaster; and all services heretofore rendered in like cases shall be paid for under this provision.

SEC. 32. That so much of this act as is embraced in sections 4 to 30, both inclusive, shall take effect from the 1st day of May, 1879; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

WILLIAM A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
HIESTER CLAYMER,
JOHN H. BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the adoption of that report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS.

Mr. EDEN. I ask by unanimous consent to take up and dispose of a couple of bills returned from the Senate with amendments which will take but a few moments. It is necessary that they should be disposed of to enable the clerks to go to work on their engrossment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the bills to be read, after which he will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6362) making appropriation for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. EDEN. The amendments of the Senate simply correct clerical errors.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Do they add any new claims?

Mr. EDEN. None are added by the Senate amendments.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. How much will it take out of the Treasury?

Mr. EDEN. It is the same as when it passed the House. The amendments of the Senate, as I have already stated, are mere corrections of clerical errors.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury.

Mr. EDEN. The amendments of the Senate to this bill merely correct clerical errors. Nothing is added to the bill.

The amendments of the Senate were taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, presented the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the expenses of the committee to investigate frauds in the electoral count; which were referred to the Committee of Accounts.

STREET RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I present the following conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The report of the committee of conference on House bill No. 4579.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to sections 1 and 2, and the Senate recede from its amendment to section 3, with the following amendments:

Section 3, line 20, after the word "same," insert the word "proportionate."

Section 3, line 20, strike out the words "or less."

Section 3, line 20, after the word "charged," insert the following: "or may hereafter be charged."

WILLIAM CLAFLIN,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
G. W. HENDEE,
Managers on the part of the House.
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
E. H. ROLLINS,
A. S. MERRIMON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. CLAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST COMMISSIONER DAVENPORT.

Mr. LYNDE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report on the charges against Commissioner John I. Davenport in his capacity as chief supervisor of election; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now demand the regular order of business.
Mr. CONGER. There were some reports presented here which were not read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause them to be read.
Mr. SPRINGER. Unanimous consent was given to present those reports on condition they were not to be read.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. They ought to be read.
Mr. SPRINGER. I appeal to the record.

Mr. HANNA. We demand that they shall be read.
The SPEAKER. If any gentleman states that he objected at the time, the papers must be read.

Mr. CONGER. I called for the reading of the report at the time.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman did.

Mr. SPRINGER. No action was asked on those reports. They were simply made to be printed.

The SPEAKER. There can be no controversy that unanimous consent was given for their presentation and printing, but of course if that was done any member had the right to demand the reading of them.

Mr. CONGER. I have been waiting for months to hear that report. I desire very much to hear it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan said he gave no unanimous consent to waive the reading.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is nothing under the sun that would be more entertaining and instructive to gentlemen on the other side of the House than the reading of that report, and I am perfectly willing a special clerk shall be appointed to read it for them.

Mr. HANNA. We demand its reading.
Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Children are crying for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. If gentlemen on the other side wish to filibuster until the hour of adjournment to-morrow for the purpose of preventing one of their own party friends from being impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors they can do so, but they must take the responsibility for it before the country. [Cries of "Order!"]

The Sergeant-at-Arms, by the direction of the Speaker, went round the Hall with the mace, and members resumed their seats.

The SPEAKER. The House having reached a condition of good humor, the Chair hopes they will proceed with business. The report will be read.

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a question of order. I desire to have order in the House so that the gentleman from Michigan can hear this report read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes a request that gentlemen may be quiet; business will be transacted with a great deal more expedition.

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is there any rule governing the reading of the report, or the order of reading? Would it be proper to have read first the report that was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The SPEAKER. The first thing in order is the reading of the report of the committee.

Mr. McCOOK. Cannot the usual order be reversed?

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority of the committee only come in by consent, and not by any authority.

Mr. McCOOK. I concede that; but as they have been presented at the desk, I think we could get unanimous consent, perhaps, to have them read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we can get unanimous consent to print these reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be very glad if that consent should be given.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen are not serious in insisting on the reading of reports the reading of which would occupy three hours at least.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the House take a recess for an hour.

Mr. BALLOU. Is it in order to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing now?

Mr. SPRINGER. Consent to print has already been given by the House, and the papers are not now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to do any act which any one can complain of. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] states distinctly that he made the presentation of these reports contingent on his right to demand the reading. Now, how can the Chair take any other step than have them read?

Mr. BEEBE. There were twenty members here who consented to the presentation of the reports on the express ground that they were not to be read; so that they could not have got in except on that understanding. I made that condition, and other gentlemen standing here in front of me stated that if they were to be read they would not consent to their being received.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects that gentlemen so stated.

Mr. BEEBE. The chairman of the committee said they were not to be read.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the committee had no right to cut off the right of any member of this House to require the reading of the reports.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I gave my consent on the condition that the report should not be read.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] wishes to do so, he can withdraw the report.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I stated if the reports were to be read I objected, and it was on the condition they were not to be read I consented.

Mr. COX, of New York. What has become of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER?]

Mr. SPRINGER. He is here.

The SPEAKER. He stood there mute [laughter] and allowed this to come in.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have consented to nothing that interrupts this proceeding.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] will have to withdraw the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HANNA. I call for the reading of the reports. They are not withdrawn.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry: whether or not without the consent of the House it is competent now for the gentleman from New York to withdraw the report?

The SPEAKER. It is. The report at this time cannot come in except by consent. But the gentleman from New York the moment the pending subject is disposed of has the right to present the report under the order of the House creating the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the time when he ought to do it. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It will be reached immediately after the pending subject is disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen on the other side will not want to hear it so badly then.

Mr. CONGER. I thought that what the Chair decided to be a question of the highest privilege affecting the incumbency of the highest office in the nation could take precedence of this hybrid report of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department. Otherwise we have been misled as to the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets the gentleman from Michigan has been misled.

Mr. SPRINGER. If he has been misled it has been by the repeated assurance from that side that if time were allowed for discussion no filibustering motions would be made.

Mr. CONGER. There are no filibustering motions made. We are urging this thing forward with the united energy of the republican party.

Mr. SPRINGER. You are endeavoring to prevent a man confessedly guilty of an impeachable offense from being brought to a trial, and the country understands it.

Mr. HAYES. It is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] himself who is consuming time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I want the reading of those reports.

Mr. POTTER. I desire to say one word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York desires to make a statement.

Mr. POTTER. I offered this report after consultation with my republican colleagues on the committee with an understanding that it be agreed to on the other side of the House as well as upon ours, that the reports should be offered, and I stated when I offered the reports that I should not ask to have them read. Of course if there was a misapprehension about that and gentlemen now insist upon the reading of the reports there is nothing left for me but to withdraw the report, but I would suggest to the gentlemen that it is hardly worth while to keep myself and other members here all night, and that they can just as well consume the time by calling the roll as by reading these reports.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. One word in reply to my colleague. There seems to be some intimation on his part that I have done something wrong in asking for the reading of these reports. I wish to state here that I have tolerably good hearing and that all these wonderful assurances that are now sprung up on the other side of the House failed to reach my ears, and I presume that they have failed to reach the ears of any living mortal here. [Laughter and applause on the republican side.]

Mr. POTTER. I do not say that there was an assurance of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. I stated that there was an understanding between the members of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I had no understanding about it. I called for the reading of the reports under my rights as a member of this House, and I insist upon it now. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"] You may call for the regular order as much as you please, but you cannot prevent me from saying what I want to say.

Mr. POTTER. I withdraw the reports.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the resolutions of the committee in relation to the impeachment of George F. Seward.

Mr. REED. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if the Chair has decided that the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] has a right to withdraw the views of the minority which have been already received by unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The minority of a committee has no right to make a report except by the courtesy of the House.

Mr. REED. Precisely, but that courtesy was extended to the minority committee by unanimous consent, and the House is in the possession of the views of the minority, and a member asks that they be read, and under these circumstances has the gentleman representing the majority of the committee a right to withdraw the views of the minority?

The SPEAKER. If he had not it would be a case of the lesser controlling the greater.

Mr. REED. But the House decided to receive the views of the minority. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Has anybody a right to withdraw the views of the minority without the consent of the House? [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see any point of order in that. The House resumes the consideration of the resolutions proposing to impeach George F. Seward, and the question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY.]

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the articles of impeachment. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would save time to have them read.

Mr. CONGER. I have no doubt about it. [Loud cries of "Object."]

Mr. BEEBE. I object. I understand my colleague [Mr. POTTER] to have withdrawn the report.

The SPEAKER. Oh, the gentleman does not understand what the proposition is. The reading called for is not the reading of the report made by the gentleman from New York, but the articles of impeachment against Mr. Seward.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that the first question is upon the resolution of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY,] and I ask for a vote upon that question now.

Mr. SPARKS. Is it not competent to object to the reading of the articles of impeachment, and is not one objection sufficient?

Mr. CONGER. I ask again that the impeachment articles be read in the hearing of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has asked the House to allow that to be done, but gentlemen object.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Michigan can say for himself and his friends upon the other side of the House that as soon as the articles of impeachment are read they will allow a vote to be taken at once upon them without making any further delay, I will withdraw my objection to the reading; but the purpose seems to be to delay and prevent action until the 4th of March, and I object to that and I stand upon my rights here. We may as well meet the question at one point as at another, if the object is to defeat impeachment.

Mr. HANNA. They will be read, and you will never have them voted on. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. What's the matter with HANNA? [Laughter.] If it is in order for me to do so, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BUNDY. I think it due to me that I should be heard for one moment in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. MAYHAM. I object; debate is not in order. The gentleman has already occupied his time.

Mr. BUNDY. I have not risen to debate. [Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. There is objection, and the gentleman will recognize that the Chair has no discretion in the matter.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move that the House now take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. EDEN. Make it fifty minutes.

Mr. CONGER. Will you vote for it, then?

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has not the floor to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. There is no one entitled to the floor for debate, and pending the question on agreeing to the resolutions of the minority of the committee the gentleman has a right to make the motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. There is something wrong in this business.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to my friends squirming a little, but I want the question put on my motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. The squirming is on the other side. "Let the galled jade wince; our withers are unwrung."

The question was taken upon the motion for a recess; and upon a division there were—ayes 65, noes 101.

Before the result was announced, Mr. CONGER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, there being more than 30 in the affirmative; and Mr. CONGER and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed the following bills and joint resolution:

HALL'S SECOND ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the Senate, requesting the return by the House of the Senate concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the narrative of Hall's second arctic expedition.

There was no objection, and the request of the Senate was granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that the House now take a recess for thirty minutes, upon which tellers have been ordered and appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 57, noes 94.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STONE, of Michigan. My colleague, Mr. MCGOWAN, is paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HOUSE.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 5822) for the relief of Henry T. Fuller and others, sureties upon the official bond of William H. Waterman; and

An act (H. R. No. 4564) for the relief of A. F. Whitman, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Kimbro and E. V. Kimbro.

ENROLLMENT OF POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution to correct a clerical error in the report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, be directed to enroll the clause of said bill making appropriations for the transportation by railroad of the mails, so as to read as follows: "For transportation by railroad, $9,150,000; of which sum $150,000 may be used by the Postmaster-General to maintain and secure from railroads necessary and special facilities for the postal service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and $16,988.42 to pay the balance due for salary and expenses of the special commission on railway mail transportation;" and be also directed to correct the conference report on said bill to conform herewith.

There was no objection, and the resolution was considered and adopted.

REPORTS FROM PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. BALLOU. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to present privileged reports, which are important to every member of the House and important for the business of the country. These reports from the Printing Committee relate to the reports on agriculture, on Alaska, the Coast Survey, &c., and if they be not received now there may be no provision for printing these reports. I hope the reports will be received by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BANNING.) Is there objection? Mr. SPRINGER. If gentlemen on the other side will agree to take the vote on these other questions without delay, I will agree to anything. But as long as certain members of the House interpose dilatory motions and points of order for the purpose of defeating the purposes of the majority, I must object to everything that interferes with the regular business.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution reported by the minority of the committee.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BUNDY. I hope we shall come to a vote on that at once.

The question being taken, the resolution was declared not agreed to.

Mr. BUNDY called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUNDY and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 92.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 120, not voting 71; as follows:

So Mr. BUNDY's amendment was disagreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. BLAND is paired with Mr. METCALFE.

Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, is paired with Mr. WREN, and Mr. BUCKNER with Mr. CHITTENDEN. If present, Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. BUCKNER would vote "no."

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Mr. DICKEY is paired with Mr. VAN VORHES. If present, Mr. DICKEY would vote in the negative and Mr. VAN VORHES in the affirmative.

Mr. HENKLE. I am paired with Mr. SEXTON.

Mr. REA. I am paired with Mr. SAPP. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. FULLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HUNTER. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. COX, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. MONROE, is paired with Mr. CUTLER. If they were here, Mr. MONROE would vote "ay" and Mr. CUTLER would vote "no."

Mr. RYAN. I am paired with Mr. WILLIS, of New York.

Mr. STONE, of Michigan. My colleague, Mr. MCGOWAN, is paired with Mr. HOUSE.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. LANDERS is paired with Mr. CASWELL and Mr. COLE with Mr. WARNER.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT. If he were here, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. THOMPSON. I am paired with Mr. CLYMER. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I am paired with Mr. ELLSWORTH.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I am paired with Mr. ERRETT.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. WATSON is paired with Mr. BICKNELL.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. HISCOCK is paired with Mr. HUNTON.

Mr. DEAN. Mr. BRIDGES is paired with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. CLYMER is paired with Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. KNAPP is paired with Mr. BOYD.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. HANNA. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do this to save the clerks, who are worn out.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House take a recess until nine o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BALLOU. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON. Let the report from the Committee on Printing be presented.

Mr. BALLOU. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to present the following and recommend its passage—

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to any intervening business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the report cannot be received.

Mr. TIPTON. I move to amend the motion for a recess to, say, ten instead of nine o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire a vote on this question. We have reached the point when the merits of the proposition are to be voted on.

The SPEAKER. Pending that, the gentleman from Michigan demands a division of the articles of impeachment.

Mr. BUTLER. We want a vote on each article; some I want to vote for and some against.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask that members take their seats, so we may know what is going on.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; if the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan is held to be a matter of right for a separate vote on each article, and the yeas and nays are demanded, it would consume the balance of the time remaining of this session. I suggest, therefore, to my friend from Illinois that he abandon the contest in view of that demand. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to speak to the question of order.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will not abandon this case, for I desire we may vote on each article separately.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Do you demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. CONGER. There are some articles I desire to vote for and some I desire to vote against.

Mr. EDEN. If the gentleman will point out the ones he will vote for we will take a separate vote on them. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TIPTON,] that the House take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire, before that question is put, to ask the other side whether they insist upon dilatory motions by calling separate votes on each one of these articles with a view to consume the remaining time of the session?

Mr. CONGER. That is argument.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then gentlemen on the other side are obstructing the business of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Is it not competent to make a motion for a recess?

Mr. SPRINGER. We have now reached the point when we can vote on the merits of the question. I call for the regular order and for a vote, and yield to nothing.

Mr. COX, of New York. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE,] that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TIPTON] moves to amend so as to make the hour ten o'clock.

Mr. BALLOU. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot yield while there is objection.

CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE BLODGETT.

Mr. KNOTT. If we can have order, I would like to make a brief statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be seated, and the House will come to order.

Mr. KNOTT. I should like to prefer a request to the House for unanimous consent with regard to a matter which involves not only individual rights, but the public service. Some time ago the Committee on the Judiciary were directed to make an inquiry with regard to certain charges affecting the official conduct of Judge Blodgett, of the northern district of the State of Illinois. After a great deal of labor, and great personal inconvenience to themselves, the committee have discharged that duty. It is important that that report should be made.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of privilege. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky to call it up immediately after the disposition of the pending question of privilege.

Mr. KNOTT. I see that the pending question is not likely to be disposed of until twelve o'clock to-morrow. Personally I do not care whether the report is made or not. It is a matter of no consequence to me whatever.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to recognize the gentleman if he is permitted.

Mr. KNOTT. The proposition I have to submit to the House is simply this: that the report may now be submitted, printed in the Record, and printed in the ordinary way, and that the resolution, which is a very short one, and simply that the charges lie on the table, may be adopted by the House, so that we may be done with it. It can be done in two minutes. As it is a unanimous report of the committee, I suppose no objection will be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky shall make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. KNOTT. That closes the case.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now I desire to appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] to withdraw his motion for a recess, and let the vote be taken on the articles of impeachment.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Why should I withdraw it? Let the House vote it down if it pleases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TIPTON] to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, that the House take a recess until nine o'clock a. m.; and being put, there were yeas 11.

The SPEAKER. Is further count insisted on?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

The other side was counted, and there were 99 votes in the negative. Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WHITE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported one vote in the affirmative.

Cries of "No further count."

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir; I call for further count.

The count proceeded; and the tellers reported—yeas 18, noes 138. So the House refused to take a recess.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] asks for separate votes on the articles of impeachment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand the gentleman from Michigan will yield so that by general consent the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BALLOU] may make the very important reports he has in charge.

I trust there will be no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to understand whether it is the intention of the gentlemen on the other side to demand a division and a separate vote on each one of those articles.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to say a word on this subject of a separate vote. [Cries of "Regular order!"] This is regular, and it is a question of order. If the resolutions make a case against Mr. Seward for acts done as minister while in office, I will vote for his impeachment; but I will not vote for articles impeaching him for what he did as consul-general years and years ago. [Cries from the democratic side of "We will!"] It never has been done. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order, objection being made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he intends to call for a separate vote on each of these articles?

Mr. BUTLER. I do.

Mr. BALLOU. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not yield.

Mr. BALLOU. I ask if these reports cannot be made by general consent without prejudice to the gentleman from Illinois?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia; that it further insisted upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House, and asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. ROLLINS, and Mr. MERRIMON to be conferees on the part of the Senate.

STREET RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move that a further conference be asked with the Senate on the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] demands a division and a separate vote on the articles of impeachment.

Mr. SPRINGER. He is entitled to that under the rule, of course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the rule read.

Mr. SPARKS. Nobody doubts the rule; what is the use of reading it?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no necessity for reading; every member has a right to ask for a division on any question.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will not have the rule read. The question is upon the first article of impeachment.

The Clerk read the first article of the specifications.

Mr. SPRINGER. The question must first be put upon the first resolution. The specifications are not adopted until after the resolutions have been adopted. [Loud cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. GARFIELD. We cannot adopt the resolution until the articles have been adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. The resolutions are always first adopted in cases of this kind. I ask that the Clerk read the first resolution adopted by the committee, and you will then understand the purport of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George F. Seward, late consul-general of the United States of America at Shanghai, China, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to China, be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors while in office.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, unless the first resolution is passed there will be nothing upon which to predicate any other vote in reference to articles of impeachment.

The SPEAKER. This is the first division.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House resolves to impeach Mr. Seward, the next question will be, what will be the articles upon which he be impeached.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is quite mistaken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will call your attention to the precedents of the Belknap case, where the report made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was voted on immediately, and the resolution to impeach him: the matter was then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, who took the testimony of witnesses and brought in their report several days afterward.

Mr. GARFIELD. The precedent in courts-martial is worthy of something, and the first thing is a specification of guilty or not guilty, and then to the charge given, first, all the particulars, and then to the general charge under which the specifications come. If we pass the specifications and do not pass the resolution to impeach, where shall we be then?

Mr. SPRINGER. We never did that until the House resolved to impeach. The question is, shall he be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors.

The committee appointed by the Speaker takes the matters to the Senate, and then the articles of impeachment are subsequently brought in by the managers.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does not the gentleman see the ridiculous position we should be in if we should pass the resolution to impeach Mr. Seward, and then negative all the specifications?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is precisely what has been done in all cases heretofore.

Mr. GARFIELD. If we agree that the specifications are false, then the other falls as a necessary consequence.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will ask the gentleman as to the other part of his proposition. Suppose you adopt all the specifications and resolve not to impeach him?

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course that would be absurd.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the position you are trying to force the House into.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all; if we adopt one, two, or three of the articles and reject the rest, we still need a resolution providing for the carrying of these articles which we have adopted to the Senate, but if they were all rejected, then it would be manifestly absurd.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no precedent for voting on the articles of impeachment prior to voting on the resolutions to impeach, and I call for a vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must decline to answer any more questions; the time has come to vote.

The SPEAKER. This is really a matter of no great concern.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to know what you are going to impeach Mr. Seward for, so I may vote intelligently.

Mr. SPRINGER. You will find that out afterward.

Mr. HUMPHREY. You propose to impeach him and then take time to find out something to do it with.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have found that out and I call for a vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is bound, unless otherwise directed by the House, to have a vote called on the first proposition in the order in which they stand on the paper. They cannot put it on the bottom of the sheet to be voted upon afterward; we must commence at the top and vote downward.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object to debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. The last resolution of the series adopts the article of impeachment, when it will readily be seen that that resolution relates to these articles, and upon that resolution a division could be had in reference to these questions; but this being the first proposition to be voted upon, I ask the Speaker to put it to the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] if his proposition is not like that of Sir Roche Boyle, of Dublin, when he proposed to build a new prison, and use the materials of the old one to build the new one, and to keep the prisoners in the old prison until the new one was built? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman seems to be very much troubled about prisons. There are plenty of prisons already built, and we are trying to get the thieves into them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will state his authority for the statement which he has made, that the practice in all such cases is to vote first on the resolutions.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the Belknap case, and in the case of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have the precedents here.

Mr. GARFIELD. When the point is raised, we have the right to vote on these propositions in their order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have here the result in the case of the impeachment of General Belknap. It will be seen that on the 2d of March, 1876, Mr. CLYMER submitted a report, which is very brief, not covering a quarter of a column of the RECORD, and which concluded with the following resolution:

Resolved, That William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors while in office.

Then there was a second resolution directing that the evidence taken in the case be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to prepare and report suitable articles of impeachment, and a third resolution directing the appointment of five members of the House to proceed to the bar of the Senate and there impeach Secretary Belknap and request the Senate to take order in the premises.

These resolutions were adopted on the 2d of March, and it was not until several days afterward that the articles of impeachment were adopted. The evidence was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and they formulated the charges and submitted them afterward with a resolution that managers be appointed. That was not done for some time after the other resolutions were adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. That was perfectly regular; but this is presented in another form. The gentleman from Illinois comes in here and presents us with articles and specifications, concluding with a general resolution to carry these articles and specifications to the Senate as articles of impeachment. That is the programme he has presented here. It is like offering a series of resolutions; and the presiding officer is bound to put the question on the resolutions in their order on the paper which is presented. And we ask a vote first on the first specification.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read in addition an extract from the Manual.

Mr. GARFIELD. Furthermore, I understand that the resolution proposes to adopt all these specifications as one, so that if we vote on the resolution first we cannot have separate votes on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

The proceedings in the case of the impeachment of Judge Peck, in the Twenty-first Congress, were as follows:

The House having resolved that he be impeached for "high misdemeanors in office," it was ordered "that Mr. — and Mr. — be appointed a committee to go to the Senate, and at the bar thereof, in the name of the House of Representatives and of all the people of the United States, to impeach James H. Peck, judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Missouri, of high misdemeanors in office, and acquaint the Senate that the House of Representatives will in due time exhibit particular articles of impeachment against him and make good the same, and that said committee do demand that the Senate take order for the appearance of the said James H. Peck to answer to said impeachment."

The SPEAKER. The Manual confirms the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. On the point of order?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that point, but the Chair is quite willing to hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. SPRINGER. The previous question is operating.

Mr. CONGER. This case is entirely different from either the one referred to in the Manual or the one referred to by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is argument.

Mr. CONGER. I wish the gentleman had the modesty to keep quiet a moment until some one else could speak.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish the gentleman had the modesty after the Chair has decided the question to take his seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair withdrew the decision so as to allow the gentleman to be heard.

Mr. CONGER. And if the Chair could keep the irrepressible gentleman from Illinois down for a moment, I could go on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that they keep each other down. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I have been struggling to do that for days, and with some considerable amount of success.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COX, of New York. What is the point of order pending?

The SPEAKER. The point of order is as to the order of proceeding.

Mr. COX, of New York. I thought the Chair had decided that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had decided it, but the gentleman from Michigan desired to be heard briefly, and the Chair thought the most expeditious way was to allow him to be heard.

Mr. COX, of New York. These gentlemen have been arguing the matter all night with a view to delay.

Mr. BUTLER. And we propose to be heard, if in no other way than by our votes.

Mr. COX, of New York. You have been heard all day, and this is only an attempt to shield that which you dare not justify.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

[Mr. COX, of New York, crossed the Hall and went to the place where Mr. CONGER was standing, who put his hand on the head of Mr. COX and held it there for some time, causing great laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I came over here to suppress what the Speaker cannot, the indefatigable gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken. [Renewed laughter.] The Chair thinks that the gentleman does not desire further time. From the examples which have been cited, the Chair thinks that the resolutions should be first considered.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the Chair hold that after the resolutions have been acted upon the articles can then be voted on separately?

The SPEAKER. Then the division will apply to the articles.

Mr. GARFIELD. We will not have disposed of the matter until those are voted on?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know when they will be disposed of. The question now is on the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. BUNDY. And on that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I understand we are now called upon to vote on the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We have no evidence before us upon which to base our votes.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman thinks he has no evidence to justify his voting for the resolutions he can vote against them.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 16, not voting 165; as follows:

Mr. MAYHAM. I am paired with Mr. HENDEE, except there should fail to be a quorum present.

On motion of Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The vote is 109 to 16.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. No quorum voting.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move there be a call of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the conferees on the Army appropriation bill to submit a report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

ABRAM S. HEWITT,

WM. A. J. SPARKS,

CHAS. FOSTER,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. G. BLAINE,

WM. B. ALLISON,

WM. A. WALLACE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order. No quorum being present, we cannot receive that report.

Mr. BRAGG. There is no quorum present. We can only go by the record.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Nobody ever raises the question of a quorum on the report of a conference committee.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. If there is no quorum present on one subject, there is no quorum present on any.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again count the House to see whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order that the want of a quorum has been made evident by the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. All proceedings were vacated by the reception of the report from the conference committee.

Mr. BRAGG. That was after it was ascertained that there was no quorum present, and when there was nothing in order except the motion to adjourn or that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That was waived when the gentleman from New York was recognized to present a privileged report.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to make an inquiry. Did not the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SHELLEY] move that there be a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize that when we get back to the other subject.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Can the Chair receive a report from the committee of conference without a quorum?

Mr. FRANKLIN. The gentleman from Alabama moved that there be a call of the House, and it was incompetent to receive the report.

The SPEAKER. It requires a quorum to act on it.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. In the absence of a quorum is anything else in order but the motion to adjourn or that there be a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York to submit his report.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. But before that the point of order was made that there was no quorum, and the Chair virtually sustained that point by failing to announce the vote.

The SPEAKER. The proceedings under that were suspended to receive the report from the committee of conference.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. That cannot be done, because there was no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can again count the House. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose there was but one man in the House—

The SPEAKER. This cannot be determined by a supposition.

Mr. BRAGG. I go by the records, which show there is not a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not count a quorum. The Chair will count over again. Some gentlemen have come in since.

The Speaker again counted the House, and announced that one hundred and thirty-eight members were present; the number being less than a quorum.

Mr. BOUCK. There are a dozen more on the lounges.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House has been moved, and pending that the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.] The Chair directs the following to be read from the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

The report of a committee of conference is, under the practice of the House, so highly privileged that it has been held to be in order even pending a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. There has been no motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. There was a motion for a call of the House, and the Chair entertained it.

Mr. BRAGG. Was not the motion for a call of the House in consequence of the want of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. What else would it be for except for the want of a quorum?

Several members called for the regular order.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee of conference will be again read.

The report was again read.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will state to the House what have been the points of disagreement in the committee of conference.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will try to do it.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the part of the Senate and on the part of the House are in no disagreement as to any questions of money involved in this bill. The bill was so carefully matured in the House that but few amendments were offered in the Senate, and the conferees on the part of the Senate were promptly willing to recede from those amendments, on hearing the proper explanation; so that I am able to say if other matters could have been arranged this bill could have been reported to the House without the addition of a single dollar, except for a military post which had been recommended subsequently to the passage of the bill by the House.

There were, however, two points of disagreement in the bill.

The bill provided for the reorganization of the Army in many clauses which were added after full consideration here, as the House will remember. Those clauses were only informally discussed by the conferees. Practically they were passed over in order to see if an agreement could be arrived at on the final provision of the bill in regard to the presence of the troops at the polls. It was very soon apparent that upon this point no agreement was likely to be reached.

I think I can state without impropriety that there would have been no difficulty in arranging for such a reorganization of the Army as would have been satisfactory to this House and to the Senate. Both sides professed their willingness to accommodate themselves to the pressing and admitted necessity which exists for a reorganization of the Army.

But upon the other point, as to whether it shall continue to be lawful for troops to be present at the polls under any circumstances, the difference seemed to be irreconcilable. The conferees on the part of the Senate declined to assent to the repeal of so much of the two sections of the Revised Statutes as authorize troops to be present at the polls. The issue, therefore, was fairly and clearly defined. On the one side we insisted that the time had come when it should no longer be lawful for a soldier to be at the polling place on the day of election. Upon the other side it was insisted with equal force that this provision of the statute should be maintained, and the power should remain in the executive to order the troops to the polls on the day of election if in his judgment it was necessary to preserve the peace.

Mr. Speaker, this presents an issue which involves the very essence of free government. The difference between a despotic government and a free government is this: that in a despotism the military power is superior to the civil; in a free government the civil dominates the military power. And this principle was one which we never fought for; it came to us as an inheritance from our fathers. It was so well recognized that when the Constitution was formed it was not even deemed necessary to insert an article to that effect. But as a protection against military interference provision was made that citizens might bear arms, and that no soldiers should be quartered upon them without their consent. No English-speaking man for two hundred years has questioned the principle that soldiers should never be present at the polls; and the question could never have been raised in this country, the demand could never have been made in our land, but for the unhappy calamity of a civil war. In time of civil war all political rights must be surrendered to the necessities of the conflict. And so it was here. We surrendered the right we had inherited, and which up to that hour we had exercised, that no soldier should show himself at the polls. We surrendered that safeguard as we surrendered many other things that were dear to us. A convertible currency, specie payments, almost every traditional right, disappeared in the presence of the great danger with which we were confronted.

Now, for fifteen long years we have been striving to recover that lost ground. We have made gigantic efforts, sacrifices such as the world never saw, to get back to the resumption of specie payments; and yet we have done nothing for the resumption of our political rights, the rights which lie at the very foundation of this Government.

The time has come to recover this lost ground, and I think it is a reproach to our patriotism that the resumption of specie payments should have preceded the resumption of the rights necessary for the preservation of free government. It is an imputation upon this liberty-loving people and its representatives that they have allowed the time to pass by until now, when the question is finally about to be settled in this bill, and in another bill, the result of the conference on which will soon be reported to this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, can we surrender this question? Would we be justified by the people of this country, now that the issue has been raised in conceding the principle in time of profound peace, fifteen years after the close of a civil war, that soldiers may be ordered by the executive power to the polls on the day of election? I, Mr. Speaker, of all men in this House am most anxious that there shall be no extra session; I have everything to lose and nothing to gain by it. All that I have in the world is engaged in business operations which are always damaged by extra sessions of Congress. I am sure I speak the voice of the industrial interests of this country when I say they want this Congress to go in peace. But, Mr. Speaker, there are things greater than money, greater than profits—without which money disappears and profits are an illusion—things for which men have sacrificed fortunes and family and life in every age of the world, and the greatest of all is the right of self-government. And this question in this bill lies at the very foundation of the struggle for civil liberty which has lasted since governments were founded and survives, as this scene bears witness, to this very hour. Let me say that the recovery of these rights is almost as difficult as their establishment. If when this opportunity comes once and is passed by unheeded, then rarely does the opportunity come a second time. If the provision authorizing the presence of troops at the polls shall remain upon our statute-books, when an unscrupulous Executive—and we may have such a one—shall occupy the presidential chair with his power to control the troops at the polls, the people of this country will never elect his successor. That danger confronts us. We are asked why we press this issue now. We press it now because we have had an admonition that when the Army bill failed in the Forty-fourth Congress the Army was maintained without law for months, nearly to the time of the next election, before Congress was called together and provision could be made for its support.

Unless the provision for which we have made so zealous a struggle goes into this bill, if the Army exists on the 30th day of June, 1880, then under the precedent we have seen the Army can be continued without law till the next political election. If there should be a disposition—and I trust there will be none—but if there should be a disposition to use the Army for political purposes, it will be impossible ever again, in my judgment, to elect a President of the United States by the voice of the people.

It is for that reason that conferees on the part of the House have felt themselves constrained to plant themselves firmly upon the ground that they would never yield this provision, and I trust that they will be sustained by the unanimous voice of the House.

The issue thus made is one which we are ready to accept before the country. Let the people decide whether they are prepared to surrender the sacred right of untrammelled suffrage which this bill seeks to guard, and the provisions which in the legislative bill are designed to maintain unimpaired the trial by jury, which is the great achievement of our race. Unless the blood which courses in our veins has degenerated from the vital fluid which has made the Anglo-Saxon people great and free, I cannot doubt the result of the appeal which I now make to the country. [Loud applause on the democratic side of the House and in the galleries.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and further insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 20, and asked for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DORSEY, Mr. FERRY, and Mr. WALLACE the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from New York has very correctly stated the disagreement of the conference committee so far as he knew it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Before my colleague proceeds, I desire to make a motion for the previous question.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that I will yield to the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York has been on one conference committee, that of the Army bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will suspend. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was listened to with great attention by gentlemen upon the other side of the House, and the Chair thinks it only fair that the gentleman from Ohio should be listened to with equal attention upon the opposite side of the Chamber.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from New York, as I was remarking, has been on the conference committee on the Army bill alone. Fortunately or unfortunately for me, I have been on the conference committees of both of the bills where these political questions arise, and I can say to the House that so far as my own action is concerned I think I have fully realized the importance of trying to come to an agreement on these bills and save the country the annoyance of an extra session.

With this feeling I offered what I thought was a fair basis of compromise, or settlement if you please, which included the question which is now before the House. That basis was something like this: that the republican side of the House would agree to the proposition that is embraced in this Army bill, and would agree further to what is known as the jury clause in the legislative bill; and that the democrats should recede from what is known as the supervisors and marshals clause in the legislative bill.

Mr. ATKINS. If my friend will allow me; I do not like to interrupt him. He is speaking of the conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Does my friend confine his remarks to himself, or does he speak of other members of the conference?

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking of the proposition that I made.

Mr. ATKINS. For yourself?

Mr. FOSTER. For myself. We were informed in conference by our democratic friends that they could not yield anything. Now, while I have no right to speak here of what the Senators might have done on this question, yet upon my own responsibility I am willing to say that I believe if this basis of settlement had been agreed to by our democratic friends an agreement would have been reached.

For myself I care but little about this proposition in the Army bill. I do not know but that the time has about come when we perhaps ought to agree to it, though I am not quite ready for it yet. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has said a great deal about English-speaking people and the liberty-loving traits of their character. Sir, I think we republicans are as much in love with liberty as are the English people or as my friend from New York. I have yet to learn from any responsible source that the troops ever prevented any single voter from voting as he pleased. On the contrary they have assisted hundreds and thousands of poor people to vote, who otherwise could not have voted.

We republicans are not quite ready to yield to all these demands. And what is the nature of these demands? Are you going to force us to repeal these laws by provisions on an appropriation bill? I know we have had a great deal of discussion about legislation upon appropriation bills. It has been said that the republicans in times past have been in the habit of legislating upon appropriation bills. I agree to that, and for myself I cannot see any great harm in legislating upon appropriation bills when both Houses agree to it.

But this proposition never was brought into this House as an independent measure. You never sought to have it passed through this House and sent to the Senate as an independent measure. But you come in here with this proposition on an appropriation bill, and you undertake through the means of an appropriation bill to force the proposition upon the Senate. There, in my judgment, is where the wrong of legislating upon appropriation bills comes in.

I have been as anxious as my friend from New York or any other gentleman could be to reach a conclusion. I have worked for it steadily. The only propositions that have come from anybody, so far as relate to a basis of settlement, have come from republicans. But our democratic friends stood like adamant in refusing to concede one single thing, refusing to dot an i or cross a t; and that left nothing for us to do but to agree to disagree.

You gentlemen on the other side will have the next Congress. You can repeal these laws by means of bills passed in the regular form. If the President should see fit to veto them, you can then put them upon appropriation bills and probably force him to take them.

There will be no election between now and 1880, except in California, to be affected by these laws; and I want to say to gentlemen on the other side, and I think I speak for my friends on this side, that we are willing to make an exception of California for the purpose of reaching a settlement.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. Does that exception mean that you will send no troops to California?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Oh, dear! [Laughter.]

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. We do not ask the gentleman to make any exception for California.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my constituent [laughter] that what I mean is that we would agree to incorporate a provision in the bill excepting the State of California from the operation of these laws next year.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. That is exactly what I asked.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the only State that votes before 1880. Why this haste? Why do you sit here and propose to defeat two of the most important appropriation bills for the purpose of gaining this single point which you can gain just as easily next year when you will have both Houses of Congress? You cannot use it before then if you get them.

And my friend from New York is in trouble about a veto next year and about the President having shown his ability once to maintain the Army for six months, and that he may do it again. I want to say to my friend from New York that the President can veto this bill now just as easily as he could one like it next year. There can be nothing in that argument.

You simply propose to make an issue here and crowd down the throats of the republican party this special legislation. Now, in the interest of the people of this country, in order to save them from the annoyance and loss of an extra session of Congress, which is always a damage to the country even when the republican party is in power, we propose to save the annoyance of an extra session of Congress controlled by democrats. [Laughter.]

Mr. SOUTHWARD. Had not my colleague better introduce a resolution for a suspension of the rules and an entire abolition of Congress?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the people of this country, just at this time, would hail that with a great deal of satisfaction. [Laughter.]

Now, I do not know that I want to extend this debate any further at this time. On our side we have, I think, offered everything that we possibly could for the sake of securing a basis of settlement—a basis which I believe at one time my friend from New York and many other gentlemen on that side were willing to accept. But I am told—I guess there is no truth in it—that the Speakership contest enters into this controversy; that the Bourbon elements have got control of the other side of the House and have bulldozed my friend from New York and others into taking a strong position on this question; but I do not believe that. [Laughter.] I yield to my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I accept the courtesy of the gentleman—

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. How much time does the gentleman from Ohio want?

Mr. GARFIELD. Five minutes, perhaps.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether debate is in order.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. COBB. I am getting tired of sitting here doing nothing.

The SPEAKER. Debate is in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it is only just that the precise situation of this legislation and the fair relation of all parties to it should be perfectly understood. It has been quite fully stated on both sides, but I desire to enlarge a little upon one or two features of what has been said.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has certainly drawn very largely upon what, if I should follow his example, would be my imagination, in his statement that the liberties of this country are now in danger or ever have been in danger from the legislation embraced in the two clauses of the sections of the statutes proposed to be repealed by this legislation. I admit that in a monarchical country like England, especially as England was in the days when their first army law passed, there was danger, great danger, in giving any considerable power to the army. But in a country like ours, where the Legislature controls the purse of the nation, it can freeze the Army to death when it chooses. In a country like ours, where the Chief Magistrate is liable to be impeached for any serious violation of law, for any malfeasance or misfeasance on the part of any military officer, where the whole spirit of the Government is civil, and the military is completely subordinated, it seems to me that the alarms which my friend from New York raises are wholly imaginary.

Now gentlemen ought to bear in mind what these two sections are. They ought to remember in the first place the time when they were passed and the object for which they were passed. It ought to be borne in mind that both the sections sought to be modified in this appropriation bill are restraining sections—sections indeed leveled against the Army—one of them laying heavy penalties upon any soldier, whether enlisted man or officer, who may in any way interfere with the freedom of elections.

Notice the language of these sections:

Sec. 3502. No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

Sec. 3525. Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years.

Gentlemen talk as though these sections had been adopted to empower the Army to interfere with the freedom of elections. On the contrary they were in precisely the opposite direction. It should be remembered that these sections were enacted in 1865, when the roar of battle was still in our ears; when our guns were still smoking; when none of the States in rebellion had been reconstructed; when none of them had been restored to their place in the circle of the Union; when all was chaos; when from governor down to the humblest officer in every one of those States there was no one that bore in the new order of things any recognized authority; when even the machinery for the service of ordinary civil process had all to be set up anew; when by the necessity of the case the military occupation of all that part of the country was indispensable even in the view of the most extreme opposers of the Union. It was at that time, when our Government was seeking to restore civil authority in the place of the chaos that the war had left, when it was necessary to have armies all through that portion of the country—it was at such a time that the victorious Government in the interest of liberty put up these muniments and armaments against any aggression of the military upon the right of electors by saying to them: "You shall obstruct no man in his free right to the suffrage. If you do, imprisonment and fine shall be visited upon the officer or man who may do it." That is what those laws were for, and that is what they are to-day—laws restrictive of the military power with exception of the single clause which does not prohibit them from keeping the peace at the polls. Is that a wrong; an act of tyranny? Perhaps the law is now as necessary as it was in 1865. I am free to admit for one that these enactments were passed at a period so different from the present that probably we can without serious harm in any direction muster them out, as we mustered out of service the victorious armies when the war was done. For myself, I see no serious practical objection to letting these sections go, though I do not quite see how anybody can say that while a State may call out its own militia to keep the peace at its own polls, (and nobody calls that tyranny, nobody calls that wickedness, injustice, and a menace to civil liberty,) so it seems to me that a nation when it has its own elections, which its own Constitution says it may regulate as to the time, place, and manner of holding them, may with great propriety use its own military force to keep the peace at its own national polls. That is all there is in these two sections that any gentleman has complained of. Now I believe as a matter of fact no one will say that any citizen during the thirteen years and more that this law has stood on our statute-book has been denied the full and free exercise of the elective franchise in consequence of the presence of armed soldiers of the United States near the polls. If there has been such a case, I will join with any man of any party in deprecating it, in deploring it, in doing what I can to prevent its recurrence.

But lest it should be a rock of offense and a stone of stumbling to any man in this country, I for one would be willing to let it go out of the law rather than even appear to sin against the liberty of the citizen. Whether our appropriations fail or pass depends upon three things. We are confronted with three propositions that gentlemen on the other side have put upon the appropriation bills; and I may be permitted to repeat them in a word. First, this one which I have already discussed is on the military bill; second, the repeal of the juror test oath, which is on the legislative bill; and, third, the repeal of the election sections on the same bill. These are three, and the only three, things that prevent us from closing our work and shaking hands at twelve of the clock to-morrow, with the session ended and the work of Congress to be resumed only in December next.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to allow me a few moments longer.

Now, I say, Mr. Speaker, for my separate self, and I believe I speak the sentiment of a very large number of gentlemen around me, that to save the country from the evils of an extra session I am willing, and I have not hesitated to express myself to both sides in conversation the last three days—for all law is the result of a compromise, unless it is passed by a unanimous vote—I for one am willing to abandon the first two of these differences, to give up the clauses in relation to the use of the Army and to give up the jurors' test oath, if the other side will abandon the attempt to repeal the election laws.

On this latter subject I stated my opinions fully when it was first under debate. I said then, and I say now, we will not allow the repeal to pass this Congress. From that position we will not recede. But in that debate, while I said we would use all our constitutional power to prevent these laws from being swept from the statute-books, I was careful not to state that I would consume the remainder of the session in resisting the passage of the election law through this House. Why? Because I am so far loyal to the body of which I am a member that I admit that a majority of this House has a right to adopt such measures as they choose in conformity with the Constitution and the rules of the House. But now the situation is wholly different. There is another branch at the other end of this Capitol co-ordinate and coequal with ourselves, and this House has no right whatever to force its opinions upon that House and, on our part, declare that we will yield nothing. I think it fair and honorable and just that if one side yields two of these points the other should yield one. Even now, far into the morning of the last day of the session, if a fair spirit of adjustment were manifested, our conference committees may meet and give us these bills for the support of the Government, with no dishonor to either, and with no real or fancied grievances on the other side which they will not have even more ample time than now to correct long before any national election is held.

Whether this will be done depends upon gentlemen on the other side. From the first they have manifested a determination to force their views recklessly and roughly not only upon the minority here but upon the majority in the other House. This will be seen by the insolent tone of the paper which has given voice to their purposes and methods. I read from its issue of Saturday morning, though feeling that an apology is needed for repeating its vulgar and indecent spirit:

We are authorized to state, for the benefit of Mr. HAYES and his miserable gang, and for the information of any possible democrat who may hesitate or feel weak in the knees, that, if the worst comes to the worst, there is an organization in the House, embracing eighty-odd men, pledged upon their honor to stand by Mr. SOUTHWARD and filibuster out the remaining thirty hours of the session, rather than let the legislative, executive, and judicial bill pass without repealing the election law. The fraud in the White House and his pals are welcome to whatever comfort they can extract from this information.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. What paper have you read from?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is from the Washington Post of this morning, in which its party programme for the day's congressional work is announced. I should be glad to know that is not the truth. I should be glad to find that in spite of this we may still honorably finish the public business intrusted to our hands and let the country enjoy for a few months the blessings of our silence.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. What party has been filibustering during this evening's session?

Mr. REED. No party has filibustered on appropriation bills.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The party on your side of the House has done the entire filibustering.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I now call for a vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from New York to do me the fairness to give me what he has already promised me, an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SOUTHWARD. My name has been mentioned, and I hope I may be heard.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York has yielded to two on the other side, and we on this side have a right to be heard.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York has uttered a truthful sentiment here, which is creditable to him. He has mentioned the fact that during the late civil war the people of this country did surrender many things, one of which was specie payments. Another surrender of the people of this country was to a large extent their constitutional liberty. He has also announced that we have resumed specie payments; but we have not yet resumed our liberties. I have no more to say upon that point, except to say the time has arrived for a resumption of our liberties. I want now further to call the attention of this House to the spectacle which has been presented here to the American people during the past few days.

Why is it that there is an extra session imminent? It is because gentlemen upon the other side of the House, since last Saturday, have been filibustering and obstructing legislation in order to screen a man holding an exalted position as a representative of the Government abroad from punishment who is charged with high crimes and misdemeanors. There are some other issues before us to which I will refer. Let me call your attention to the fact that an appropriation bill making provision for postal expenses has been in a conference committee and there is a disagreement upon it. Why? Because the Senate, a republican body, has said to the House, "Unless you yield to us a scheme for subsidizing the Brazilian steamship line there shall be an extra session." Another issue is presented before the country upon the Army bill, when it is insisted we have reached that period of peace in the country when soldiers should be taken from the polls in order that we may have free elections, a republican Senate says to us in plain language it will force an extra session before the authority to use troops at the polls shall be repealed. The point, then, that the Senate makes upon us here, as uttered by the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER and Mr. GARFIELD] here to-night, is that in reference to the bill providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, there shall be no repeal of laws which provide for the appointment of republican recruiting sergeants at the polls in the shape of deputy marshals and supervisors. I want to state the fact before the House and the country that the democratic side of this House has not been guilty of resorting to filibustering or any means of obstructing legislation in order to provoke an extra session. If an extra session shall be found necessary, it is because the republican party is obstructing legislation, and because the democratic party is standing up here for free elections and against the Brazilian subsidy. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Now, one other point. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] uttered a sentiment which, in my judgment, finds an echo in the hearts not only of the minority in this House, but in the hearts of the majority of the party to which he belongs, when he says he desires that the Congress of the United States, the representative body of the people, should be abolished. What would follow? A monarchical form of government. [Laughter on the republican side.] Let me say one word to my democratic friends. You stand here to-day upon these important issues before the country; you are compelled to decide whether you will surrender free elections; you are called upon to decide whether you will surrender to monopolists and subsidy-schemers; you are compelled to face the Senate to-day upon these important propositions. Surely there is not a man here who calls himself a democrat who will not stand firm upon these issues until adjournment of this session in support of these propositions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SOUTHARD.]

Mr. SOUTHARD. We have here a proposition for compromise from the opposite side of the House. They propose that they will yield the use of troops at the polls and the test oath, and that we shall yield the marshals and supervisors, but they say in the same breath that they do not care anything about the question of troops at the polls and are willing to yield that. They said in the beginning they did not care anything about the test oath and were willing to yield that. But the real battle-ground is upon the marshals and supervisors of elections, and now they generously tender to this side of the House that they will give up nothing and that we must give up everything. The position taken by the republicans is necessitating an extra session of Congress upon the country. For what purpose? Let it be distinctly understood here and in the country: first, because they insist upon the use of the Army at the polls; second, because they insist upon the test oath for the purpose of packing juries; third, because they insist on a body of electioneers at the polls in the shape of supervisors and marshals, to be paid out of the Treasury and to be used in the interest of the republican party. These are the three questions upon which the parties are divided.

I say these three propositions are embraced in, first, doing away with the presence of soldiers at the polls; second, the abolition of the test oath, and third, doing away with marshals and supervisors on and before the day of election. It is the question of the freedom of election and the non-presence of hired and bribed agents to work for a particular political party.

Now, it has been said that this side of the House—and my name has been mentioned in connection with it—are determined to filibuster to enforce the repeal of these obnoxious statutes. In response, I want to say that we have no occasion to filibuster; we have the majority and we stand here as one man, with not a single solitary exception, determined to maintain these rights at all hazards.

An extra session will bring annoyance, it is said, and bring large expense. An extra session will not bring the amount of expense that is brought by the salary of these marshals and supervisors. Five hundred thousand dollars will not pay the bill for your marshals and supervisors and your courts incident to them. A less amount will pay the expense of an extra session of Congress.

Since at the next session we will have an opportunity to repeal these laws, it is asked why insist upon it now? If we will have the opportunity to repeal them at the next session why does that side of the House resist their repeal now?

Mr. GARFIELD. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Not if my time is not extended.

Several MEMBERS. We will extend your time.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Then, I will answer the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has control of the time.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman speaks of the expense of this law, of that part of it which results from the prosecution and punishment of persons who violated the election laws by fraudulent voting. Does he not think that money should be expended?

Mr. SOUTHARD. The expense resulting from the interference of these marshals and deputies should not be paid, and it amounts to a very large sum. That together with the expense of the supervisors and marshals will amount to a great deal more than the cost of an extra session of Congress could possibly amount to.

Mr. REED. What an answer that is.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Let us have punishment for crime if crime is committed. But the purity of elections cannot be protected by keeping agents there to watch voters and interfere with voters before the act of voting.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. How much time is there remaining of the hour?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the demand of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] for the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. On what?

The SPEAKER. On the motion to insist upon the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend that by asking for a further conference.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not yield for that.

Mr. SINGLETON. I would be very much pleased to have a few minutes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. How much time is left?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I yield two and a half minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON.]

Mr. SINGLETON. The effect of these laws upon the people of the South is very different from that upon the people of the North. Under these laws as they now stand upon your statute-book the marshals have a right to appoint any number of deputies they may think proper, and they invariably select men of their own political party.

A MEMBER. Not always.

Mr. SINGLETON. They are at least antagonistic to the white people of the South. They are generally men who have very little standing, often illiterate colored men, or if white, those who have not ordinarily as much brains as would lie upon your thumb-nail. Let me say to you in all truth, however unpalatable it may be to republican taste, that these white men who are opposed to our people and willing to officiate in this capacity are under the ban of society. Whenever such men are selected by the marshals, they are selected because of their known antipathy to our white citizens, and their readiness to do the will of their masters. They therefore go to the ballot-box with their prejudices against our people and to persecute them to the bitter end.

Mr. RANDOLPH. They ought not to be allowed to vote, ought they?

Mr. SINGLETON. They are vested with power to arrest any man, not upon affidavit, but upon mere suspicion that he is endeavoring to obstruct proper voting. They are not required to wait for an affidavit or for proper proof to show that such an attempt is being made, but in their ignorance or prejudice arrest at their own volition. Should they see the best citizen talking in an earnest manner with a colored voter, or remonstrating with him as to his vote, as he might do with another white man, they have the power to take him from the polls at once and carry him before a commissioner or before a United States judge, no matter how far distant he may be removed from home and friends. The judge or commissioner is of the same stripe of politics, and unless the prisoner should happen to have friends at that particular point he is at once ordered to jail because he cannot give the required bail. Now, this is happening almost every day. And when the time comes around for trial, how does it operate? The prisoner is in the hands of a marshal who summons a jury to suit himself. No respectable white man in the South can serve on that jury unless he can take the oath that he neither gave aid, comfort, nor countenance to his dearest relative during the war. Thus the jury is made up of men whose sympathies are all against the prisoner, and conviction follows in every case. Call you this liberty? If so, what, in your republican vocabulary, do you call slavery? With judge, marshal, district attorney, jury, and witnesses, all of one political faith and interested in one result, namely, the supremacy of the republican party, what hope is there of securing the ends of justice? Such trials have been worse than mockery. The forms of law have been prostituted to malicious party ends. Perjury on the part of witnesses has been added to perjury on the part of jurors, and the republican party has greatly rejoiced at convictions had under such circumstances.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SINGLETON. If I am allowed to do so I will answer it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not the fact that a large number of people arrested under these laws in Mississippi have confessed themselves guilty?

Mr. SINGLETON. Yes, because they have been compelled to do so from the persecutions to which they were subjected; because they chose rather to do it and face the penalty than remain in jail.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the previous question is seconded, will that cut off all amendments and prevent the possibility of any further action on this bill? And I desire to ask further if the purpose is to effect that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing of the purpose.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment to the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it in order to move to amend that so as to ask for a further committee of conference?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not yield for that.

Mr. GARFIELD. Can it be done afterward?

Mr. SAYLER. It can be done by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Senate can ask for a further conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will it be in order after the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is agreed to for the House to ask for a further conference?

The SPEAKER. Agreeing to the motion disposes of the subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I trust the gentleman will allow an amendment that the House ask for a further conference.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I decline to yield.

The motion of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, was then agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARREARS OF PENSION.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table the arrears of pension bill, with the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I object.

Mr. SPARKS. I will state that these amendments are merely formal.

Mr. THOMPSON. Send them up, and let us hear them.

Mr. TUCKER. I object.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question again on agreeing to the resolution presented by the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department. When the question was taken a quorum did not vote.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 99, noes 1.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to inquire whether gentlemen on the other side want to fritter away the few remaining hours of this session?

Mr. LUTTRELL. Members on the republican side who sit in their seats and refuse to vote are responsible for this waste of time.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentlemen on the other side of the House who are refusing to give us a quorum will withdraw the point of order as to a quorum and allow the resolution to stand as having been adopted, I will yield the floor for other business.

Mr. CONGER. In other words, when the gentleman has gained all he wants he is willing to surrender.

Mr. SPRINGER. I recognize the fact that it is within the power of the minority here, by refusing to vote and by interposing dilatory motions, to prevent the action of the House upon this question. I do not desire to prevent the passage of some measures which my friends here feel that their constituents are demanding should be passed before this Congress adjourns. [A voice, "Don't give up!"] I do not give up anything; but when members who were sent here to perform their duties feel justified (I do not question their right to do as they think fit) in staying here and refusing to vote, or interposing dilatory motions against the transaction of proper and legitimate business in this House, I do not desire to persist in a position that will prevent necessary legislation.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, what is the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department. When the vote was last taken no quorum voted.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to refer the whole matter to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have voted that down once.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to find out what is the regular order. What disposition of the question does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] propose?

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that the message from the Senate in reference to the Post-Office appropriation bill be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; that it further insist upon its amendments to said bill, disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and ask a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. DORSEY, Mr. FERRY, and Mr. WALLACE be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. BAKER of Indiana, as the conferees on the part of the House.

STREET RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House consent to the request of the Senate for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. CLAFLIN, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. HUNTON as the conferees on the part of the House.

IMPEACHMENT OF GEORGE F. SEWARD.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the resolution reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 2, not voting 182; as follows:

During the above roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BELL. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is paired with Mr. BAGLEY. If present, Mr. HARRIS would vote "ay."

Mr. MORSE. I am paired with Mr. BRENTANO.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Mr. ROSS is paired with Mr. OVERTON.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Mr. DICKEY is paired with Mr. VAN VORHES. If present, Mr. VAN VORHES would vote "no" and Mr. DICKEY "ay."

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Mr. STEELE is paired with Mr. CALKINS. If present, Mr. STEELE would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I am paired with Mr. ERRETT. If Mr. ERRETT were present, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with Mr. HAZELTON. If he were present, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ROBERTS. My colleague, Mr. WALSH, is paired with Mr. REED.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, who is detained from the House by sickness, is paired with Mr. JONES, of Ohio.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. THROCKMORTON, who is absent on account of sickness, is paired with Mr. O'NEILL.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am paired with Mr. CLYMER, who is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. MONROE, is paired with Mr. CUTLER. My colleague, Mr. NEAL, is paired with Mr. JONES, of Alabama. If present, my two colleagues would vote in the negative.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. WRIGHT is paired with Mr. DWIGHT.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. SAPP is paired with Mr. REA. I do not know how either would vote.

Mr. JORGENSEN. Mr. DAVIS, of California, is paired.

Mr. BAGLEY. I am paired on all questions to-night with Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The vote is 102 yeas to 2 nays.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum voting.

Mr. POTTER. It is very evident from the action of gentlemen on the other side of the House that it will be utterly impossible for the gentleman from Illinois to secure a quorum with which to pass the resolution, and I desire under the circumstances to inquire of him whether he has not discharged his whole duty in pressing his resolution to this point? It is physically impossible to compel gentlemen on the other side of the House to vote, even if they were compelled under the rules to attend. Since they have seen fit to take the ground that they will not permit themselves to be recorded as present; since we cannot procure a majority on our side of the House, it is folly to consume time and prevent the transaction of other necessary business, and I ask the gentleman whether his whole duty has not been discharged and whether he is not prepared to permit other business to go on.

Mr. WADDELL. I submit that there are other gentlemen besides the gentleman from New York who have a duty to perform.

Mr. COX, of New York. And there are gentlemen besides the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. POTTER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to offer a privileged report for no other purpose than to have it printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman to make his report.

Mr. BUNDY. Regular order!

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are a number of gentlemen who have measures on the Speaker's table which they desire to reach and have action on before the adjournment, and I am satisfied that it is the fixed determination of the minority in the House to break up a quorum whenever this question is called.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has no right to make that statement. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I do make it.

Mr. CONGER. You have no right to make it. Your action is louder than your words.

Mr. GOODE. Let the other side have the responsibility.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. You have tried to imprison him and then to impeach him, and now I will recommend you to take up a collection.

Mr. SPRINGER. If they are not determined to break up a quorum, let them answer to their names and the result be announced.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the articles of impeachment shall be read before the vote is taken, and for six hours that has been refused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the impeachment articles have been read.

Mr. CONGER. They were read in the presence of a part of the House, but many members are now here who were not present when they were read.

The SPEAKER. That was the fault of the absentees.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow a vote to be taken if they are read? I put that to him. Will you allow a vote on them when they are read?

Mr. CONGER. I should like to hear them read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask whether you desire to have them read for information or delay?

Mr. HANNA. That is our business.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will you when you have heard them read allow a vote to be taken without further delay? I am asking in good faith, for information.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has refused for six hours to let the specifications be read, and now if he is willing to have them read let him repent and say so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did I understand the gentleman to ask whether I was willing to repent?

Mr. CONGER. That question occurs to every gentleman in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I have done anything here as a representative of the people that I should regret and repent of I would like to know what it is. I only ask that an officer of this Government who has been embezzling public funds should be brought to trial, while gentlemen on the other side are trying to prevent it. I will submit to the country who should repent.

Mr. BUTLER. No argument! I object! I object! [Cries of "Loud-er."] I object! I object!

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman objects to having this man brought to trial.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to having him brought to justice wrong end foremost.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it is left to the gentleman from Massachusetts Seward will never be brought to justice either end foremost.

[Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I object!

Mr. SPRINGER. I knew you would object.

The SPEAKER. The question of a quorum is raised, and on the last vote there did not appear to be a quorum voting.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing now to yield the floor for a time for other business.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman yields it, he must yield it absolutely.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do yield it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move to postpone the consideration of the present question until ten o'clock to-morrow morning?

Mr. MAYHAM. As a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department I have not taken any part in this discussion or attempted to delay the action upon it, but I feel that it is my duty as a Representative upon this floor to make a statement. After the labor of almost a year, most arduous and expensive to this country, which has been had upon this subject—[Loud cries of "Order!"]

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman making an argument. I want to hear the specifications read.

Mr. MAYHAM. When the committee came into the House this morning it was by a compromise between the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY,] who had charge of the report of the minority—

[Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BUTLER. Talk shall not be all upon your side. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The talk has been upon the other side.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the enforcement of the rules of the House. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. One rule is, that members shall be quiet.

Mr. BUTLER. But when the rules are not enforced members cannot keep quiet.

Mr. MAYHAM. I am speaking under the rules. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order; the main question has been ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. The only thing in order is to proceed with the call of the House.

Mr. MAYHAM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"] If an agreement was made between two members of the committee—

The SPEAKER. Oh, the Chair has nothing to do with that.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for a vote on the motion that there be a call of the House.

The question was taken on the motion that there be a call of the House; and it was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The Chair asks unanimous consent to appoint an additional member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

There was no objection; and the Speaker thereupon appointed Mr. LATHROP as an additional member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Acklen,	Cutler,	Kelley,	Steele,
Bacon,	Davis, Horace	Kenna,	Stephens,
Beale,	Dickey,	Killinger,	Swann,
Benedict,	Dwight,	Knapp,	Thornburgh,
Bicknell,	Ellsworth,	Loring,	Throckmorton,

Caldwell, W. P.	Hazleton,	Powers,	White, Michael D.

Chittenden,	House,	Randolph,	Wood,
Clark, Alvah A.	Hunter,	Reed,	Wren,
Clymer,	James,	Riddle,	Wright,
Cole,	Jones, Frank	Ross,	Young, Casey.
Covert,	Jones, James T.	Sampson,
Culbertson,	Jones, John S.	Sexton,

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to; and all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask the attention of the House for one moment. I have a proposition to make which I trust will receive the assent of both sides of the House. I move that the consideration of the pending question, the report of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] be postponed, say until ten o'clock this morning, or until a later hour, until half past ten. I make this proposition in the interest of the public health of this country, as I am informed my friend from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] desires to introduce a bill in relation to infectious diseases. I do it also in the interest of the pensioners of the country, as I understand my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] desires the consideration of the bill making appropriations for arrears of pensions. There are also many gentlemen upon this floor who are interested in matters of public moment. Just now everything is blocked by the consideration of the report of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] I trust that there will be unanimous consent given to postponing this subject until eleven o'clock, I will say.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right; we will agree to eleven o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. We understood distinctly that the gentleman from Illinois had withdrawn it.

The SPEAKER. He could not do that, as the main question was ordered upon it.

Mr. POTTER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now move to postpone the subject until eleven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN LATE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. POTTER. I now present to the House and move to have printed the report of the majority, the views of the minority, and the views of a single member of the committee on alleged frauds in the late presidential election.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for the reading of those reports.

Mr. CONGER. Do they include the cipher-dispatch report?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. It will show when they are printed.

The reports were received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POTTER. I now send to the Chair the report upon the cipher dispatches as well, and move that that be printed.

Mr. CONGER. There will be no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a suggestion—

Mr. BRAGG. I insist upon the reading of the reports.

The SPEAKER. The reports will be read.

Mr. MORSE. If the reports are to be read, I move that the House now take a recess until 9 o'clock this morning.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINGLETON. Before that is done, I ask the House to take up the Senate bill known as the yellow-fever bill. It will be very hard upon us in the South if this session is permitted to close without our passing some bill on that subject.

Mr. GIBSON. I am authorized by the committee—

Mr. SINGLETON. I hope the House will reconsider its action upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the reports from the presidential election committee has been called for.

Mr. GIBSON. I am authorized by the committee on the prevention of epidemic diseases to move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, amended by what is known as the McGowan bill. The object is to secure a conference with the Senate, in which case we believe that a bill can be agreed upon with such amendments as will make it satisfactory to the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. If you will not take the Senate bill you will not have any.

Mr. SINGLETON. Then I move, as a substitute, that the Senate bill be taken up and passed.

Mr. GIBSON. I am not authorized by the committee to accept any substitute.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Then we will vote you down and vote for Mr. SINGLETON's bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand that the Senate bill was laid on the table, and the motion to reconsider and table carried.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers that the reports from the committee on electoral frauds must be read, if that is demanded.

Mr. BALLOU. Pending these other questions, I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing, which will take but a short time.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The reading of the reports from the electoral fraud committee is called for by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a privileged report. I submit the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes. As this report is almost entirely like the one submitted sometime since, I will ask only that section 32 of the bill as agreed upon by the committee of conference be read by the Clerk. That is the principal change from the former report.

The Clerk read section 32, as follows:

SEC. 32. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to take the necessary steps to introduce and furnish for public use a letter-sheet envelope, on which postage-stamps of the denominations now in use on ordinary envelopes shall be placed. And the Postmaster-General is also authorized to introduce and furnish for public use a double postal-card, on which shall be placed two one-cent stamps, and said card to be so arranged for the address that it may be forwarded and returned, said cards to be sold for two cents apiece; and also to introduce and furnish for public use a double-letter envelope, on which stamps of the denominations now in use may be placed, and with the arrangement for the address similar to the double postal-card; said letter-sheet and double postal-card and double envelope to be issued under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe: Provided, That the appropriations for postal cards and letter envelopes for the years ending June 30, 1879 and 1880, shall be available for the purchase of said letter-sheet envelopes, double or return postal-cards, and double-letter envelopes: And provided, That no money shall be paid for royalty or patent on any of the articles named.

Mr. BLOUNT. The report also recommends a change in the eleventh amendment by substituting "$9,150,000" for "$9,400,000."

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The House resumed the consideration of the report presented by Mr. POTTER.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to suspend the rules, so as to dispense with the reading of the report of the committee and allow the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BALLOU] to make reports from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause Rule 141 to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the reading of a paper is called for, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House.

Mr. BURCHARD. But it is in order to move to suspend the rules and dispense with the reading.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the Chair has always held that where a paper is presented for action any member has a right to have it read.

Mr. SPRINGER. But where a report is presented for printing only, I think the rule is the other way. Suppose a member should offer a resolution to print the Agricultural Report, could any member demand the reading of the whole report before the order for printing was made? That is an absurdity. If any single member could call for the reading of every document, the printing of which is ordered by the House, we could do no business at all. But when we are called upon to vote to approve a proposition, then every member has a right to hear that proposition read. In no other case, however, does that rule apply.

Mr. BRAGG. If there be any force in the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, then any scandalous document may be placed upon our files, may be printed by order of the House, without the House knowing what it is.

Mr. SPRINGER. Such a thing is impossible in a House of Representatives composed of honorable gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that where the House is called upon to vote upon a paper, it is the right of a single member to have that paper read.

Mr. SPRINGER. No vote is to be taken in this case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, having caused Rule 141 to be read, submits to the House the question, whether the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] shall be entertained.

Mr. BRAGG. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does Rule 141 apply to reports? Does it not apply to papers other than reports, the reading of which is objected to by some member? Has the rule any application at all to the report of a committee?

The SPEAKER. There have been a great number of instances where the rule giving a member the right to call for the reading of a report or other paper has been suspended. The present occupant of the chair, however, has always held that where action by the House is involved, where members are called upon to vote pro or con, every member has the right to have read the paper on which he is required to vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. This is not such a case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, recognizing the fact that in this case no member is required to vote upon the paper, submits the question to the House.

Mr. BURCHARD. The reason I suggested a suspension of the rules was because, as I understood, the request was made to order the report printed, and some gentleman objected unless it should be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits to the House the question, Is the House willing that the Chair shall entertain the motion to suspend the rules in the manner stated?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The question being then taken on the motion to suspend the rules to dispense with the reading of the report, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBRELL obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. The House has now reached a point where gentlemen acting in behalf of committees will have the right to move to suspend the rules; and the Chair desires that the vote upon suspension, if it is not manifest that two-thirds have voted in the affirmative, shall be taken only by tellers, so as to give to every committee the opportunity to submit a motion to suspend the rules through the member it may have authorized for that purpose, and, further, that the Chair may be able to reach that part of his roll containing the names of individual members desiring to be recognized for motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. SPARKS. I want to make an inquiry of the Chair. Has not the Committee on Appropriations a special privilege?

The SPEAKER. In what respect?

Mr. SPARKS. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to take from the Speaker's table the arrears of pension appropriation bill for the purpose of concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

A MEMBER. You are not instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to do that.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Appropriations has no right that any other committee has not, except one—to report at any time for commitment to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ATKINS. I deem it proper to state in the presence of the House that I did say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] that I had no doubt the Committee on Appropriations would authorize him to do just what he is doing. The members of the committee were scattered and could not be got together; and I did make that statement. Of course I do not claim to be any other than the humblest member of that committee; but I did say that I had no doubt the committee would authorize him to ask this action on the part of the House.

Mr. SPARKS. I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments to this bill. It is an appropriation bill.

Mr. DURHAM. I say that the gentleman is not acting by authority of the committee at all; and he cannot have a meeting of that committee to-night, because a majority of the members are not on the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. I move to suspend the rules—

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the motion. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] is on the floor upon a motion to suspend the rules.

GENERAL JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the President is hereby authorized and directed to appoint James Shields, of Missouri, formerly a brigadier-general and brevet major-general during the Mexican war and a brigadier-general of volunteers during the late civil war, a brigadier-general in the United States Army on the retired list, with rank and pay from and after the date of the passage of this act; and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, suspended so far as to enable the President to make said appointment: Provided, That from and after the date of said appointment all pensions heretofore granted said James Shields shall cease.

Mr. DIBRELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DIBRELL and Mr. KETCHAM were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4579) concerning street railroads of the District of Columbia had been adopted.

GENERAL JAMES SHIELDS.

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 37.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 112, nays 55, not voting 124; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Samuel B. Stauber and others.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution and bills of the House of the following titles:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) authorizing the Secretary of War to send artillery and camp equipage to the soldiers' reunion at Cambridge, Ohio.

A bill (H. R. No. 6250) granting a pension to Morris Dwight; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1475) granting an American registry to the Canadian steam ferry-boat Geneva.

PRINTING OF REPORTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires now to recognize the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BALLOU] to present reports from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BALLOU. Unless it is desired, I will not detain the House by asking for the reading of the reports which I present from the Committee on Printing. The effect of it will be to order the printing of 300,000 copies of the Agricultural Report; 10,500 copies of the Smithsonian report; 10,000 copies of the report on the cotton-worm; 1,500 copies of the report of the Coast Survey; 13,600 copies of the Paris exposition report; 5,000 copies of the report of the Wheeler survey; 5,000 copies of the Alaska report; 25,000 copies of the education report; and 5,000 copies of the report of the Polaris expedition.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I want to ask the gentleman from Rhode Island a question in regard to the Agricultural Report.

Mr. BALLOU. The resolution for the printing of 300,000 copies of the Agricultural Report is a Senate resolution. It must fail unless it is passed as it is.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I wish to ask whether one-fourth of the volume of the Agricultural Report is not occupied with a single article in regard to the culture of timber in Dakota Territory. I desire to call the attention of the House to that fact. But I do not myself object to the resolution.

Mr. SINGLETON. The gentleman from Virginia labors under a great mistake.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia does not object.

There being no objection, the reports of the Committee on Printing were adopted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of H. Mullen, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. BOYD, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of George A. Wilson, of Peoria, Illinois, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. WILLIS, of New York, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of William A. Cowles; also a petition; there being no adverse report thereon.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

On motion of Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, the Committee on Patents was authorized to present to the Clerk of the House reports of an adverse character, and also of a favorable character, to be placed upon the Calendar.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GLOVER asked and obtained leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the administration of the Mint Bureau. [See Appendix.]

Mr. NEAL asked and obtained leave to print some remarks on the bill H. R. No. 110, and incidental thereto upon the legislation of Congress relating to the industrial interests of the country. [See Appendix.]

ADVERSE REPORT.

On motion of Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on the Territories, leave was granted to make an adverse report upon the bill H. R. No. 1596, and that said bill may lie on the table and the report be printed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

On motion of Mr. LOCKWOOD, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department to present their report and have the same printed, together with the evidence taken by the committee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 4228) to promote the education of the blind;

A bill (H. R. No. 4564) for the relief of A. F. Whitman, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Kimbro and E. V. Kimbro;

A bill (H. R. No. 5822) for the relief of Henry T. Fuller and others, sureties upon the official bond of William H. Waterman;

A bill (H. R. No. 6242) for the relief of soldiers and sailors becoming totally blind in the service of the country;

A bill (H. R. No. 6270) for the relief of Joseph B. Collins; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the letter of the date of February 8, 1879, from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House, in relation to Document No. 76, third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, and asked that the report be printed and recommitted to the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, asked leave to present report of the majority and the views of the minority on certain matters submitted to that committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the copy of speeches intended to be published in the last number of the RECORD for this Congress must be sent to the Printer not later than Wednesday, the 12th instant.

POST-OFFICE, ETC., AT BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

Mr. COOK. I am instructed, unanimously, by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a bill as a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2119) to provide for the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, for use as a post-office and United States court, and for the accommodation of United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes.

The bill was read. It authorizes the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a building, with fire-proof vaults extending to each story, for the accommodation of the post-office and United States court and United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York, which shall not exceed the cost of $500,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. HARTZELL. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 13.

Mr. HARTZELL. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HARTZELL, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. COOK.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 130, noes 19.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks leave to appoint two additional members on the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HARRISON, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HENDERSON.

CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE BLODGETT.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to make a privileged report. I present the report of the Judiciary Committee on the charges against Judge Blodgett, United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois.

I make this proposition to the House. I do not ask that the report, which is very voluminous, be read. I repeat the proposition I made earlier this evening, that the report be printed in the RECORD and in the usual form, and that a vote be simply taken upon the resolution reported by the committee.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the charges against Henry W. Blodgett, United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois, be laid on the table, and that the House take no further action thereon.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to suspend the rules to dispense with the reading of the report and put the resolution on its passage.

Mr. BRAGG. I understand the Chair to have ruled that when a report is presented upon which the action of the House is called for it is the right of any member to demand its reading.

Mr. SAYLER. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, as I understand, does not desire the report to be read.

Mr. KNOTT. I am totally indifferent about it.

Mr. SAYLER. How long will it take?

Mr. KNOTT. It will take an hour to read the report.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I think we cannot occupy the time better than in listening to the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House ought to act on the yellow fever proposition, which is in charge of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON,] and he thinks the reading of the report may endanger that proposition.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the rules be suspended so as to dispense with the reading of the report and to pass the resolution.

Mr. BANKS. The House does not act upon the report, and the reading of that report cannot be had unless the House shall direct it. We do not pass any judgment on the report, only on the resolution.

Mr. BURCHARD. Two-thirds of the House can suspend the rule that gives the right to have the report read.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask to have the rule read.

Mr. KNOTT. I call for a vote on my motion.

Mr. MILLS. Any gentleman has the right to call for the reading of any report on which he has to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that any member has the right to have the report read.

Mr. KNOTT. Can I not move to suspend the rules—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the right of any member called to act upon any proposition to be informed upon the subject.

Mr. BURCHARD. The House can suspend the rule that gives him that right, if two-thirds of the members desire so to do; it is a matter for the House to determine. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] could report the resolution without the testimony and demand a vote on it.

The SPEAKER. Why does he not do so, then? He has not done that.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Is the right of a member to demand the reading of the report such a right that it cannot be taken away from him by a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the Chair has always decided that where a member is called upon to vote on a question upon the adoption of a resolution, he has a right to hear read the report accompanying that resolution.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is it in order to move that the House take a recess until nine o'clock? If so, I make that motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky to submit his resolution alone and let that be acted upon. Then he can submit his report and have it printed.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to inquire if there is anything in parliamentary rules which allows or permits the right of a member to have a report read accompanying a resolution upon which he is called to vote, to be defeated by first introducing the resolution and then afterward introducing the report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a member has a right to have the report read.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask to have read the rule to which I referred. It shows the practice of the House from the beginning down to this time. It shows that it is not competent for a member of the House to defeat legislation by demanding the reading of unnecessary and long papers.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to make this inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.] When a committee has been instructed by the House to investigate a judge, a man clothed with judicial emine, and ascertain whether he has been guilty of any malfeasance in office, or has done anything that has brought disgrace upon the American judiciary, and that committee is prepared to submit to this House a report, accompanied by a resolution, is it right for the gentleman from Ohio to rise in his place and say that it would be a waste of time to read such a useless paper?

Mr. SAYLER. I have not said so.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to know whether my motion to suspend the rules is in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not entertained that motion, because the Chair has always held that a member has a right to have a report read to which was attached a resolution upon which the member was called to vote.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to suspend the rules so as to take that right away from him.

Mr. WADDELL. And pending that, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has moved that the House take a recess until nine o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think the Committee on Appropriations should make some statement to the House about the public business before we take a recess.

The motion for a recess was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 46, noes 89.

Mr. WILSON. Is it competent to move to lay the report and resolution on the table?

Mr. TIPTON. And have it printed?

Mr. BURCHARD. That is what the gentleman from Kentucky asks to have done.

The SPEAKER. That will not evade the point, the reading of the report.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNOTT. I have made a motion to suspend the rules—

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that that motion cannot be made for the purpose of cutting off the personal right of a member.

Mr. KNOTT. Pardon me. I hope the Chair will hear my question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. KNOTT. When I have made a motion to suspend the rules and put the resolution on its passage, does that not suspend everything else and require a direct vote on the question?

The SPEAKER. It has often occurred—

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The Chair will allow me one moment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] having moved to suspend the rules and put his resolution on its passage, that resolution alone is to be read.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the resolution accompanies a report.

Mr. BRAGG. And is a part of the report.

The SPEAKER. And is a part of the report. And it is the personal right of a member to have that report read.

Mr. MILLS. We cannot vote on a resolution about charges against this judge when we know nothing about the testimony.

Mr. KNOTT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has not the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] the right to withdraw his report?

The SPEAKER. He has.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. And then will not this House have the right to act upon the resolution independently of the report?

The SPEAKER. Unless the main question is ordered, the gentleman has the right to withdraw the paper at any time before a decision by the House. The report will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, but was interrupted by

Mr. COX, of New York, who said: I am requested by a great many gentlemen to move that the further reading of this report be dispensed with, and that the House take a recess until nine o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. SPARKS, (interrupting the reading.) I move that we take a recess until nine o'clock. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I modify my motion so as to say eight o'clock.

Mr. HAYES. This is a very important document; and I hope the House will let it be read.

Mr. SPARKS. The question is not debatable.

The motion of Mr. SPARKS was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

J. RUSSELL BARBER.

Mr. THOMPSON, (interrupting the reading.) Mr. Speaker, from an oversight in one of the appropriation bills no provision has been made for the pay of a page of one of the committees. At his solicitation, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution providing for his payment. He has been serving as messenger for the Committee on War Claims, but from an oversight no provision has been made for his pay. I am sure no gentleman here will object to the consideration of the resolution. It is a matter of pure justice that ought to be attended to. The amount is not large, and it is everything to this boy.

There being no objection,

Mr. THOMPSON introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of J. Russell Barber; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that there shall be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. Russell Barber $184 for services as messenger to the Committee on War Claims, third session, Forty-fifth Congress.

The resolution was adopted.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 5231) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. SINICKSON, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report from the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to the official conduct of Judge Blodgett.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. ATKINS. It is suggested to me that the House may desire to hear from the Committee on Appropriations as to the propriety of adopting this motion. I have been waiting here for the last ten hours for the announcement to be made that the conference report had been submitted to the Senate and that they had acted on it. There may come in within five minutes a proposition for another conference, or it may not come at all. The Senate may not announce to this House that they have acted upon the report that has already been submitted to them and a copy of which now lies on my desk.

The House can judge for itself as to the propriety of taking a recess. I have no suggestion to make except that in my judgment if gentlemen wish to pass the legislative appropriation bill in any form whatever, it is important for us to remain in session, because if we should pass the bill within the next two or three hours it would be very difficult to complete the enrollment and comparison before the final adjournment.

Mr. CARLISLE. If we should take a recess till eight or nine o'clock, and when we reassemble the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] should insist upon the reading of this report, as he probably will do, it will consume the remainder of the session.

The motion of Mr. SPARKS was not agreed to.

PAY OF HOUSE AND SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for the benefit of the page boys. It is similar to the resolution usually passed at the close of the session. It proposes to pay the page boys for the month of March.

Mr. ROBERTS. I move to take from the Speaker's table the Senate resolution providing for this matter.

Mr. SPARKS. When this resolution was before the House awhile ago, I objected to it. The proposition was in the deficiency bill in nearly the shape it is here; and it was defeated. Now, I do not feel disposed by a technical objection to prevent this House from doing as it pleases on this subject. I intend to vote against this measure; but I will not make the technical objection which will prevent other members of the House from voting as they think proper.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked to take from the Speaker's table joint resolution No. 71.

A MEMBER. What is it about?

Mr. SPARKS. It is to give certain employés of the House and Senate a month's additional pay. I think it is wrong; but I will not object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to pay the committee clerks, pages, messengers, and other employés of the House who do not receive annual salaries, their present rate of compensation, respectively, for thirty days from the date of the adjournment of this Congress, and the money required to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be immediately available. Further, the provisions in this resolution shall apply to persons holding their respective positions on the day of its approval; and they shall receive no further compensation for the said time than that hereby provided.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 207) authorizing the Secretary of War to send artillery and camp equipage to the soldiers' reunion at Cambridge, Ohio;

An act (H. R. No. 1475) granting American registry to the Canadian steam ferry-boat Geneva; and

An act (H. R. No. 6362) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof.

CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE BLODGETT.

Many members called for the regular order.

The Chair resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary having made the investigation authorized by the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted January 7, 1879, requiring them to inquire into the official conduct of Hon. Henry W. Blodgett, United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois, and report what action, if any, the House should take thereon, would respectfully report:

That during the taking of the testimony herewith submitted Judge Blodgett, and Messrs. Cooper, Knickerbocker, and Sheldon, upon whose memorial the resolution cited above was introduced and adopted, were present in person and with counsel. Both parties were permitted to introduce evidence, and the most liberal latitude was allowed to each in the examination of witnesses, to the end that every fact bearing directly or remotely upon the subject under consideration might be clearly ascertained.

In order to facilitate the investigation as much as possible, however, and to enable the committee to confine the testimony within reasonable limits, and present it to the House in something like a systematic form, the memorialists were requested to present their charges and specifications in writing, which was accordingly done, and copies thereof delivered to Judge Blodgett, with the request that he would file written answers thereto if such answers should be deemed by him necessary or desirable.

The substance of the first charge thus exhibited was that Judge Blodgett had entered into a dishonest conspiracy to defraud the creditors of the Germania Insurance Company, a corporation whose estate was then pending in bankruptcy before him as district judge for the northern district of Illinois; and that by means of certain orders secretly and corruptly made by him as such judge in furtherance of that unlawful scheme the same was consummated, and the creditors of the bankrupt defrauded out of a sum of money amounting to more than $15,000.

It appears from the evidence in relation to this charge that in the years 1873 and 1874 the estate of the Germania Insurance Company was pending in bankruptcy before Judge Blodgett; that among the assets in the hands of the assignee, William Vocke, there were several notes which had been executed by stockholders of the company for stock held by them respectively, and among them two on one A. C. Hesing, amounting, principal and interest, to near the sum of $30,000, which were secured by a pledge of one hundred and seventy shares, of $100 each, of the stock of another corporation, known as the Illinois Staats-Zeitung Company; that these several stockholders were also policy-holders in the Germania Insurance Company, who insisted that as they had suffered losses covered by their respective policies, their policies should be set off against their stock notes in the hands of the assignee; that suits were instituted by the assignee against them in the district court for the northern district of Illinois, in two of which, those of Meyer and Jaeger, the question of set-off was made, and judgment rendered in favor of the assignee; that these cases were carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, whereupon a stipulation was entered into by Mr. Vocke, the assignee, and the remaining stock debtors, among whom was A. C. Hesing, that if the judgments which had been rendered therein should be affirmed the assignee might take judgment against them immediately for the amount of their respective notes; that the judgments were affirmed, and the assignee, on the 20th of January, 1874, immediately upon receiving official notification of that fact, made an urgent demand upon the other parties "to give the matter their earliest attention and call at his office to redeem their notes and avoid judgment;" and that all the parties except A. C. Hesing soon after did so. It appears, moreover, that notwithstanding this peremptory demand and Mr. Hesing's failure to comply with it, the assignee took no step to enforce it, although urged by his counsel to take judgment against Hesing under the stipulation and compel him to pay the amount of his notes as the others had done; but that on the 7th of April, 1874, over three months after the judgments referred to above had been affirmed and his right to take judgment against Hesing under the stipulation became absolute, and over two months after he had given notice that he would proceed to do so, the assignee applied to Judge Blodgett, in chambers, for instructions as to what he should do in the matter, whereupon the following order, which had been previously prepared by his own law partner, General Leake, who had been employed as counsel by Hesing, was presented to the judge, who indorsed it "Enter.—H. W. B.," and which was subsequently entered of record:

"In the matter of the Germania Insurance Company, bankrupt, the assignee having this day made application for instructions as to the matter of the claims of said company against A. C. Hesing, and the court, having fully considered the same, does hereby order and direct that the said assignee do offer the notes and indebtedness of the said Hesing, together with the stock of the Illinois Staats-Zeitung Company, deposited to secure the same, at private sale, to those dealing in such securities in the city of Chicago, and to sell the same to the person making the highest and best bid therefor in cash, first reporting the amount of such bids to this court; and he will not deliver such notes and collaterals until such sale shall be confirmed by this court."

It appears also that at the same time Mr. Vocke, the assignee, presented a petition to Judge Blodgett asking permission to sell a number of other notes, collaterals, and judgments which were among the assets of the Germania Insurance Company, and regarded by him as desperate, in which, however, no reference was made to the claim against Hesing, and asking the court to prescribe the mode in which they should be sold; upon which the judge made the following indorsement:

"Enter order that assignee sell within-named claims at public auction. Notices ten days in Journal and Inter-Ocean."

"H. W. B."

Which order was subsequently entered of record.

It appears, moreover, that a minute of the last-mentioned order was entered, with the proceedings of that day's business, on page 25 of the clerk's minute-book, while a minute of the one first mentioned appears page 24, facing page 25, under the heading "Tuesday, April 7, continued." It also appears that the law reporters of the daily newspapers in Chicago were in the habit of consulting this minute-book every evening after the business hours of the court, and of publishing a report of the various orders appearing therein, in their respective journals the following morning. In addition to this, it appears that there was published at that time in the city of Chicago a paper called the Chicago Daily Law Bulletin, devoted exclusively to the daily publication of the various orders entered, and other proceedings had in all the courts of record, State and Federal, in that city, together with bills of sale, chattel mortgages, &c., recorded, and that the compiler of that publication was not only in the habit of examining the minute-book referred to above twice each day—at noon, and about five o'clock p. m.—and of publishing the various orders therein found in his next day's issue, but whose habit it also was to look back through the proceedings of previous days, in order to be sure that he had overlooked or omitted nothing that had been done. Yet, while each of the daily newspapers, as well as the Law Bulletin, contained a notice of the order directing the assignee of the Germania Insurance Company to sell the "desperate" assets in his hands at public auction, there was no notice or intimation whatever in any of them that an order had been made for the assignee to solicit bids for Hesing's notes and the Staats-Zeitung stock, pledged to secure the same at private sale.

It furthermore appears that Mr. Vocke, the assignee, addressed a circular letter, dated on the same day on which the order was made, to various parties, informing them that he had been ordered by the court to sell at private sale two notes, one for $10,000, dated September 16, 1869, and the other for $5,000, dated January 30, 1870, both executed by A. C. Hesing, due on demand, and bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, secured by pledge of one hundred and seventy shares of stock in the Illinois Staats-Zeitung Company, and soliciting bids for the notes and collaterals. The evidence shows, however, that the Illinois Staats-Zeitung Company had paid dividends on its stock of 25 per cent. in April, 1873, and 5 per cent. additional in July of the same year; 15 per cent. in January, 1873, and 20 per cent. in January, 1874, and that Mr. Vocke was a stockholder in the company and drew his dividends as such at the times stated. Yet no allusion was made in his circular letter to the dividends paid by the company as affecting the value of the stock he proposed to sell.

It further appears that the assignee received replies to his circular letter from L. J. Gage, cashier of the First National Bank, who declined to make a bid on the ground that his bank never advanced upon the stock of close corporations, such stock being generally found unsalable in the open market; from George Schneider, cashier of the National Bank of Illinois, who also declined to bid, on the grounds of Hesing's embarrassment, the notes being past due, and a want of acquaintance with the value of the collateral; from E. E. Goodall, president of the Fourth National Bank, who declined to bid on the ground that the bank had as much of Mr. Hesing's paper as it cared to hold; that past-due paper was a hard thing to sell, and upon inquiry outside, he thought 30 per cent. on the face of the notes was the best price that could be had for them; from W. F. Coolbaugh, president of the Union National Bank, who also declined to bid, but gave it as his opinion that a sale for fifty cents on the dollar would be a good and judicious one; from Baird & Bradley, loan and real estate agents, who did not care to buy the notes of Mr. Hesing at any price; from Filsenthal & Kozinski, bankers, who declined to bid because they knew nothing of the value of the stock and had no means of informing themselves upon that point to their satisfaction; from Adolph Loeb, broker, who declined to bid on the ground that he never bought over-due paper, but stated that if he did buy such paper he would not want to pay over $6,000 for the notes and securities offered; from Jacob Rehm, who offered $4,500, adding that he knew Mr. Hesing was greatly embarrassed by having indorsed a large amount of paper for the bankrupt Garden City Manufacturing and Supply Company, and that it would be a long time before he would be in a condition to meet his liabilities; from William Sisson, who offered $3,750 for the notes and stock; from J. N. Withersall, who offered $4,500; from Henry Greenebaum, who, after stating that he considered the notes and stock as very undesirable property, offered $5,000 for an absolute transfer of the notes and stock; one from S. Flersheim, who declined to bid.

On the 16th of April the assignee submitted to Judge Blodgett his report, accompanied by the several letters above referred to, upon which the judge made the following indorsement: "Enter order that note and securities be sold for $5,000 unless objections are filed by Monday morning. H. W. B." The report thus indorsed was filed at three p. m., April 16, and the judge's memorandum quoted above entered on page 36 of the clerk's minute-book, all the other orders made during the day being noted on page 37, and no notice or allusion to the order appeared in any of the daily newspapers or the Daily Law Bulletin the next morning, although the law reporters had made their customary examination the preceding evening and found all the other proceedings had during the day.

On the following Monday, April 29, the sale of the Hesing notes and stock to Henry Greenbaum for $5,000 became absolute, and on the next morning, for the first time, the fact that such a sale had been ordered or even contemplated found its way into the public prints. On the 23d the facts of the sale were reported by the assignee to the creditor's meeting, which gave rise to great dissatisfaction among the creditors, and a proposition was made to have proper steps taken to have it vacated, but Messrs. Florsheim, Witherall, and Sisson, who were among the largest creditors, having voted against it, the motion was lost. It appears from the testimony of Messrs. Florsheim and Witherall, however, that there was an agreement, or understanding, between them and Mr. Sisson on the one side and Mr. Hesing on the other, that if they would permit him to get his notes and stock at less than their real value, he would pay them the difference between the dividends they might receive from the assets of the Germania Insurance Company and what they would receive if his notes and stocks were sold at their full value, and that he did pay to Florsheim the sum of $2,500, which in pursuance to that arrangement he divided with Witherall and Sisson about in proportion to their respective claims, and it was evidently in consequence of that understanding not only that they wrote the letters in reply to Mr. Vocke's circular, which are referred to above, but voted against the proposition to have the sale set aside. It is furthermore evident from the testimony of Greenbaum himself that he wrote the letter to Vocke, making the bid of $5,000, at the instance of Hesing, and with the understanding that Hesing should have the notes and stocks for precisely what Greenbaum should have to pay for them, and that he delivered the notes to Hesing and retained the stock until the $5,000 advanced by him were refunded. In a word, that Hesing was the real purchaser and Greenbaum merely his instrument.

As to the facts thus far stated there can be neither doubt nor dispute, but as to the real value of the stock hypothecated by Mr. Hesing as security for his notes there may be some contrariety of opinion. It is true that the Illinois Staats-Zeitung Company was a close corporation, and that the amount of its dividends might have depended to a great extent upon the integrity of those who controlled the majority of the stock. Yet when it is considered that the capital stock of this corporation was at that time, as the evidence shows, but $179,000; that it owned a lot of ground worth then $80,000, independent of the building and machinery thereon, costing, according to the testimony of Mr. Hermann Raster, $235,000, incumbered by a mortgage of only $75,000; besides the good-will of a newspaper with the largest circulation of any paper published in the German language west of the Alleghany Mountains, with a franchise in the Associated Press worth $25,000 or more; that the floating debt of the company was not over a hundred thousand dollars, while its net earnings for the year 1872 were, according to the evidence of Mr. Pietsch, the secretary, $65,682.31, and for the year 1873, $60,256.98; that the dividends declared were in April, 1872, 25 per cent.; January, 1873, 15 per cent., and January, 1874, 20 per cent.; and especially when it is remembered that the one hundred and seventy shares in question belonged to a series when the whole capital stock was only a hundred and four or a hundred and six thousand dollars, and really represented two hundred and sixty-three of the seventy-five hundred and ninety shares of capital stock; and that Hesing actually received $9,630 in dividends on these shares in 1872, $5,380 in 1873, and about $2,000 for the half year ending July 1, 1874, it will not be difficult to conclude that Mr. Medill, Mr. Patterson, Governor Brooks, Mr. Vocke, and others were correct in supposing it worth par, and perhaps that Mr. Raster was not far out of the way when he estimated it at a hundred and fifty. It is true that what these hundred and seventy shares of stock would have sold for, had a full and fair public advertisement been made of all the facts showing their real value, or even had the creditors of the bankrupt known that they were to be sold, can only be a matter of conjecture, yet it is manifest from the evidence that their sale at only $5,000 was a ruinous sacrifice, to say nothing of abandoning the chances of realizing something on the notes in case the collateral should fail to bring the full amount (nearly $20,000) due thereon.

The scheme by which that sacrifice was effected, and which can perhaps be imperfectly discerned in the facts already stated, Mr. A. C. Hesing undertakes in his testimony more fully to disclose. It may not be out of place to premise here, however, that Mr. Hesing had long been among the most influential and enterprising German citizens of Chicago; a man of strong will, and more than ordinary capacity, who had to some extent brought Mr. Vocke under obligations to him by certain acts of personal kindness. It is evident that after the judgments in the cases of Meyer and Jaeger had been affirmed by the Supreme Court, Mr. Vocke's counsel, Mr. Peirce, was apprehensive that Hesing was endeavoring to influence Vocke to favor him in some way with regard to the claim he held against him, or, as Mr. Peirce himself expresses it, was trying "to place his immense thumb upon him," and that Vocke "felt a little weak-kneed, and wanted a little backing up." Mr. Hesing testifies, substantially, that after the judgments were affirmed by the Supreme Court he had frequent conversations with Mr. Vocke "as to the best way for him to get the stock back," and that Vocke finally advised him to see Judge Blodgett in person, which he concluded to do, that he visited the judge in his rooms and told him that when he left for Europe in 1870 he had an income of $30,000 or $40,000 a year and no debts; that everything he possessed at that time had been laid in ashes, with the exception of a large lumbering concern with which he was connected and which had gone into bankruptcy; that he was on his paper for $250,000; that he had nothing left except the stock in the hands of the assignee; that he appealed to the judge and said, "Now, can't you assist me in some way or other, and not have this sold at public auction?" That the judge wanted to know the value of the stock, and if it was hypothecated; that he told him the amount for which it was hypothecated was $15,000, with accrued interest, amounting to nearly $5,000 more, and that the stock was very valuable; that he considered the newspaper almost as dear to him as his child; that he had helped to bring it up from nothing to one of the largest and most influential papers in the United States; that he had put all his energy into it since 1862; that he had stood by the people and helped to organize the party, and had always been the judge's friend; that thereupon Judge Blodgett said to him, "You are friendly to Mr. Vocke," or "You are friendly with Mr. Vocke; you helped him to get appointed," that he replied, "Yes, he is a friend of mine; he will do anything I want him to;" that the judge said, "Well, let Mr. Vocke procure from different houses here in the city offers for that stock, and then you can arrange matters, so that the offers will not be very great or very high," that he replied, "Of course I can; every banker in Chicago is my friend," that the judge asked him if the stock had any market value; that he told him that some stock had been sold, but that it had no real market value; that it was not quoted; that parties who knew about the stock knew its value; that Mr. Vocke had bought some not long before; that he also told the judge about all the dividends it had paid and was paying, and appealed to him on that account to save him and his family from going to the poor-house; that he told the judge that most of the policies had been bought up by speculators and that the original owners of the policies would lose but little by the transaction if the stock were sold below its value; that he saw Mr. Vocke; went to Mr. Coolbaugh; dictated the letter of Mr. Goodell; saw Mr. Schneider; wrote the letter of Mr. Rehm himself; saw Henry Greenbaum, and asked him to bid $5,000 for the stock, which he did, and paid it; that the money thus paid by Greenbaum was charged to him (Hesing) and the stock held as collateral for the amount in the German National Bank; that finding that Florsheim, Witherall, and Sisson, who were among the largest creditors of the Germania Insurance Company, "were threatening to kick about this arrangement," he paid them "$2,500 extra for keeping their mouths shut and making a bid of $3,000;" that the order for soliciting bids made on the 7th of April and the order of sale viset made on the 16th of the same month were both in pursuance of an arrangement between Judge Blodgett, the assignee, and himself to enable him to buy in the stock at less than its real value; and that after the order of April 7 had been made either his counsel, General Leake, or Mr. Vocke, suggested the idea of keeping it off the minute-book, though which it was he was unable to remember.

If there were no further evidence than that already adverted to, your committee would have no hesitation in saying that, in their judgment, the charge was fully sustained, and that Judge Blodgett should be impeached and removed from office as speedily as possible. With nothing to countervail or explain it, it would show, to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt, a cunningly devised and artfully executed scheme to defraud the creditors to the Germania Insurance Company for the benefit of Mr. Hesing, to which Judge Blodgett was not only a party, but which he had himself suggested.

That there was such a scheme, and that it resulted precisely as the beneficiary, Mr. Hesing, desired, there can from no standpoint be any reasonable question; but, without giving full credence to the testimony of Hesing himself, it would be impossible to convict Judge Blodgett of any criminal knowledge or corrupt participation in it whatever. This out of the way, there is nothing to show that Judge Blodgett's action in the matter was different from what any other judge might have done under similar circumstances in perfectly good faith. While the difference in the manner in which the notes and stock of Mr. Hesing and the other assets remaining in the hands of the assignee were ordered to be sold might seem to require some explanation, it is in evidence that the method prescribed for the sale of the former was by no means unusual in that court, and, besides, it appears from the testimony of Mr. Tenney, a lawyer of very extensive practice and experience in such matters, as well as the statement of Judge Blodgett himself, that such a course had been generally found most beneficial to the parties interested, and there can be but little doubt that had the order come to the knowledge of the creditors and general public through the daily prints or otherwise, the stock would have brought far more than it did. The want of that publicity was partly attributable to the manner in which the order had been drawn by Hesing's attorney, omitting a public advertisement for bids which might have been inadvertently overlooked by any judge, and partly to the fact that Mr. Vocke addressed his circular to a very limited number of bankers and capitalists, the names of several of whom, if not all, were suggested to him by Hesing himself, and partly to the fact that notice of the order failed to get into the daily newspapers in the usual way; but whether that failure resulted from a suppression of the order from the minute-book or not, it is not even pretended that Judge Blodgett either suggested or had any knowledge of any such suppression.

The force of Mr. Hesing's testimony is, however, materially impaired by a variety of circumstances. In the first place, it is quite evident that his feelings toward Judge Blodgett are, and have for a long time been, far from a friendly character. However intimate his relations may have been with Judge Blodgett prior to the trial of the whisky cases in Chicago in 1876, it is certain that they have been anything but kindly since; and although Mr. Hesing denies having made any threats against the judge, it appears from the evidence of Mr. Kerfoot, Mr. Stafford, Mr. Ballentyne, Mr. Miller, and perhaps others, that soon after he had been sentenced, on his plea of guilty to an indictment for a conspiracy to defraud the Government, he denounced Judge Blodgett in the most violent and vindictive manner, and hoped to live long enough to get even with him and be revenged on him. Besides, while many of Mr. Hesing's statements are substantially if not fully corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses, as for instance the fact that he had an interview with Judge Blodgett; that he suggested to Vocke the names of persons to whom he should apply for bids; that he afterward saw several of those persons himself; that he suggested the replies received from at least some of them; that he arranged with Florsheim, Witherall, and Sisson to keep their mouths shut, and paid them $2,500 therefor; that he procured Henry Greenbaum to make the bid of $5,000 for him, and afterward received his notes and stock back for precisely that sum; yet in other material particulars immediately affecting the question of Judge Blodgett's criminal complicity in the conspiracy he is plainly contradicted by other witnesses. For example, he represents that his appeal to Judge Blodgett was to enable him to get the stock back at less than its real value in order to save himself and his family from the poor-house, after having informed him fully of the dividends it had paid and was paying, and to effect that he begged that the stock should not be sold at public auction; but Mr. Vocke, who claims to have been present, and who undertakes to describe Mr. Hesing's plaintive appeal, and repeats, substantially, much that Hesing himself claims to have said, swears that Hesing insisted, and gave the judge the most positive and solemn assurances, that if the stock "was sold at private sale it would realize very much more than could possibly be gotten for it at public sale, or were it placed in the hands of the marshal," and that he referred to the fact of his having been once sheriff of the county and of having some experience in such matters, and that he knew that valuable papers were often slaughtered at such sales on account of the non-attendance of bidders.

True it may be said that Hesing was in the judge's chambers when Vocke came in, as Vocke says was the case, and that the conversation between him and Judge Blodgett might have taken place before Vocke arrived, and what took place in the presence of Vocke was intended to protect the judge from subsequent criticism. Still, however plausible such a theory might seem, there is no proof that it is true.

Again, Mr. Hesing states that after he had made the arrangement with Judge Blodgett, as detailed in his testimony, he informed the other stockholders of it, and they all wanted him to assist them also. To say the least of it, this would have been a very singular proceeding for a man of Mr. Hesing's sagacity who had just entered into a disreputable conspiracy with a judge for the purpose of defrauding certain parties interested in a matter pending before that judge, when the disclosure could have had no other effect than to defeat the very object for which the conspiracy was entered into. But he says that at the meeting of stockholders in which he made this strange disclosure Mr. Peirce or Mr. Lowenthal or some other stockholder did say that they had no objection to Mr. Hesing getting out of the scrape the best he could on account of the great losses he had sustained, but they had to object to any other debtors doing so as the others were all able to pay. The stockholders mentioned by him as having been present at the meeting referred to, especially Mr. Peirce and Mr. Lowenthal, deny, however, that any such conversation took place, or that they ever heard of any such arrangement between Mr. Hesing and Judge Blodgett.

Besides this the statement made by Judge Blodgett under oath, and the evidence offered by him in corroboration thereof, tend strongly to establish the theory that in rendering the orders referred to he acted in good faith for what he considered the best interests of the creditors as well as of Mr. Hesing, which is directly the reverse of that advanced by Hesing himself. Without, therefore, adding unnecessarily to the volume of this report by referring to other though perhaps less material contradictions of the testimony of Mr. Hesing, or other circumstances appearing in evidence tending to diminish its weight, your committee are of the opinion, that while the facts in the possession of the memorialists as shown in the case made by them, fully justified their demand for an inquiry into the official conduct of Judge Blodgett, yet in view of all the evidence brought out in the investigation an impeachment could not be sustained on this charge.

The second charge presented by the memorialists was to the effect that Judge Blodgett had improperly attempted to prevent the grand jury from finding an indictment against Homer N. Hibbard for perjury in having sworn falsely in making the report required by the nineteenth section of the bankrupt act of June 22, 1874, of the fees and emoluments received or earned by him as register in bankruptcy, and with having wrongfully and willfully procured the suppression of such indictment after it had been found.

Several of the grand jurors were called to testify in relation to this charge, all of whom concurred in the statement that the grand jury had agreed unanimously to indict Mr. Hibbard for perjury in having sworn falsely to the report he was required to make under the law referred to above, and directed Mr. Bangs, the district attorney, to prepare the indictment, which he promised to do; that on the last day of their session—November 22, 1878—they met and adjourned from time to time, waiting for indictments which they had found, to be prepared and presented to them; that at five o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Bangs informed them that he had not yet completed the indictment against Mr. Hibbard, but would have it down by seven o'clock that evening; that at seven o'clock he again appeared before them and stated that he had prepared the indictment, but declined to submit it to them. What occurred upon this statement being made may be gathered from the following quotations from the testimony of several of the grand jurors who were sworn.

Mr. Duley says:
 "Question. Well, you returned that indictment, did you not?
 "Answer. No, sir; we could not get it.
 "Q. Why could you not get it?
 "A. Judge Bangs said he would have it ready by seven o'clock, and we adjourned and went to supper, and when we came back he said that he had been instructed by Judge Blodgett to withhold that indictment and not return it.
 "Q. Who said that to you?
 "A. Judge Bangs.
 "Q. At what time?
 "A. That was about seven o'clock, I think.
 "Q. Where did he say it to you?
 "A. In the grand jury room, sir.
 "Q. What took place there?
 "A. We asked him then—it was asked him, I do not remember by what juror—if he would make that statement in writing. It created a good deal of excitement in the jury-room.

"Q. What made it create excitement?
 "A. Well, I suppose any man would know what created the excitement. [Laughter.]

"Q. Well, we would like to have you tell if you can?
 "A. If after we had found an indictment, and then they had refused to return it to us, we felt that somebody had been doing a wrong—

"Q. Go on and state what took place after you got that information.

"A. We asked Judge Bangs if he would make that statement in writing. He said he would rather not. He said that he had received instructions from Judge Blodgett to withhold that indictment, from the fact that Hibbard had made his report as he construed the law under his direction. That was the amount of it. It may not be exactly the words, but it was the amount of it.

"Q. As who construed the law?

"A. As Judge Blodgett. We then asked him—some of the jury asked him—if we prepared an indictment ourselves would he sign it? He said he could not according to the instructions he had received from Judge Blodgett. So there was the end.

"Q. What took place there when you got as far as that?

"A. It would take a good while to tell it, sir.

"Q. Well, go right along.

"A. Well, I could not tell it, sir; there was so much said.

"Q. Well, tell what you remember of it.

"A. Oh, well, we asked about what we could do, and were talking there an hour or more; and finally we went in at that time when you were having this conversation?

"Q. No, sir; we shut him out. [Laughter.]

"Q. Do you know whether there was any effort made by any of the grand jurors to draft an indictment themselves?

"A. Well, a proposition was made, and we talked that over, and concluded that it was not best and would not amount to anything. There was a great deal of excitement, and we were anxious, because we thought it was a case that should go before the court.

"Q. What made you think so?

"A. From the evidence we had.

Dr. Hamline says:

"Question. What took place then?

"Answer. Well, there may have been several things occurred, but the one thing occupied the entire attention of the grand jury exclusive of everything else.

"Q. What was that one thing?

"A. Judge Bangs came in and informed us that either by the instruction or under the direction of Judge Blodgett, who had advised with Judge Drummond, he should not present the indictment against the register in bankruptcy for perjury.

"Q. Are you through with your answer?

"A. No; if you want a statement of all that occurred I will give it as nearly as I remember. I will say to the committee there was a good deal of excitement on this occasion.

"Q. Go on and describe just what took place and what was said?

"A. He stated that, if I remember correctly, the judge had remained at his rooms, and would remain until our adjournment, in order when we adjourned to discharge us; that the judge, I think, would be pleased to see us and charge us as to the law in this case. Whether there was a formal vote taken—I think there was—to not appear before Judge Blodgett—

Mr. Morrow says:

"Question. What transpired then?

"Answer. When we met at seven o'clock we were informed by Judge Bangs that he was instructed to withhold from us the indictment against Mr. Hibbard on the question of perjury for the reason that it was made under Judge Blodgett's construction of the law.

"By Mr. LAPHAM:

"Question. You say it was made; you mean the report?

"Answer. That the report was made; yes, sir.

"By Mr. KNICKERBOCKER:

"Question. What transpired then?

"Answer. The district attorney was asked to put his objections to returning the indictment or surrendering the indictment to us in writing, which he refused to do.

"Q. Do you know whether or not Mr. Bangs had the indictment with him; and, if so, how do you know it?

"A. He informed us that he had it drawn. I don't think he had the indictment with him in the jury-room.

"Q. That was the indictment for perjury?

"A. Yes, sir; the indictment for perjury.

"Q. Did he inform the jury at that time, seven o'clock in the evening, when he came before them, or at any time before they were discharged, how he came to speak to Judge Blodgett about the matter of withholding this indictment, or how Judge Blodgett came to speak with him?

"A. I don't think he did.

"Q. After he gave you that information and told you what he did, what next transpired?

"A. The district attorney was requested to leave the jury-room, which he did, and the jury consulted over the matter, and there was considerable skirmishing among them over the matter; some considerable feeling on the subject. But we finally abandoned the idea of taking that indictment into court.

"Q. You say considerable feeling existed; what was the feeling about?

"A. The feeling was in relation to this indictment for perjury.

"Q. What about it?

"A. A feeling that the indictment should not be withheld from them. There was some little disposition to continue the session and investigate the matter to know whether or not we could not compel it.

"Q. Was there any attempt made to prepare an indictment?

"A. There was something said about it, and the question was asked of Attorney Bangs something like this: Suppose we should prepare an indictment, what would be the effect? Mr. Bangs informed us that he would have to, under Judge Blodgett's instructions, refuse to sign it; hence it would be of no consequence."

Mr. Farmer says:

"Question. Then what transpired when Judge Bangs came in with reference to this perjury indictment?

"Answer. We were waiting anxiously for the papers to appear for our final closing up of the indictments. We had been waiting all day very anxiously, and he came in apparently without any papers, and he says, 'Gentlemen of the jury, I must inform you, as your attorney, that your proposed action in finding a bill of indictment for perjury cannot be accepted. You cannot sustain it. It will not be accepted by the court, and therefore it is useless to press the matter, for we cannot receive it as such.' That is the effect of it in substance.

"Q. What did the jury do then?

"A. They rather thought the matter up, to see if there was any way that they could press the matter along and get their wishes before the court, but the district attorney said that he had especial instructions from the judge that they would not be received and acted upon if they were presented; and, of course, he should refuse to sign them under those instructions."

The testimony of the other grand jurors who were examined upon this point was substantially the same as that quoted above. And from the whole it is manifest that a high degree of excitement, if not indignation, pervaded the grand jury, growing out of what they perhaps considered an arbitrary if not a corrupt exercise of authority on the part of the judge. And that feeling was possibly intensified to some extent by certain circumstances which had previously transpired.

It appears from the evidence that the question whether, under the ninth clause of the nineteenth section of the bankrupt act of June 22, 1874, a register was required to report the total amount of fees and emoluments received or earned by him during the year in all cases whatever, or only the amount received or earned in cases referred to him during the year, had been discussed by the grand jury while the matter was under investigation, and that Mr. Bradley, the clerk of the court, had testified before them that soon after the law was passed Mr. Hibbard had consulted him with regard to the proper construction of that clause, and that he gave it as his opinion to Mr. Hibbard that he was required to report the amount of fees and emoluments received by him during the year from all cases whatever without respect to the time when they were referred to him; but that Mr. Hibbard had about the same time consulted Judge Blodgett with regard to the matter, and that the judge's construction of the clause was that it related only to cases referred to the register during the year. It appears also that the district attorney felt very uncertain about the proper construction to be given to it, and had taken occasion to ask the opinion of certain lawyers who had been called to testify, as will be seen from the following statement in the evidence of Mr. James Crow:

"Question. Did you send for attorneys and get their legal opinion, as a grand jury?

"Answer. The best of my recollection is, we sent to attorneys to find out what action had been taken in regard to this committee of the bar association. But while they were there Judge Bangs was a little anxious to find out their opinion. I was right close by—I am a little hard of hearing—I was right close to the attorneys. Judge Trumbull was asked what was his construction of the law, and he said that he hadn't examined it, and wasn't prepared to give an answer. Judge Lawrence stated that it would be improper for him to give an answer. Mr. Ayer read the law and stated to the jury that he was not giving any construction upon the law; that Judge Bangs was the proper person to ask for construction; but I do not recollect the jury asking anybody what the construction of the law was. They had the law there printed. I think they took their own construction of it."

And it seems that their construction of it differed from the judge's. What transpired when Judge Blodgett was informed that lawyers had been before the grand jury, Mr. Crow can also tell. He says:

"Answer. Judge Blodgett called to me as I was going up-stairs, and said that he heard that the jury had been sending for attorneys to get their construction upon certain points of law, and if that was the fact, it certainly was very improper. That he would not allow it; that the district attorney was the proper one to apply to for the construction of law, or to the court. If the jury wished his construction of the law, let them come down before him. He said, also, that when he sent us out to our room, he had no idea we were going to be all the fall examining into this matter. He stated that we were wasting a great deal of time in taking irrelevant testimony—that is, testimony, he said, which would be totally inadmissible before a court and traverse jury, and that we were delaying time this way. We were running the Government to a big expense, and delaying, as I understood him, the business of the court, and he hoped that the jury would try and get through with their business. He said if we didn't, and weren't discharged before long there was a way in which they could be discharged, and he asked me if I would not try and impress it on the minds of that jury the importance of closing up their business and being discharged. I listened to him very attentively, and went up and reported to the jury, word for word, what he said. I told him I would make the report, and he said he wished I would do so.

"I went up to the jury-room and called the attention of the foreman; told him I had a message from Judge Blodgett. He called the members to order, and I stated the substance of what Judge Blodgett told me. Mr. Earle made a motion that the jury appoint a committee of three to wait upon Judge Blodgett and state to him that he had been misinformed; that we had not sent for any attorneys and asked their legal opinion; which was a fact, as we had not. I was one of the committee, with Mr. Earle and Mr. Shoop. The next morning we called upon Judge Blodgett, and I told him that I had made a statement of our conversation to the jury and we had been appointed a committee to wait on him. Mr. Earle told him the resolution—read it I believe—of the grand jury, that his honor had been misinformed; that we had not sent for any attorneys to get their legal opinion. I believe we stated that we were pretty near over the business, and the judge said he was very happy to find it out, and he asked one or two questions why we sent for this attorney, and Mr. Earle explained to him—I don't know what it was. I don't recollect it."

Independent of this transaction, it appears that the impression prevailed among the grand jurors that for some reason or other Judge Blodgett was disposed to retard their investigation of this charge, as well as others perhaps, but how or why the evidence does not disclose. It is not strange, therefore, that they were excited and indignant when the district attorney announced his intention to withhold the indictment from them, and assigned as his reason the instructions of the judge. Nor is their indignation to be reprehended, but rather commended under the circumstances as they appeared to them at the time. The question to be considered here, however, is not what the impressions of the grand jury were of Judge Blodgett's actions or motives, but what he really said and did to prevent the finding of the indictment, or to procure its suppression when formed, if anything.

There are but two persons who can answer this, namely, Judge Blodgett himself, and Mr. Bangs, the district attorney, as no one else is known to have witnessed or heard what took place between them. Judge Blodgett's version of the matter, under oath, is as follows:

"Question. From whom did you learn, then?

"Answer. I learned it from the district attorney. At that time I was holding the circuit court for the trial of jury cases. I had a jury trial on during the forenoon of that day. I had been informed, perhaps the day before, that the grand jury would be ready to adjourn that day. When the noon recess was taken I came from the court-room into the hall to pass into my chamber, and met the district attorney in the hall. He asked me if he could see me a moment, and I invited him into my chamber. After he had passed in he said to me, 'The grand jury have voted an indictment for perjury against Mr. Hibbard, and I have great doubts whether it will be ornor, and thought I would come and submit the question to you.' I said, 'What is the point, judge?' and he opened the statutes, I think the Statutes at Large for the session of 1874, turned to the act amendatory of the bankrupt law, approved June 22, 1874, and called my attention to the nineteenth section. He had in his hands a paper which purported to be a certified copy of the reports made by Mr. Hibbard as register under the nineteenth section of this amendatory act. He stated that the perjury was charged to have been committed in not including in that report the fees which he had received during the year mentioned in that report from cases which had been referred to him in previous years, during the year's business which that report purported to represent.

"As soon as he had stated the point in that form, I said to him: 'Why, Judge Bangs, that report was made under a construction which I gave to the law for the benefit of the registers, before these reports were made, I presume.' He then said: 'I thought there was room for doubt, at least as to whether Hibbard was not right in his construction of the law.' I called his attention to some of the reasons which had led me to construe the law as I had, and stated to him the fact that I recollected distinctly having given this construction to Mr. Hibbard and then said to him: 'But, Judge Bangs, whether I was right or wrong in the construction of the law, Mr. Hibbard ought not to be indicted for perjury. If I was right, certainly no perjury was committed anyhow. If I was wrong then the corrupt intent is all taken from the act because he acted under the construction of his superior officer, who had the right to construe the law for him; and you should inform the grand jury of that fact.' He remarked that he was quite inclined to concur with me in the construction of the law, and I said to him: 'You tell the grand jury that this was done under my direction or construction, and say to them that if they want any further information on the subject or the law of the matter to come into the court this afternoon and I will give it to them.' We retired from my chamber, and shortly after Judge Drummond came in and we went to lunch together in the adjoining room, where our lunch was spread. During the meal I mentioned to Judge Drummond that the grand jury had voted an indictment for perjury against Mr. Hibbard, and I had instructed the district attorney to bring them into court for instruction if they did not agree with the district attorney upon the law of the case, and said to Judge Drummond: 'Will you not, after lunch, come into my room and let me explain the point to you?' We walked into my room together; the statute lay open where the district attorney had left it, and I called his attention to the different clauses in this nineteenth section, and said to Judge Drummond that upon consideration of those clauses in connection of the form of the report which the supreme court had prescribed to be used by the registers under that section, I thought there could be no doubt on the law; the law only required the register to report the fees which he had received during the year from the cases referred to him during the year. Judge Drummond, after examining the various clauses some time, said to me: 'Well, judge, there is a great deal of force in what you say, or words to that effect, and I think we perhaps separated at that time. I returned into the court-room and resumed my seat on the bench and the trial of the cause on hand during the afternoon.

"Q. Excuse me, judge. I will ask you to state whether at that interview or not Judge Drummond expressed any opinion about the right of the finding of the indictment?

"A. Yes, sir; after we had discussed the law and after Judge Drummond had made the remark there was great force in my construction, says he 'Whether you are right or wrong it would be a great wrong to Hibbard to indict him for perjury when he was acting under your construction of the law.' I think his language was quite emphatic upon the subject. Then, as I have said, I resumed my duties upon the bench for the afternoon, and at the usual hour adjourned. The grand jury did not come down for instructions during the afternoon, as I expected they would, and when I came out of the court-room—Judge Drummond had been so emphatic in his concurrence with me as to the impropriety of finding an indictment against Hibbard under the circumstances which I had detailed that I felt there was some responsibility on me in the premises. I accordingly spoke to the bailiff of the court, whom I met in the hall, and said: 'Will you step down into Judge Bangs's room and say to him I want to see him?' I then walked into my chambers and left the door open, and a few moments after Judge Bangs came in and I said to him, 'The grand jury didn't come down during the afternoon, and I suppose, therefore, that perjury matter is at an end.' He hesitated a moment and said, 'Well, no.' Said I, 'Did you tell the jury what I said to you upon the subject?' Said he, 'No, I have not yet.' I turned to him and said, 'Judge Bangs, I think you ought to tell them and you ought to say to them that the construction of this law was brought to my attention before this report was made, and that Mr. Hibbard acted under my direction; and say to the grand jury from me that if they have any doubts on the subject I would be happy to have them come in and be informed from the bench as to the whole matter.'

"I further said in that connection, 'Since you were in here at noon I have talked with Judge Drummond, and he agrees with me that it would be a great wrong to find an indictment of perjury under the circumstances.' I said, 'An indictment for taking illegal fee is a trifling matter, but an indictment for perjury is a serious matter and ought not to be found unless there is good reason, when all the facts are understood and laid before the grand jury and in the possession of the prosecuting officer, to justify it.' Judge Bangs then said to me, 'This grand jury have got some considerable feeling on the subject, and suppose they should insist upon finding an indictment after they have come into court?' 'Well,' says I, 'Judge Bangs, it will be time enough to settle that question when we get to it; but my impression would be that should they persist in finding an indictment after the court had told them they ought not to, it might be the duty of the district attorney to withhold it. However, I will settle that when the question arises.' I think that was all that I said. That is all I recollect now."

Mr. Bangs's account of the matter may be gathered from the following:

"Question. Now, Judge Bangs, I want you to state just as definitely and particularly as you can when you went in there what Judge Blodgett said and what you said?

"Answer. The question of the indictment for perjury against Mr. Hibbard came up, and how I do not now recollect.

"Q. Now, hold on; just wait a moment. When you went in there what did Judge Blodgett say to you, as near as you can remember?

"A. Well, I remember distinctly of his asking me what they had assigned perjury on.

"Q. What the grand jury had?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How did he know that they had assigned perjury on anything?

"A. Oh, well, it was common talk that they had found the indictment.

"Q. Had you told Judge Blodgett that they had?

"A. I think it is very likely; I don't remember.

"Q. You had frequent conferences with Judge Blodgett, had you not; that is to say, you were there in the same building during the session of the grand jury?

"A. Oh, I saw him every day, I should think.

"Q. He said what?

"A. He asked what they had assigned the perjury on, or what they had based it upon.

"Q. What did you tell him?

"A. I told him it was upon the report, and I happened to have a copy of it in my side-pocket, and took it out and said, 'Here is a sample of the report; they assigned it upon the jurat to the report.'

"Q. Well, they could not assign perjury on the report without there was some matter in the report that was false. Did you tell him what that was?

"A. I don't remember the exact language.

"Q. Well, the substance of it.

"A. Oh, I gave him to understand that the charge was that he had made a false report of his fees and had sworn to it, and they had assigned perjury upon that oath.

"Q. Now, what did Judge Blodgett say to that?

"A. My recollection is that I told him the report was made under the nineteenth section of the amendment to the bankruptcy act, and I picked up a volume that happened to lay on the table and turned to it, and at once the judge said he recognized the act, and he said it did not seem right, or was wrong, or something of that sort, to indict Mr. Hibbard for perjury for that reason, because the registers had come to him when that law went into force.

"Q. The registers?

"A. Yes, sir; that is the way I understood it—for his construction, and he had given the construction under which Mr. Hibbard had acted and made his report.

"Q. The construction under which Mr. Hibbard had acted? How did he know what construction Mr. Hibbard had acted under?

"A. I don't know, sir; I did not ask him.

"Q. He assumed that, did he?

"A. I don't know whether he assumed it or not.

"Q. Well, didn't he assume it?

"A. I don't know anything about that, Mr. Cooper.

"Q. Didn't he assume it in conversation with you that he knew what Mr. Hibbard—

"A. I have told you his statement.

"Q. Just repeat that over again.

"A. He said it was wrong, or wasn't right—I forget the language; the substance of it was—to charge Mr. Hibbard with perjury upon that, because when the law went into effect, or about the time, or soon after, the registers came to him for a construction with reference to that point.

"Q. To what point?

"A. The point as to the making of the report, and that he gave the construction of the law under which the report of Mr. Hibbard was made.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Question. Did he say that he had told Mr. Hibbard that he could lawfully suppress information as to any fees or emoluments he had received during the year for cases referred to him during that year?

"Answer. There was no particularization in those respects at all. The whole conversation occupied but a little time, very little.

"By Mr. COOPER:

"Question. Did you tell him what the grand jury had found in reference to Mr. Hibbard's reports—what the facts were with reference to Mr. Hibbard's fees?

"Answer. I told him they had found an indictment.

"Q. No, no. Did you tell him what facts had been brought before the grand jury with reference to Mr. Hibbard's fees?

"A. I did not tell him anything about that.

"Q. You did not?

"A. No, sir; the whole conversation did not occupy three minutes; five at most.

"Q. And did Judge Blodgett say to you that Judge Drummond agreed with him in the construction of this law?

"A. That question, perhaps—

"Q. I want an answer, yes or no, sir.

"A. I cannot answer it yes or no.

"Q. If you made that statement to the grand jury—that Judge Drummond agreed with Judge Blodgett in this construction of the law—was it true that Judge Blodgett had told you so?

"A. During that conversation—

"Q. Never mind; I want an answer to that question.

"A. I never told the grand jury anything that wasn't true.

"Q. Then, if you told the grand jury that Judge Drummond concurred in this construction, then it was true that Judge Blodgett so told you?

"A. What I told the grand jury that Judge Blodgett told me he did tell me.

"Q. Yes; that is it.

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And if you told this to the grand jury, then Judge Blodgett had so told it to you?

"A. Yes, sir.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Question. Now, what did you tell the grand jury?

"Answer. That is what I want to get at, if you will allow me.

"Mr. LAPHAM. Well, the committee ask you to state.

"The WITNESS. Yes, sir. After having had the interview with Judge Blodgett I went straight to the grand jury and told them that I had learned directly from Judge Blodgett that the construction of the law under which Mr. Hibbard had acted in making those reports which they had alleged to be false was given to the register by the judge himself upon an express application of the register for that purpose, and that if that was the case, and Mr. Hibbard had acted upon it in good faith, there certainly was not the crime of perjury.

"The CHAIRMAN. You are repeating now—

"The WITNESS. I am telling what I told the jury; and that Judge Blodgett had requested me, if the jury had any doubt on the subject or the question of the law, to ask them to present themselves in open court and he would instruct them from the bench, and I requested the jury to go into court and get instructions from the judge, requested it on my own behalf and on theirs. I was quite solicitous that they should do so. I saw at once that there was some feeling on the part of certain jurors, and some of them stated that they did not want to go before the judge. The grand jury said that they were willing to take my statement of Judge Blodgett's construction of the law, and the fact that he had so instructed Mr. Hibbard, as coming from the judge—take it as if he had delivered it to them in open court; and then some question arose about the indictment, that still they desired to have the indictment presented. I stated to them that I had been advised by Judge Blodgett, having asked him the question: 'Supposing the jury should insist—after having been instructed by the court—should insist upon finding the indictment and having it presented?'—I said to them that Judge Blodgett said to me that in that case it would be my official duty to withhold the indictment.

"By Mr. COOPER:

"Question. Right there, did he so tell you?

"Answer. Yes, sir; and I desire to be understood now. The judge requested that they come into court—the only message that the judge sent to the jury at all was that they come into court if they had the slightest hesitation about the law or the fact—if they were dissatisfied at all, to come into court and he would instruct them from the bench.

"By the CHAIRMAN:
"Question. Did the judge assume that it was his right to instruct them as to the facts from the bench?"

"Answer. No, sir; I don't think he did."

"Q. Then did he say that if they had the slightest doubt about the law or the fact, to come down and he would instruct them?"

"A. Doubt about the law, or his having given that construction of the law, as I understand. This was all said in a very brief time; and knowing the temper of the jury and the earnestness with which they had investigated this matter, I had an apprehension that, notwithstanding, they would insist upon an indictment, and I presented that alternative, that after having been instructed by the court they should insist upon the indictment, what then? and the judge replied that in that event it would be my duty to withhold the indictment. Well, I told the jury that after they had declined to go into court and had accepted my statement as coming from the court, I told the jury the conversation that I had had, and then Mr. Willing arose—I think it was Mr. Willing—and said to me, 'Under all the circumstances, if the jury desire that indictment presented would you feel it your official duty to withhold it?' I said I should."

Discarding the statement of Judge Blodgett, which does not materially conflict with the vague and indefinite recollection of Mr. Bangs as exhibited in the foregoing extract from his testimony, and which would seem the more reasonable of the two when Mr. Bangs's own uncertainty and evident anxiety to elicit the opinions of Judge Trumbull, Judge Lawrence, and Mr. Ayer are recalled, what facts are disclosed?

First. That Judge Blodgett informed the district attorney that he had advised Mr. Hibbard that a proper construction of the ninth clause of the nineteenth section of the bankrupt act of June 22, 1874, only required him to report the total amount of fees and emoluments received or earned by him as register in bankruptcy during the year; a fact which had already been stated to the grand jury by Mr. Bradley.

Second. That Judge Blodgett expressed the opinion that it would be wrong to indict Mr. Hibbard for perjury for having acted under that construction; an opinion in which Judge Drummond testifies that he concurred.

Third. That he requested the district attorney to inform the grand jury of his view of the law, which Judge Drummond says has been the practice, not only in that court but in all the district courts in that circuit for years, or if they were not satisfied with that to request them to come into court where he would instruct them fully from the bench, as it was not only his right but his duty to do if they required instructions.

Fourth. That, when asked by the district attorney, he expressed the opinion that it would be his duty to withhold an indictment if the grand jury should insist on returning one in disregard of the instructions of the court.

While it is true that a willful and corrupt interference with the legitimate functions of a grand jury, either to prevent any proper investigation instituted by them or to suppress an indictment they may lawfully find, may be justly considered one of the most dangerous offenses of which a judge can be guilty, yet it is equally true that it is not only the right but the duty of the judge to instruct the grand jury as to questions of law; and however much he may err in such instructions, unless it can be shown that such error was willfully and corruptly committed, he cannot be held guilty of an offense therein.

Granting, therefore, all the facts that can be deduced from the vague testimony of Mr. Bangs to be true; conceding that Judge Blodgett was wrong in his construction of the clause of the bankrupt act under which Hibbard acted; admitting that he and Hibbard were on terms of the most intimate friendship, as they undoubtedly were; admitting that he erred in telling Mr. Bangs, when asked, that it would be his duty to withhold the indictment if the grand jury should insist on finding one in disregard of his instructions, still your committee are unable to see how it would be possible to convict him of a crime upon the evidence before them; for however much he may have esteemed Mr. Hibbard, it was certainly not wrong in him to instruct the grand jury as to the elements of perjury merely because they were proceeding to indict Hibbard for that crime, and there was nothing obligatory on Bangs to withhold the indictment merely because it was the judge's opinion that it might be his duty to do so. Indeed, so far as this charge is concerned, it would seem that there is as much ground for the impeachment of Bangs as for the impeachment of Blodgett.

The next charge exhibited was that Judge Blodgett, while holding the office of judge of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, had knowingly borrowed and converted to his own personal use money belonging to or deposited in the registry of his court, under which was the following specification: that while bankruptcy causes in said district were pending in the court presided over by him Judge Blodgett had, by the power and influence of his judicial office, procured divers assignees of estates in such bankruptcy causes to loan to him, the said Blodgett, for his own personal use, large sums of money belonging to such estates and on deposit in the registry of said district court.

In his answer to this charge and specification Judge Blodgett admitted that he had borrowed from Mark H. Kimball, assignee in bankruptcy of the Mutual Security Insurance Company, the sum of $5,000 on the 10th day of June, 1873, that he repaid with interest in the following November and December; and that he also borrowed from James Long, assignee in bankruptcy of the Equitable Insurance Company, the sum of $1,300 on the 23d day of November, 1873, and the further sum of $1,000 on the 16th day of December, 1873, which amounts he also repaid; but denied that either of said funds had ever been deposited in the registry of the court or that he used his official position or influence in any manner to procure either of said loans, and, whatever might be said of the impropriety of a judge's borrowing trust-funds from a fiduciary under the control of his own court, it is certainly not a crime unless such loan was extorted by the corrupt exercise of the judge's official power or influence, or the money be borrowed from the clerk or other officer of a court of the United States and belong to the registry of such court, in which latter case it would be embezzlement under section 5405 of the Revised Statutes. It is therefore sufficient to add here that the evidence fully sustains the answer, showing conclusively that the money in neither case belonged to the registry of the court and that neither loan was procured by any undue influence on the part of Judge Blodgett.

The next charge exhibited was to the effect that Judge Blodgett, while holding the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, had willfully employed the power and authority of said court to perpetrate acts of gross judicial oppression upon the rights of a private citizen, and to sanction and direct the commission of a flagrant trespass, which constituted a criminal offense under the laws of the State of Illinois, punishable by fine and imprisonment.

The facts in relation to this charge, as they appear from the specifications, the answer of Judge Blodgett, and the testimony adduced, are these: that there was pending on the chancery side of the United States circuit court for the northern district of Illinois a suit wherein Henry A. Barling et al. were complainants, and Henry H. Honoré et al. were defendants, to foreclose a mortgage on a lot of ground on which there was situated a valuable building; that one Robert W. Hyman, jr., had been appointed receiver of said property, and placed in possession thereof by proper proceedings in said court; that said receiver had, under the authority of said court, leased room No. 5, in said building, to one George H. Walker for the term of one year, ending April 30, 1873, and put said Walker in possession thereof, where he carried on the business of loaning money; that there was no right of re-entry reserved by said receiver for the purposes of altering or improving that or any other portion of said building; that in October last, the receiver presented a petition to said court representing that in order to properly utilize the upper stories of said building, it was necessary to put in an elevator for the purpose of carrying passengers to and from them, and asking an order from the court to put in such elevator, and for liberty to construct it through said room No. 5, occupied by said Walker, whereupon the following rule or order was entered:

"UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,
"NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS,
"Friday, October 18, A. D. 1878

"Present, Hon. Henry W. Blodgett, district judge.

"HENRY A. BARLING et al. }
vs. } In chancery.
"HENRY H. HONORÉ et al. }

"On the reading and filing of the petition of Robert W. Hyman, jr., as receiver herein, it is ordered that George H. Walker therein named be, and he is, within three days after the service of a copy of this order, hereby required to show cause why the said receiver should not have liberty to construct an elevator through the said room No. 5, as prayed for in the said petition, subject to making said Walker reasonable compensation in that behalf."

That between the entry of this rule and the return day thereof, the tenant Walker saw Judge Blodgett, and said to him that he wanted some protection in the matter; that he had a lease from the receiver approved by Judge Blodgett; that his business was of such a character that he could not move out, and that he was opposed to the elevator going through the room, to which the judge replied that Walker should not stand in the way of the improvement, and if he did not permit it to go on peaceably, he would turn him out; that on the return day of the rule, Mr. Walker appeared in court, by his counsel, and made response thereto, exhibiting his lease from the receiver approved by the court, and standing on his legal right not to be disturbed in his possession during his term. Judge Blodgett, however, made the rule absolute, and entered the following order:

"UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,
"NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS,
"Tuesday, October 22, A. D. 1878.

"Present, Hon. Henry W. Blodgett, district judge.

"HENRY A. BARLING et al. }
vs. } In chancery.
"HENRY H. HONORÉ et al. }

"Now comes Robert W. Hyman, jr., as receiver herein, in the matter of the rule entered against George H. Walker, a tenant of room No. 5, in the Honoré block, so called; and it appearing to the court that said Walker was on the 18th instant duly served with a copy of the order heretofore entered herein, requiring him to show cause, &c.; and said Walker having failed to show cause within three days, agreeably to said order, it is thereupon ordered and directed that the receiver have leave to enter into the said room 5, and, with all the necessary and proper aid and assistance, to construct through the said room, with all convenient speed and without delay, the proper appurtenances for the putting in and operating of an elevator, and said Walker is directed to offer no resistance or impediment thereto; and the question of compensation to be allowed to the said Walker in that behalf is hereby reserved for the further consideration of the court; and the said Walker, or the said receiver, may have leave to apply in that behalf, as occasion may require."

And what took place in carrying it out is related by Mr. Walker himself, as follows:

"Question. Was any of your property destroyed?"

"Answer. It was injured, of course. They had to cut through the ceiling a large place, I should think as large as that, [indicating], up through the three floors. The floors were taken out, and as they shoveled, it all fell down through this hole—came down and sifted into my office. They spoiled the carpets; I had to have them taken away."

"Q. Did it interrupt your business any?"

"A. Certainly; there was no new business that could be done. Those that were obliged to come there to pay money managed to come there some way."

"Q. That was your business—what you depended upon for making your money?"

"A. For making a living."

"Q. What condition did they leave the premises in nights when they did not work?"

"A. They must have worked pretty near all night the day they commenced this operation. They tore out the wall. They had to remove a door, and had to tear out the whole wall, and leave the place open, and when I got there in the morning the floors had been removed and the furniture piled up mostly in one corner, and an overcoat was missing. I went to see if anything was stolen; that is the only thing I could see. They had bricked up the wall, and came there afterward and plastered and calcimined. I could not spread out my papers on the desks or furniture for a very long time afterward."

It may be conceded that Judge Blodgett acted in this instance in excess of his jurisdiction; that the court having directed its receiver to lease the property and approved the lease in which no right of re-entry for such purposes was reserved, the judge had no right to interfere with the tenant's possession during his term; and that the tenant suffered a grievous wrong in the execution of the order, and that such an act done by another would be a misdemeanor under the laws of the State; yet if the judge acted in good faith and not corruptly or maliciously in making the order he cannot be held liable either civilly or criminally. This is a well-settled principle of law, founded upon the most obvious suggestions of sound reason and public policy, and applicable to all superior courts and courts of general jurisdiction, for if the law was such that a judge of such a court should be held responsible in damages or at the bar of criminal justice for every mistake he might make in a case of which he has jurisdiction, if he should be required to stake his fortune or his liberty upon every exercise of his judgment on the bench or in the performance of his official duties it would be impossible to find one who would be willing to assume the responsibilities of such a position at all.

It is time that when a court of limited and special jurisdiction exceeds its powers the whole proceeding is coram non jure and void, and no person concerned can claim exemption for any wrong that may be perpetrated therein on the ground that he was acting in the exercise of a judicial function. Yet this principle, so far as your committee are aware, has never been so far extended as to justify even a civil action against a judge of a superior court or a court of general jurisdiction for an act done by him in his judicial capacity, unless the act may have been done maliciously or corruptly, or there was a clear absence of all jurisdiction of the subject-matter. (Randall vs. Bingham, 7 Wall., 523; Bradley vs. Fisher, 13 Wall., 351.) The same principle was anciently stated in the English courts, thus: such as are made judges shall not be criminally accused or made liable to an action for what they do as judges. (12 Coke, 26.) Where there is no jurisdiction there is no judge. (10 Coke, 65.) It is doubtless true, however, that in some sense the circuit courts of the United States are not courts of general jurisdiction inasmuch as they must look to the acts of Congress for the powers conferred. (Kempster vs. Kennedy, 5 Cranch, 173.) Yet in another sense they are. They are courts of record; they proceed according to the course of the common law; they have power to render judgments and decrees binding upon persons before them unless reversed on writ of error or appeal. And besides, they may be properly designated as superior courts inasmuch as they hold an intermediate position between the Supreme Court and courts of an inferior grade, but it has been held that even in inferior courts the judge should be exempt from liability where the subject-matter of the suit is within the jurisdiction of the court and the alleged defect of jurisdiction arises from some other cause. (Savacol vs. Boughton, 5 Wendell, 172.) And for a still stronger reason the same principle should apply to superior courts possessing attributes and exercising functions independently of the persons of the magistrates designated generally to hold them.

Numerous cases in which this doctrine is affirmed might be cited; but it is, perhaps, sufficient here to refer to a recent case directly in point—that of Lange vs. Benedict, decided by the court of appeals of New York, March 19, 1878, and reported in the following July number of the Albany Law Journal. The defendant was United States district judge for the eastern district of New York; and the plaintiff was tried at a circuit court held by him upon an indictment for embezzling mail bags. The jury found plaintiff guilty, and that the value of the mail bags was less than $25. The penalty prescribed in such case was a fine of $200, or imprisonment for one year. Defendant, as judge, sentenced plaintiff to pay a fine of $200, and be imprisoned for one year. Plaintiff was imprisoned five days, and paid the sum of $200 to the clerk of the court as a fine, and the same was paid by the clerk into the Treasury. Plaintiff procured a writ of habeas corpus, which was returned before defendant, who was holding the same term of court at which plaintiff was sentenced. Defendant, upon the return of the writ, set aside the sentence, and as a part of the same order passed judgment anew on plaintiff, and resentence him to be imprisoned for the term of one year, and plaintiff was imprisoned. Under proceeding taken by plaintiff for that purpose, to which defendant was not a party, the resentence of plaintiff was set aside by the Supreme Court of the United States as being without authority of law. In an action for imprisonment under the resentence, brought by plaintiff against defendant, it was held that the act of defendant was done by him as a judge, and he was protected by his judicial character from the action brought by plaintiff, upon the principle above discussed.

However justly, therefore, Judge Blodgett may be amenable to criticism or censure on account of his action in this matter, in view of the principle above stated it is impossible to see how he can be held liable to impeachment therefor, unless it can be shown that he did not act in good faith for the best interests of those concerned, as he understood them, but with such malice and corruption as to render his act in the premises an official misdemeanor.

This in the opinion of your committee has not been shown by the evidence adduced, and the same may be said of the charge concerning the Bigelow block transaction, it appearing that the order complained of and the one vacating it were both entered by consent of parties, and nothing to indicate that Judge Blodgett was guilty of any criminal participation in or corrupt connivance at anything connected with the entire matter, if indeed there were any wrong perpetrated by any one therein. That charge may therefore be passed here without further comment.

The next charge exhibited was that Judge Blodgett, in administering the bankrupt act, had willfully violated and perverted the letter and spirit of the law by making an unlawful use of the powers vested in him as such district judge for the purpose of enriching his friends and favorites, and has thereby brought the administration of justice in his court as a court of bankruptcy into reproach and scandal.

Under this charge the evidence shows that in repeated instances Judge Blodgett had appointed one of three persons, Robert E. Jenkins, Bradford Hancock, and George W. Campbell, provisional assignee before a regular assignee had been elected by the creditors. Yet, in most if not all these cases it was shown that the assets were of such a nature as demanded immediate attention, or the business of the bankrupt had been of such a character that the interests of all concerned required it be kept in operation. It was moreover shown that the provisional assignees thus appointed were capable men, experienced in such business, and were generally, if not in every instance of the kind, elected by the creditors, while there is nothing showing any corrupt interest in the judge in making such appointments further than his friendship for the parties appointed, nor that any person was injured thereby.

It also appeared that from January 1, 1873, to January 1, 1879, Jenkins had been assignee in five hundred and twenty-seven cases, Hancock in two hundred and thirty-two, and Campbell in three hundred and sixty-two, making in all one thousand one hundred and twenty-one. Yet it also occurred that in a large majority of the cases they had been chosen by the creditors and their election confirmed by the judge, and that they were competent and experienced men, and that no undue or illegal influence had been used upon or by Judge Blodgett to procure their appointment in any case whatever.

It also appeared that Homer N. Hibbard had failed to comply with the rule prescribed by the Supreme Court requiring him as register in bankruptcy to file statements of his fees in each case with the clerk of the court, the fees to be taxed by the clerk, and if any question should arise thereon an appeal might be taken to the district judge from the time the rule was adopted until within quite a recent date, yet there was no evidence that any question had ever been raised or an appeal taken to the judge, or his attention called to the matter in any manner whatever.

In short, it may be said with regard to this particular charge that while the administration of the bankrupt act, of which the country will fortunately soon be entirely relieved, led to the transaction of a large amount of business in chambers by the district court of the northern district of Illinois, which was greatly crowded with causes arising under that act, and consequently afforded opportunities to evil-disposed persons to perpetrate frauds upon others, and gave rise perhaps to suspicions and complaints of favoritism and corruption, whether well or ill founded, your committee are unable to find in the evidence the proofs upon which Judge Blodgett could be impeached on such a charge.

The same may be said in relation to the only remaining charge, which was to the effect that Judge Blodgett was a party to or had corruptly contributed the aid of his official position and conduct to a conspiracy to defraud the stockholders of the Garden City Insurance Company by enabling certain persons to buy up the stock of that company at a discount.

That there was a conspiracy of that character, and that the conspirators resorted to a proceeding in bankruptcy before Judge Blodgett as one of the means for attaining their object, and that such object was successfully accomplished, there can be no doubt from the evidence, but as the testimony bearing upon this particular charge has not yet been returned to them by the Public Printer, they will content themselves with a simple reference thereto, with the remark that however flagitious that fraudulent conspiracy may have been, the proofs before them are not such as to show that Judge Blodgett had any such criminal knowledge of or corrupt participation therein as would warrant his impeachment therefor.

In view, therefore, of all the evidence before them, your committee would respectfully recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the charges against Henry W. Blodgett, United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois, be laid on the table, and the House take no further action thereon.

WASHINGTON, March, 1879.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to say one word. Although the resolution is the unanimous conclusion of the Committee on the Judiciary, that there is nothing in the evidence which justifies articles of impeachment against Judge Blodgett, it is due to the case I should say that this report has been prepared by those members of the subcommittee who remained in Chicago until the conclusion of the evidence. I was called away at the close of the first week, and although in the main the recital of facts in the report is such as I would have sanctioned so far as the evidence had been taken up to the time I left, there are some inferences in the report drawn from the facts to which I would not be willing entirely to give my assent. But the general conclusion that there was nothing shown implicating the integrity or impartiality of the judge was one to which we all cheerfully subscribed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry: whether, when a report is ordered to be read, it shall be read, or whether a portion of a report shall be read, and then the concluding pages, leaving a large portion of the report unread?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware that that has been done. But if it has in the opinion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he comes forward and indicates the sheets which he thinks have not been read, the Chair will direct them to be read.

Mr. BRAGG. It is impossible for me in the handling of the sheets to tell where the sheets are which have not been read, but it is possible for me to know that when you are in one branch of the evidence recited by the committee you cannot at once jump to the conclusion of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair states in good faith if the gentleman will come forward and show any sheet that has not been read the Chair will direct it to be read.

Mr. BRAGG. I will ask the Clerk whether all of that report has been read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk states he read all of it that he found here.

Mr. BEEBE. It is to be presumed that a public officer discharges his duty; and until the gentleman from Wisconsin is prepared to make some affirmative charge it is not fair to impugn the conduct of an officer of the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I am prepared to make an affirmative charge. I know the Judiciary Committee did not stop in the middle of the evidence they were reciting and jump to a conclusion without finishing their statement of the evidence.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk states he read the report as he found it.

Mr. BRAGG. As he found it!

Mr. BEEBE. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. BEEBE. I call for the regular order.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] is recognized.

Mr. HARTZELL. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry: whether in recognizing gentlemen on this floor for the purpose of moving a suspension of the rules the Chair is governed by any rule at all?

The SPEAKER. He is. The Chair, in the first place, is governed by the rule of recognizing gentlemen who are instructed by their respective committees to move a suspension of the rules; and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] is instructed by the committee on epidemics to make this motion. The Chair thinks he is warranted in recognizing the gentleman from Louisiana not only because of that order but because of the high importance and necessity of the subject. The Chair follows strictly the rule of recognizing a member of a committee who bears the instruction of his committee. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Louisiana under these circumstances whether he has been instructed by his committee to make this motion?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARTZELL. When will others on the list be recognized?

The SPEAKER. As soon as the motions to suspend the rules from committees have been gone through. If the suggestion made last evening by the Chair had been responded to, nearly all would have been recognized by this time.

Mr. SCALES. Does not the list include representatives of a number of other committees?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] himself is the next on the list. The Chair will endeavor to give an opportunity to all.

EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

Mr. GIBSON. I am instructed by the committee on epidemic diseases to report the Senate bill with the following bill as an amendment—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot report the bill as a Senate bill. The Senate bill has been voted down.

Mr. SPARKS. That bill was laid upon the table, and a motion to reconsider the action of the House upon the bill was also laid upon the table.

Mr. GIBSON. This is not a Senate bill. It is offered by the committee on epidemic diseases, and I move to suspend the rules and put it upon its passage.

Mr. SPARKS. Is it not the Senate bill?

Mr. GIBSON. It is not the Senate bill.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I rise to ask whether or not the bill introduced by the gentleman from Louisiana is not identical in language with the bill which has already been disposed of by the House?

Mr. HOOKER. It is not.

Mr. GIBSON. It is a different bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the bill be read; that will settle the question.

Mr. HOOKER. Could not the gentleman under the motion to suspend the rules put the Senate bill on its passage?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the House take a recess until half past eight o'clock. The House has already voted on the Senate bill.

Mr. GIBSON. It is not the Senate bill at all. This is an independent bill, from the committee of the House on epidemic diseases; and as such I offer it, and move to suspend the rules and put it upon its passage.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Is it not the bill which we have already rejected?

Mr. GIBSON. No, sir.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established a national board of health, to consist of seven members, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than one of whom shall be appointed from any one State, whose compensation during the time when actually engaged in the performance of their duties under this act shall be $10 per diem each and reasonable expenses, and of one medical officer of the Army, one medical officer of the Navy, one medical officer of the Marine Hospital Service, and one officer from the Department of Justice, to be detailed by the Secretaries of the several Departments and the Attorney-General respectively, and the officers so detailed shall receive no compensation. Said board shall meet in Washington within thirty days after the passage of this act, and in Washington or elsewhere from time to time upon notice from the president of the board, who is to be chosen by the members thereof, or upon its own adjournments, and shall frame all rules and regulations authorized or required by this act, and shall make or cause to be made such special examinations and investigations at any place or places within the United States or at foreign ports as they may deem best, to aid in the execution of this act and the promotion of its objects.

SEC. 2. The duties of the national board of health shall be to obtain information upon all matters affecting the public health, to advise the several departments of the Government, the executives of the several States, and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, on all questions submitted by them, or whenever in the opinion of the board such advice may tend to the preservation and improvement of the public health. It shall also aid in the work of State boards of health, and of State or municipal quarantine authorities, by such means and to such extent as may seem to it necessary and desirable. And for this purpose it is authorized to pay a certain portion of the expenses of such State boards of health or quarantine authorities, at its discretion: Provided, That the amount so paid shall in no case exceed one-half the total expenses for any such board or quarantine authority: And provided further, That such reports and information as may be required by the national board of health shall be furnished by the State boards and quarantine authorities thus aided.

SEC. 3. That the board of health, with the assistance of the Academy of Science, which is hereby requested and directed to co-operate with them for that purpose, shall report to Congress at its next session a full statement of its transactions, together with a plan for a national public health organization, which plan shall be prepared after consultation with the principal sanitary organizations and the sanitarians of the several States of the United States, special attention being given to the subject of quarantine, both maritime and inland, and especially as to regulations which should be established between State or local systems of quarantine and a national quarantine system.

SEC. 4. The sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the salaries and expenses of said board, and the further sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am sure that after the House has passed upon the bill once, and rejected it very decidedly, the gentleman ought not to ask us at this hour of the morning to pass this outrage on State rights.

Mr. GIBSON. It is not an outrage on State rights at all.

Mr. MANNING. It contains the fullest recognition of State rights.

Mr. COX, of New York. The State of New York has spent millions of dollars on her local quarantine; and if the gentleman will say that the State quarantine shall be predominant over these national quarantines, I will not object.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. There is nothing in the bill but provisions which create certain officers with good salaries.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not want to create a board of that kind, and I hope that we shall not pass the bill.

The question was taken on Mr. GIBSON's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 60, noes 34.

Mr. CAMP. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. Cox of New York, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 3.

Mr. CONGER. I hope we shall have no filibustering on a serious question of this kind.

Mr. CAMP. No quorum has voted.

Mr. SINGLETON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to move to suspend the rules and put the Senate bill on its passage?

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House take a recess until nine o'clock.

The question was taken on Mr. KNOTT's motion; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I desire to make a proposition to the House upon the subject of this yellow-fever bill. If the gentleman who made the motion will state to the House that upon a conference with the Senate he will accept the Senate bill, I think we can get a quorum.

Mr. GIBSON. I reply to the gentleman. I will say that with certain modifications of the Senate bill it will be accepted.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I do not want any modifications of it.

CHARGES AGAINST THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.) The present occupant of the chair desires to state to the House that he took the chair for the special purpose of hearing the report from the committee appointed the other day of which Mr. CANDLER, of Georgia, is chairman, on matters relating to the Speaker of this House. The Chair thinks that matter ought to be disposed of.

The report was sent up to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GIBSON. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Other business has intervened and it is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Another subject is before the House.

Mr. HOOKER. The yeas and nays were called immediately after the announcement was made of the vote by tellers, and before any other measure was before the House. It certainly was in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia has already presented a report from a committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Georgia has already reported and his report is before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The matter to which the gentleman refers is pending and undisposed of for the reason that a quorum did not vote. As soon as this business is disposed of, it will again come up.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make the point of order that you cannot go back to this subject again on a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] to make his point of order after this report has been disposed of. The Clerk will now read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The special committee charged with the duty of inquiring into the statements made in the following letter—

[Confidential.]

SPECIAL AGENCY OF THE UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Baltimore, Maryland, September 2, 1876.

DEAR MAJOR: After leaving you I got the points, and I think there is no doubt whatever. In fact, the evidence is in the Treasury building to show that two appropriation warrants were illegally signed to get money to continue operations of the Engraving and Printing department, which was directly in the interest of SAMUEL J. RANDALL, who is a large stockholder in the paper-mill which is alone authorized to supply the Bureau of Engraving and Printing with paper for bonds, bank-notes, &c., and was accomplished through the influence of RANDALL, William Hemphill Jones, and George B. McCartee. I understand that Comptroller Robert W. Taylor signed the warrant through the influence and misrepresentations of Jones, and it is said, Conant signed as Acting Secretary in Bristow's absence, and with a full knowledge of the illegality of them. Of this latter I am not prepared to say, but think it true; but that there was two such warrants issued, amounting together to about $270,000, ($263,000 is the real amount,) there is no doubt, and the warrants can be produced.

H. L. WILLIAMS, Special Agent.

To Major WILLIAM B. MOORE,

Supervising Special Agent, United States Treasury—which appeared in the columns of the Commercial Bulletin, of New York, of the 26th, and the Washington Post of the 27th ultimo, submit this report:

Your committee, after a full examination, under oath, of H. L. Williams, the writer of this letter, William B. Moore to whom it was addressed, the officers of the Government having knowledge of the signing of the warrants in question, and every other person that there was reason to believe knew anything of the matter in this letter detailed and the purpose of its publication, all of which is herewith submitted, find that the statements therein made as to the illegality of the warrants, the object of their signing, the interest of Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL in the paper-mill which supplied the Bureau of Engraving and Printing with paper for bonds, bank-notes, &c., and the signing of the warrants by the acting Secretary of the Treasury through the influence and misrepresentations of William Hemphill Jones, are absolutely without foundation in fact.

Early in the year 1875 there was due from the Internal Revenue department of the Treasury to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for stamps the amount covered by the two warrants mentioned.

The Internal Revenue department had exceeded its appropriations for "dies, paper, and stamps," and was without means to pay the Bureau of Engraving and Printing its account for stamps.

There was an unexpended balance of the appropriation of $1,125,000 of that fiscal year for "labor on and other expenses of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States."

To meet this deficiency in the appropriations for "dies, paper, and stamps," and make available the balance of the appropriation "for labor and other expenses of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States" for the payment to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing its accounts for stamps furnished the Internal Revenue department, the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the Forty-third Congress at its second session estimates of these deficiencies, with a statement from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the debt to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The facts thus appearing to Congress, in the two general appropriation acts, approved March 3, 1875, the one "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," and the other "making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1875, and prior years, and for other purposes," provided as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the account of the expenditure for dies, paper, and stamps for the Internal Revenue department' for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, a transfer on the books of the Treasury of such sum as may be necessary is hereby authorized: Provided, That the same shall not involve any actual expenditure of money from the Treasury."

"To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the account of the expenditure 'for dies, paper, and stamps for the Internal Revenue department' for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, a transfer on the books of the Treasury of such sum as may be necessary is hereby authorized: Provided, That the same shall not involve any actual expenditure of money from the Treasury."

Under these provisions of law the two warrants in question were signed, and at the expiration of that fiscal year the appropriation warrant for the sum covered by the two transfer warrants was issued, adjusting the account of the expenditures for "dies, paper, and stamps" for the Internal Revenue department, and in transferring on the books of the Treasury the amount of the two warrants from one appropriation to another the debt due from the Internal Revenue department to the Bureau of Engraving was discharged.

The entire transaction was in perfect accordance with law intended for the purpose, involved no increased expenditure of money from the Treasury. No personal interest of Hon. SAMUEL J. RANFALL, the officials conducting the transaction, or persons having contracts with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were or could have been affected thereby.

Whatever may have suggested the writing of this letter by Williams to Moore; whether intended to secure increased favor for both from the President, to whom it was read, as it was nothing more than the product of mindless anxiety in the search of official corruption; or for the appearance of activity in the performance of the duties of their positions, as agents in the secret service of the Government, it is certain that every statement of wrong therein made was without even the semblance of truth, and at no time seemed to have deserved and never received official consideration.

Your committee would be remiss in duty if they should submit their report to the House without calling attention to the fact that this letter containing such grave charges against reputable gentlemen, notably against the Speaker of this House, admitted to be false by its author and its recipient, was hawked about the streets of Washington for sale to the press, the highest price named being $5; that it was promptly rejected by the Evening Star of this city, its reporter testifying that its falsity was apparent and was slanderous and libelous; that it was published by the Commercial Bulletin, of New York, and the Washington Post, with every avenue of information as to the correctness of its statements open.

Your committee admit that just criticism of official conduct is highly proper and conducive to the public good, but cannot refrain from saying that the publishing of this letter under all the circumstances evinces such a reckless disregard of public right and personal reputation as to entitle it to the severest censure.

MILTON A. CANDLER.
WM. P. LYNDE.
J. W. THROCKMORTON.
WM. P. FRYE.
JAMES MONROE.

Mr. CANDLER. Before calling for a vote, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WARD.]

Mr. WARD. I rise not for the purpose of attempting to add anything to the refutation contained in the report which has just been read; that would be impossible. The vindication of my distinguished colleague, the Speaker of this House, has followed swift and sweeping, as we knew it would. He is thrice armed against any such slanders, by his long-continued, honorable, and honest public record, and by his exemplary private life.

I rise for the purpose of endeavoring to avert the suggestion of suspicion from those who are not so well known and not so well able to defend themselves as is my distinguished colleague. The matters contained in the letter point indirectly, at least, to unworthy practices on the part of gentlemen who are constituents of mine, and whose works, at which this paper is manufactured, are located in my district. I allude to Messrs. Wilcox, the proprietors of the Glen Mills.

I want to say here that they are gentlemen who occupy in business circles, in private life as well as in their public pursuits, the highest possible position. For several years they have been in close and confidential relations with the Treasury Department. They have been intrusted with the manufacture of the paper for Government bonds, for currency and notes, the loss of a sheet of which would almost have been followed by a loss to the Government. Of the millions of sheets of this paper which they have manufactured, up to this time not one has escaped the vigilance they have exercised over them; and there has not been one complaint or imputation pointing, directly or indirectly, toward them until the sending out of the letter which was the basis of this inquiry.

I understand that one of the public officers who were connected with this slanderous and libelous production has been removed from office. The other one, a certain Mr. Williams, as I am informed, still remains in the employment of this Government. I stand here to protest against the retaining in public office of men who have no more regard for private character and for business reputation than to lay their ruthless hands upon them in the manner in which it has been done in the letter made public throughout the country. And the time has come when the attention of the superior officers of these men should be invoked, that they may be stopped in their reckless course of action, so that Congress may not be required to take the proper means to shield not only its own officers but private citizens also.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WARD] if he intends to cast any reflection upon Major Moore in connection with this matter, as the gentleman who has been dismissed from the public service?

Mr. WARD. I said that one of them had been dismissed; I believe it is Mr. Moore.

Mr. GLOVER. I will state that Mr. Moore has branded this transaction as infamous from the beginning to the end. It is true he received a letter addressed to him from Mr. Williams, but he is in no sense responsible for Williams's writing that letter. He has always said to me it is a fraud.

Mr. WARD. He should be dismissed from service, as should everybody else who had anything to do with it. There is nothing in the explanation that his letter was the private communication of a detective to his superior officer, and that its publication resulted from a quarrel between these two detectives. What palliation does this afford to the Speaker and the others whose names have been trailed through the mire, and a public investigation instituted to refute the slanders?

The officer clothed with the badge and authority of a special agent has immense authority in his grasp. He should be an honest and discreet man, understanding how to draw the line between guilt and innocence, and not willing to jeopardize a good name for the sake of creating a sensation or making a point in his own favor. The man who would put on paper such a baseless libel as this one, and allow it to remain in a shape where it could even by accident find its way into circulation, is not fit to be trusted with a special agency.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask a vote upon it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas said Williams is now employed in the Treasury Department as a special agent, and his semi-official letter, as found by the committee, shows him to be unfit for Government service: Therefore,

Resolved, That this House do recommend that said Williams be dismissed the service of the Government.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CANDLER] yields to me for a moment, and I will use the time for making an inquiry. I will preface that inquiry by saying that I fear the committee in the discharge of their duty in this matter have stepped out of the boundaries they should have occupied, and in their zeal to do their duty they have made a suggestion that ought not to appear in their report. I call the attention of the committee and the House to this:

Whatever may have suggested the writing of the letter by Mr. Williams and Mr. Moore; whether intended to secure the increased favor for both from the President, to whom it was read, &c.

Now, sir, the inference in that sentence, the suggestion plainly made, is that this slanderous and false letter was prepared not for the purpose of injuring the parties against whom it was directed, but for the purpose of securing favor from another to whom it was read. The inference, therefore, is that it was supposed that the President of the United States, with a knowledge of this infamous production, would extend increased favor to the party who was guilty of this admitted slander, simply because it was directed against one prominent in the political party opposed to that with which he is connected.

I think that is unfair; I think it is uncalled for; I think it is unsupported by everything that has appeared here or elsewhere. I suggest to the committee that that phrase ought to be erased from their report.

Mr. CANDLER. The inference is not at all authorized by the language used. It was not intended to suggest that the President had any knowledge at all of any of the matters alleged; but these two men being agents in the secret service, it was supposed, got up this letter intended to be read to the President of the United States in order to show that they were acting zealously in the discharge of their duties of their office; but at the same time it is stated that the matter did not deserve and never received any official consideration. The evidence accompanying the report states this, showing at the same time that no consideration at all was given by the President to the matter.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is the very point, that both the evidence and the report show that the letter was false; that it was known to be false; that it was written for some other purpose than currying favor with any one; yet with this knowledge, clear and uncontradicted, the committee make a report inferentially that the purpose of the letter was to curry favor with the President of the United States, simply because slander was written against an officer of this Government. And the language I have referred to ought not to be in the report.

Mr. CANDLER. The appointment of these men was not made by the President at all; and no such inference can be drawn, I think, from the language used; certainly no such inference was intended.

Mr. THOMPSON. Let me read the sentence again:

Whatever may have suggested the writing of this letter by Mr. Williams and Mr. Moore; whether intended to secure increased favor for both from the President, to whom it was read, or another purpose—

What does that mean?

Mr. CANDLER. It is certain there was no truth in it, and it never received at any time and never deserved official consideration.

Mr. THOMPSON. I know that; but why, then, throw out the suggestion that that was the purpose, notwithstanding it appears that the letter never received notice and never should have received notice?

Mr. CANDLER. The evidence shows, these witnesses testify, (it is true they complain now of each other,) that this letter was gotten up between the two parties in order to show that they were ready to pursue official corruption wherever it might be found—to show that they were actively engaged in the discharge of what was supposed to be the duties of their positions.

Mr. THOMPSON. But the inference is plain and palpable that, according to the understanding of the committee, increased favor from the President was to be obtained by writing letters of this kind under the guise of following out, ferreting out, and detecting crime, when it was known it was only a cover for an attack upon a citizen of this country.

Mr. CANDLER. Immediately upon the letter being received by Mr. Moore, it was read to the President; it was intended to be read to him at that time. There was no suggestion at all that it was false at that time.

Mr. THOMPSON. The impression left is that this Treasury agent, who knew the President, was willing to prostitute his position to slander a citizen for the purpose of securing favor with the President by slander.

Mr. CANDLER. Not at all.

I yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] is oversensitive for the President.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not a bit of it.

Mr. FRYE. There is not an intimation anywhere in that report or in the testimony that these men had any other purpose than to show that they were vigilant and careful in the exercise of their official duties in detecting crime; nothing else on earth. I fail to see how any gentleman on reading this report can suppose that any reflection is cast upon the President. Surely, sir, the republican members of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] and I, would not have consented to cast any reflection upon the President of the United States, either the President who now holds office or his predecessor.

Now as to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] I desire to say a word. I do not find anything in this evidence which shows malicious wrong upon the part of Williams. Williams was in the employ of the Government, and when he wrote this letter he supposed that it was true; that he had discovered certain things in relation to the transfers and the warrants which justified him in writing the letter. Subsequently to its being written there arose a difficulty between Moore and Jayne and Williams. Williams was employed to detect certain frauds in the kid-glove business in Canada. Jayne and Moore were employed in New York—one as a lawyer, perhaps both as lawyers—lawyers with certain detective inclinations and purposes—in behalf of the New York merchants who were suspected of this kid-glove fraud. There then commenced at once a war between them and Williams. That war we did not investigate; but Williams testified, if I remember the testimony correctly, that as soon as he learned the letter was false he made known that fact. Furthermore, Williams never intended this letter for publication anywhere. He wrote it to Moore as to a person in the same service; he wrote it as a private letter. He had nothing on earth to do with photographing or publishing it. Now it seems to me that under these circumstances Williams is not entitled to the censure which the gentleman from Massachusetts recommends.

If anybody is entitled to censure, and the severest censure, it is the gentlemen of the press who knew the Speaker of the House of Representatives perfectly well, who knew that the avenues of information were entirely open to them, that they could go to him or they could go to the Treasury Department, or they could go to the laws of the United States and find out at once whether the charges in those letters were true or false. But those gentlemen did not take the trouble to look at the laws to see whether transfers and assignments were authorized or not. They deliberately published that letter here, having inquired, as appears in the Washington Post, of the Speaker of the House whether the charges were true, having been informed by him that every word in the letter was false, and not content with that they added to it this poison that the Speaker of this House they understood had obtained the appointment for Mr. Jones, a discharged employé of the Treasury Department, to the clerkship of the Committee of Way and Means. Now, sir, if anybody is to be censured, if anybody is to receive punishment at the hands of this House, let it be the men of the press who thus trifle wickedly, maliciously, without any just cause, with a man in public life.

I say to the gentlemen of this House, your reputations every day are trifled with, and you hold throughout the country to-day a reputation you have no right to hold; you are held up to the public as being led blindly by lobbyists, as being bribed day after day, as selling your votes to the highest bidder, when you, sir, know, and you gentlemen on this floor know, that no man here can put his hand upon a gentleman in this House whom he would suspect for a moment of taking a bribe for his vote, selling it for money or anything else. Why, sir, where in this country can be found a body of men whose reputations are entitled to stand so fairly and so highly before the American people as the Congress of the United States? Bribed to sell their votes for money! What are members of Congress here for? For the money they get as salaries? How many men would come here and serve night and day for the salary they get, the most of which they pay out in the necessary expenses of their service? Is it for honor? It must be for honor alone that men of ability, men of talent, men of education, serve their country in this House. If for honor, will they compromise that honor for money; will they put that reputation into the hands of miserable lobbyists or go-betweens in the streets of Washington—give all they come here for, give that which is dearer to them than anything else on earth, their reputation, into the keeping of reckless and wicked men? Will they throw it into the hands of the purchasing, bribe-giving lobbyist? Will they thus sell their birthright for a mess of pottage? I tell you no, sir; and the press of this country owes it to Congress that its members shall be treated as men of honor, as men of reputation. If you must censure, let your censure fall where it belongs, and not upon this officer of the Government who thought he was doing his duty, and on learning the falsehood of the charges stated that they were false.

Mr. CANDLER. I call for the previous question.

Mr. WARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine a question. Does he justify Williams in reporting such information without the due inquiry that would enable him to know positively whether it was true or false?

Mr. FRYE. In reply to that inquiry I have to say this: I understand Moore was then or had been in the detective service of the Government?

Mr. GLOVER. He was at the head of the force.

Mr. FRYE. That Williams was also in the force, and that it was no publishing of this information for one member of the force to write it to another, that other his superior; that he had no earthly purpose to injure the reputation of any one when he wrote it, and no earthly knowledge that it would be published to the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield any further?

Mr. BUTLER. If the committee have found Williams wrote this letter innocently from information that he received, and that the publication is not due to him, that would put a different phase on the matter so far as he is concerned; and while I agree to all that is said by my friend from Maine as to the recklessness with which such slanders are published to the world, yet there is a necessity that the source as well as the vehicle of them should be stopped. The Secretary of the Treasury will know of the action of this House and of this committee, and, after investigation, if he does not choose to see to it that so careless a detective in getting information, to say the least, is unfit for the Government service, the House hereafter will have it in its power to bring the matter to his attention, and therefore I will withdraw my resolution under the circumstances.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to state one other thing. That letter was hawked around the streets of Washington for sale at five dollars. Newspaper after newspaper was visited, and the reporters of the papers were told that here was a good thing; here was carrion on which crows might feed, and they could have it for five dollars. The reporter of the Evening Star, who was a witness on the stand, said that it was offered to him as a good thing and that he looked at it and saw that it was a vile falsehood, slanderous and libelous, and, like a man and a gentleman, he refused to touch it as he would refuse to touch pitch.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Did it appear from the testimony where it came from?

Mr. FRYE. I think Moore had it photographed.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution of the committee was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. CANDLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANDLER. I also move that the report and evidence be printed in the usual way.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GIBSON. I now call for the yeas and nays on the pending proposition.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a privileged question. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the order was made authorizing the reports from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to be printed and recommittees.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman cannot do that when I merely enter a motion to reconsider, to be called up at some future time.

Mr. SPARKS. In the first place, we have a right to know how the gentleman voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The recollection of the present occupant of the chair was that this order was made by the unanimous consent of the House.

Some time subsequently.

Mr. GLOVER said: I call for the reading of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to reconsider the question of printing the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is simply entered and is passed over for the present.

Mr. GLOVER. I did not observe at the time that it applied to the committee with which I am connected.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House take a recess until nine o'clock a. m.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me that I may call for the yeas and nays on the pending proposition.

Mr. ATKINS. I yield for that purpose.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 6250) granting a pension to Morris Dwight.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I desire to make a statement in reference to a bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. KIMMEL,] and made a special order for the 30th January; a bill in reference to an increase of the number of boys on naval school ships. It was intended that it should be a special order after the reading of the Journal, but it was journalized so that it read, after the morning hour. The result was that that bill never was reached. There is not a member of this House, as I am advised, who will be against the bill if it should be considered. I am further advised that the Committee on Naval Affairs are unanimous in their recommendation of the bill. I ask that at some time before we adjourn the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KIMMEL] may have the opportunity of making that report. I ask that in justice to the gentleman and in justice to myself.

Mr. WILSON. I hold in my hand a bill which I consider of much greater importance, and on which I ask the action of the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. As regards the business of the House, I feel it is our duty to make provision for the payment of arrearages of pensions before our adjournment; and I shall feel unwilling to consent to anything unless some arrangement is made by which that matter can be brought before the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a matter now before the House, and unless the gentleman from Michigan yields the floor or some motion like that made which takes precedence, the business in charge of that gentleman must be proceeded with.

THE DIGEST.

Mr. SAYLER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies of the Digest for the use of the members at the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. TIPTON. I move that the House take a recess until nine o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at seven o'clock and twenty minutes a. m.) the House took a recess till nine o'clock a. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at nine o'clock a. m., Tuesday, March 4.

EMANUEL KLOSSER.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1540) to relieve Emanuel Klauser from the charge of mutiny, and give him an honorable discharge. It is a bill which was passed by the House in the Forty-fourth Congress, being reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and went to the Senate, but did not get through for want of time. It cannot do any one any possible harm.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The only difficulty about these bills is that they give back bounties amounting to several thousand dollars, and I object to its present consideration.

PAY OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, immediately after the adjournment, to issue to the employes of the House borne on the annual rolls their respective salaries for the month of March.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. AIKEN to print some remarks in the RECORD upon a patent case upon which a report was made. [See Appendix.]

SIGNAL STATION, BLOCK ISLAND.

Mr. EAMES, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the State of Rhode Island, in relation to a signal station on Block Island; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to the Committee on Naval Affairs to file with the Clerk of the House the reports on bills and resolutions referred to that committee, and that the same be printed.

GENERAL A. S. WILLIAMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House resolutions of the board of education of Detroit, Michigan, in respect to the memory of the late Hon. Alpheus S. Williams; which were laid on the table.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 250) to donate condemned cannon to the Williams Monument Association of Detroit.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to donate to the Williams Monument Association of Detroit, Michigan, ten condemned cannon for a monument to the late General A. S. Williams.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PROPERTY DESTROYED IN CYNTHIANA, KENTUCKY.

Mr. KEIFER, from the Committee on War Claims, by unanimous consent, reported adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1030) for property in Cynthiana, Kentucky, destroyed by fire in June, 1864; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. KIMMEL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2240) to amend sections 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, and 1624, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the United States Navy.

The bill was read. It provides that section 1417 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 1417. The number of persons who may at one time be enlisted into the Navy of the United States, including seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, mechanics, firemen, and coal-heavers, and including seven hundred and fifty apprentices and boys, hereby authorized to be enlisted annually, shall not exceed eight thousand two hundred and fifty. Provided, That no person shall be appointed a warrant officer in the naval service of the United States who has not been discharged upon the expiration of an enlistment as an apprentice or boy, to serve during minority, and re-enlisted to serve during the term of three years, except under the provisions of section 1407 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

That section 1418 be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 1418. Boys between the ages of fifteen and seventeen years may be enlisted to serve in the Navy until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years; other persons may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding five years, unless sooner discharged by direction of the President.

That section 1419 be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 1419. Minors between the age of fifteen and seventeen years shall not be enlisted for the naval service without the consent of their parents or guardians.

That section 1420 be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 1420. No minor under the age of fifteen years, no insane or intoxicated person, and no deserter from the naval or military service of the United States shall be enlisted in the naval service.

That article 19 of section 1624 be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 1624. Article 19.—Any officer who knowingly enlists into the naval service any deserter from the naval or military service of the United States, or any insane or intoxicated person, or any minor between the ages of fifteen and seventeen years without the consent of his parents or guardian, or any minor under the age of fifteen years, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

Mr. PRICE. Where does that bill come from?

Mr. HANNA. It comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and received its unanimous approval. If we expect to have an American Navy it ought to pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have received from the United States centennial commission their final report, presenting a full exhibit of the result of the United States centennial celebration and exhibition of 1876, as required by the act of June 1, 1872.

In transmitting this report for the consideration of Congress, I express, I believe, the general judgment of the country, as well as my own, in assigning to this exhibition a measure of success gratifying to the pride and patriotism of our people, and full of promise to the great industrial and commercial interests of the nation.

The very ample and generous contributions which the foreign nations made to the splendor and usefulness of the exhibition, and the cordiality with which their representatives took part in our national commemoration, deserve our profound acknowledgments.

At this close of the great services rendered by the United States centennial commission and the centennial board of finance, it gives me great pleasure to commend to your attention, and that of the people of the whole country, the laborious, faithful, and prosperous performances of their duties which have marked the administration of their respective trusts.

R. R. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1879.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 1827) for the relief of D. W. McClung, of Wooddale, Butler County, Ohio.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3690) to relieve the churches of the District of Columbia and to clear the title of the trustees to such property.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. BLAINE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. WITHERS.

KLAMATH RESERVATION, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hold in my hand a joint resolution, unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands, to protect the settlers on an old Indian reservation which has been abandoned for more than sixteen years.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that all the lands embraced within the limits of the abandoned Indian reservation in the State of California known as the Klamath River reservation, abandoned in 1855, when the tribe was removed to another reservation established for its use, shall be subject to entry as other public lands in said State under the homestead and pre-emption laws; and that all persons, including Indians, owning improvements on said reservation at the time of the passage of this act shall have a prior right to enter the same within six months after this act shall go into effect.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the gentleman will not object. Every officer, Federal, State, and county, asks that this be done; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs some years ago invited settlements on this reservation.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is too late to pass any joint resolution now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later in the day.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA.

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration and action at this time the bill (S. No. 1691) giving the consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into between the States of Virginia and Maryland respecting the boundary between said States.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. That is all right.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

WARD B. BURNETT.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table at this time for action the bill (S. No. 1852) granting an increase of pension to Ward B. Burnett. This bill would have been passed last Friday night but for an oversight.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Ward B. Burnett and pay him a pension of $50 a month in lieu of what he now receives, nothing in this act to entitle him to arrears of pension.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. What war was he wounded in?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. In the Mexican war. He has had forty-five years of service. It is a very meritorious case. Mr. HEWITT, of New York, recommends it, and it should have been passed last Friday night.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The Committee on Naval Affairs unanimously recommend that Senate bill No. 184, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior for entry and sale all lands in the State of Florida not needed for naval purposes, be passed by the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I rise to a question of privilege. I have been seeking to have justice done to the settlers in my State.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman, as soon as a quorum is here, to move a suspension of the rules.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask that the bill I have indicated be now passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause an examination to be made of the condition of all lands in the State of Florida which have been set apart or reserved for naval purposes, excepting the reservation upon which the navy-yard at Pensacola is located, and to ascertain whether or not such reserved lands are or will be of any value to the Government of the United States for naval purposes.

Sec. 2. That all of said lands which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, are no longer required for naval purposes shall, as soon as practicable, be certified by him to the Secretary of the Interior, and be subject to entry and sale in the same manner and under the same conditions as other public lands of the United States: Provided, That all persons who have in good faith made improvements on said reserved lands at the time of the passage of this act, and who occupy the same, shall be entitled to purchase the part or parts so occupied and improved by them, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres to any one person, for such sum or sums as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior; but such price shall in no case be less than $1.25 per acre.

Sec. 3. That the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Navy to carry out the provisions of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE IN DAKOTA.

Mr. KIDDER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage the bill (S. No. 1582) providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of Dakota. This bill has been examined by the Committee on the Territories of this House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TURNEY,] a member of that committee, has charge of the bill.

Mr. TURNEY. The bill is unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Territories.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

TREATY WITH MEXICO.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a joint resolution providing for a treaty with the Republic of Mexico.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. PRICE. Is that a House joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Is it presented for action now?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PRICE. I must object to it.

Mr. WILSON. Its passage is requested by the Secretary of State and demanded by the commercial and manufacturing interests of the country. I move to suspend the rules to put the resolution on its passage.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum here now.

THOMAS B. HUNT.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and have passed the bill (S. No. 174) for the relief of Thomas B. Hunt.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time. It provides that the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line be suspended for the purposes of the act, and only so far as they affect Thomas B. Hunt; and the President is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Thomas B. Hunt, late captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Army, to the same grade and rank of captain and assistant quartermaster held by him prior to February 26, 1874; but it is provided that his pay shall commence only from the date of his reappointment under the act.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE HEARD.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1535) for the relief of George Heard.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time. It directs the proper officers of the Interior Department to prepare and cause to be issued and delivered to George Heard, assignee of Chester Hebner, a bounty-land warrant, in pursuance of an act of Congress of 1847, for one hundred and sixty acres of land, in lieu of bounty-land warrant No. 61178, burned and destroyed, in such form that the same can be located by Heard or assigned and transferred by him and located by his assignee.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. This bill passed the Senate without objection. I hope it will not be objected to here.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL B. STAUBER.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to make my last request of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROBBINS makes his last request of the House. He asks unanimous consent that the House take up and concur in the Senate amendment to a bill on the Speaker's table—House bill No. 1336 for the relief of Samuel B. Stauber and others. The bill proposes merely to refund a few hundred dollars of overpaid taxes.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I object.

CHEYENNE AND BLACK HILLS RAILWAY AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Mr. SHELLEY. By the direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I ask the House to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 655) to incorporate the Cheyenne and Black Hills Railway and Telegraph Company.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object to this bill, as I will to all other bills until the arrears of pension bill can be reached.

ARREARS OF PENSION.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking up for consideration the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6462) making appropriations for the payment of arrears of pension?

Mr. McKENZIE. I object to that bill. If it be passed I shall insist on a quorum.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. This may be the last chance we may have to pass the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. There will have to be a quorum for that bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have no disposition to obstruct the wishes of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] but there is already pending a motion to suspend the rules, made by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON,] for the purpose of passing the yellow-fever bill.

Mr. SPARKS. This is an appropriation bill which has already passed this House with very little objection. It has been amended in the Senate.

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] raises the point of order that one motion to suspend the rules is already pending. As soon as the Chair can dispose of that motion he will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to move to take up the arrears of pensions bill. Is there any one here to take charge of the yellow-fever bill?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARLISLE. On the yellow fever bill the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] had demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. There are some gentlemen who do not know what the question is.

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill known as the McGowan health bill.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Is it the same bill which has been under consideration heretofore in the House?

Mr. GOODE. It is not the same bill, but a bill which has been indorsed and approved by the committee on this subject and by the executive committee of the American Health Association.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I call for the reading of the bill.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make a report from the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. ATKINS. I send to the desk a report from the committee of conference on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

J. D. C. ATKINS,

M. J. DURHAM,

CHARLES FOSTER,

Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM WINDOM,

W. B. ALLISON,

JAMES E. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House insist on its disagreement and agree to the further conference asked for by the Senate; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I move that the House recede from its disagreement.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee give way for the motion indicated by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. McKENZIE. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Indiana I move that the House take a recess for twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is on the floor.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. Is he willing, in order to have a test vote in the House, to yield to the motion indicated by the gentleman from Indiana that the House recede?

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee: whether or not, if the House shall agree to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee and a new conference is appointed, there is a likelihood of agreement before the close of the session?

Mr. ATKINS. In response to the question of the gentleman from Maine, I have to say that the Senate has appointed another committee of conference and asked the House to meet them again in conference. I therefore made the motion which I did just now to insist upon our disagreement and agree to the further conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield, I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not willing that debate should continue.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman from Indiana insists on his motion that the House recede, I insist on my motion that we take a recess.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. With the understanding that it is the desire of the gentleman from Tennessee that there should be a further conference, with a view, if possible, to an agreement being arrived at, I withdraw my motion.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. ATKINS was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. ATKINS, Mr. DURHAM, and Mr. FOSTER.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 6126) to establish post-routes.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. GIBSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] to suspend the rules and pass the bill known as the McGowan health bill; the bill to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States and to establish a national board of health.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to a question of order. Is there not a motion pending to have a recess?

Mr. SHELLEY. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. GOODE. I hope that will be voted down so that we may pass this bill.

The question being taken on Mr. SHELLEY's motion, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the yeas had it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays only thirteen members voted therefor.

So the yeas and nays were refused, and the motion that the House take a recess was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill known as the McGowan health bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McKENZIE. I demand the reading of the bill.

The bill was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 64, not voting 56; as follows:

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. LINDSEY, of Maine, but I am informed by his friends that he would not object to my voting. I therefore vote "ay."

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I am paired with Mr. NEAL, of Ohio.

Mr. CAMP. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BEEBE. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. MONEY. Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT. If he were present, I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRISON, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1827) for the relief of D. W. McClung, of Wooddale, Butler County, Ohio.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. I move to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6462) making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's objection comes too late.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. I have a right to hear the amendments of the Senate read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked if there was objection, and there was none.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House adjourn, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPARKS. Can I be taken off the floor for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The rule states that pending a motion to suspend the rules one motion to adjourn is in order.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and twenty-two members voted therefor—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only twenty members voting therefor.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on Mr. SPARKS's motion to concur in the Senate amendments to the bill.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

On page 1, after line 18, insert "the pension agents shall receive for their services and expenses in paying the arrears upon pensions allowed previous to January 25, 1879, including postage on the vouchers and checks sent to the pensioner thirty cents for each voucher, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the payment of the same."

Page 2, strike out all after "pensions," in line 4, down to and including "pensions," in line 5.

Page 2 at the end of line 8, insert "and before being mustered out: Provided, That in no case shall arrears of pensions be allowed and paid from a time prior to the date of actual disability."

At the end of the bill add the following section:

SEC. 2. All pensions which have been or which may hereafter be granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, if the disability occurred prior to the discharge; and if such disability occurred after the discharge, then from the date of actual disability or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension: Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, otherwise pensions shall commence from the date of filing the application, but the limitation herein prescribed shall not apply to claims by or in behalf of insane persons and children under sixteen years of age.

SEC. 3. Section 4709 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I demand a separate vote on the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and agree to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Then I demand the reading of the bill as it will be amended.

The SPEAKER. The amended bill is not before the House.

Mr. KNOTT. I demand the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand a vote upon that motion.

Mr. MILLS. How much money does the bill appropriate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not competent to answer that question, for he does not know.

Mr. MILLS. We ought to know and let the people of the United States know.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. This bill takes a large amount of money out of the pockets of the people, and I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was put upon ordering the yeas and nays, and thirty-six members voted therefor, not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. MILLS. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCKENZIE and Mr. SPARKS were appointed.

Mr. HANNA. I hope we will have the yeas and nays, and make a record on this bill.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 57 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 61, net voting 26; as follows:

FAILURE OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, after our exhausting labors I promise that I shall detain the House but a few moments. Members will bear me witness that I am not in the habit of occupying the floor long at a time, indeed as seldom as my duty will permit.

I regret that the conference committee upon this bill, which I regard the most important of the appropriation bills, have utterly failed to agree. We have had three sittings; we have discussed the question in every possible phase of it, and we have found it impossible to come to any agreement.

What might have been effected if the whole subject had been left to the conferees themselves, and to themselves alone, it is not necessary for me here to say; nor am I warranted in saying even that they could have come to a conclusion. But they each felt that there was a power behind them which would admit of no agreement. The disagreement between them is radical. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the House has demanded in, I may say unmistakable terms, free elections, untrammelled elections. The House has demanded also intelligent juries, and that jurors should not be subjected to test oaths while members of Congress coming from the Southern States and representing the majesty of the people upon this floor are not subjected to such oaths.

Upon glancing at the clock I am reminded that I must be very brief. I had designed to discuss these subjects somewhat more at length than I will now do on account of the limited time, and because I owe to my colleagues on the conference committee a courtesy which I am determined to pay. I must therefore be as concise as possible.

There were about one hundred amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. We were enabled to agree in regard to most of these amendments. We did not agree to the salaries of the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives. I believe it is but candid to say, however, that if we could have agreed upon the other points we might have agreed upon that.

Mr. Speaker, the deliberate action of this House in attaching the repealing clause to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of certain sections of the Revised Statutes has been respected and firmly maintained by the majority members of the House conferees. Upon so grave a question, one not measured by a mere appropriation of money but involving the rights and liberties of American citizens, the majority of the House conferees did not hesitate a moment to resolutely stand by the injunctions and carry out the action of the body which created our functions. Whatever individual opinions of mere policy in the beginning I or any other Representative may have entertained, and upon which it is usual to exercise the broadest latitude and the most liberal discretion in conference, here is a question involving the most sacred rights and privileges of the citizen, around which this House has thrown theegis of its protection and over which this committee has been intrusted a special guardianship, and one which they had no disposition to disregard.

The committee could not agree upon that feature of the bill which proposes to repeal the test oath now applied to Federal jurors. The importance of selecting juries from among the most intelligent of the people is too plain to admit of argument. The rights of property, the well-being of society, and the safety of the best interests of the State require the abrogation of a law which drives intelligence from the jury-box and installs it with ignorance and prejudice.

What public or private harm can result from the repeal of such a law is to my mind inexplicable. Without its repeal the substantial ends of justice will continue to be defeated and the sanctity of the verdicts and judgments of juries and of courts will sink into ridicule and contempt. Surely, any law which becomes contemptible in its execution and irritates rather than appeases and assuages popular sentiment is radically wrong and ought to be repealed.

The conference committee were equally unfortunate in not agreeing upon the provisions of the bill which repeal the laws authorizing the appointment of supervisors and deputy marshals. So far as the supervisors are intended to supervise elections and see that a fair count is had, I have heard no complaint. These officers are selected from both political parties, and if confined to simply supervising elections to prevent fraud, there is not any special objection.

But when these officers are used for police purposes—to make arrests and otherwise interfere with the rights of citizens—there is a vital and fundamental objection. There is no warrant in the Constitution for clothing supervisors with police powers; that power is lodged with the States. But grant that the Constitution clothes them with police duties and powers, why should they, aided by an army of deputy marshals, turn upon that Constitution and rend it by defeating a fair election? That such has been the unvarying and oft-repeated result for years past is not seriously denied that I am aware of. These deputy marshals are invariably selected on account of their known partisanship and efficiency in manipulating and managing elections; they are appointed by the Administration on account of their facility and readiness to work for the attainment of party ends.

Realizing that the language of the Constitution (article I, section 4) only confers the power upon Congress to decide when, where, and how the elections of members of Congress may be held and conducted, but does not extend to the qualifications of voters except such as are made necessary under State constitutions to render a citizen eligible as an elector for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, this House and the country feel that the system of laws which should protect the sanctity of the elective franchise may be and has been converted into an ingenious engine to deny and even overthrow the purity of the ballot-box, which lies at the base of the very citadel of freedom. All agree that in America a free, unobstructed, and unintimidated ballot is fundamentally essential to free institutions, and any supervision which prevents its voluntary and unfettered exercise is at war with the spirit of the Constitution, no matter though its empty forms may be complied with.

The practical effect of these laws has been to prevent fair elections and arouse in the public mind the gravest apprehensions for that purity and legality without which elective government becomes a simple mockery. If intimidation and the fear of arrest drive electors from the polls or force them to vote against their will, in what does the plebiscit of France which elevated Napoleon to be the supreme ruler of that country differ from our boasted rights of suffrage? No more violent assault was ever made upon the freedom of the elective franchise in France during that period of simulated liberty to which I have just referred, when to have refused to support this mock hero of republicanism was equivalent to incarceration in the Bastille, than was made in the great city of New York and other places on the day of the election in November last, when thousands of American citizens were arrested and imprisoned with the sole view of preventing them from voting. That such acts of tyranny so utterly subversive of liberty may not be repeated this House has taken its stand in the sacred name of freedom, and demands the repeal of the laws under the cover of which these wrongs were perpetrated.

The right of the Representatives of the people to withhold supplies is as old as English liberty. History records numerous instances where the common feeling that the people were oppressed by laws that the lords would not consent to repeal by the ordinary methods of legislation obtained redress at last by refusing appropriations unless accompanied by relief measures.

This is not an ordinary affirmative proposition which is here sought to be ingrafted upon this bill to be carried through by virtue of its momentum, but it is simply a relief measure, a repeal of a bad law.

The system of laws so ingeniously blended to obstruct the free exercise of the elective franchise, and against which the majority in this House is now arrayed, grew out of the military ideas which have dominated the legislation of this country since the war. But the time has now come when these measures of injustice and inequality, so long and so patiently endured, must give way to the advancing and well-grounded sentiment of free elections in all the States of this Union, and the equal rights of all men at the ballot-box.

As long as these relics of military domination remain upon the statute-book just so long will the public mind continue to be agitated. As long as statutory contrivances continue to be used to defeat the popular will, so long will the people struggle to wipe them out. As long, too, as these measures incumber the statute-book economic questions of administration will retire before their presence. For what matters any given line of policy if the people are denied the right of suffrage, or if the chosen Representatives of the people are ejected by arbitrary power from the places to which they have been elected? We therefore submit the general disagreement, and now relegate to the House the trust imposed by the expression of its judgment and action.

Speaking for myself alone, it seems to me that the majority, having demanded the repeal of these iniquitous laws, have reached a point where retreat is impossible, and where it will be easier to go through than retrace their steps. Whatever responsibility attaches to either House or either party, or the individual members of each, either the one or the other, for the failure of these appropriation bills, the people will fix it where it belongs. That the majority of this House should be blamed for demanding the repeal of statutes which are unjust and unconstitutional, is hardly probable. Believing, therefore, that the repeal is justified by every consideration of fairness and right, the majority can well afford to submit this issue to the verdict of the people.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WOOD. I move that there be appointed a committee of three members to join with such committee of the Senate as they may appoint, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses are about to adjourn sine die and inquire if he has any further communication to make to Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the committee Mr. WOOD of New York, Mr. BLACKBURN of Kentucky, and Mr. GARFIELD of Ohio.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT AND NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the appointment under the law as visitors at West Point, of Mr. BLOUNT of Georgia, Mr. MILLS of Texas, and Mr. HALE of Maine; and as visitors to the Naval Academy Mr. DURHAM of Kentucky, Mr. KNAPP of Illinois, and Mr. FREEMAN of Pennsylvania.

FAILURE OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not propose to take but a moment of the time of the House. I want to say once for all that if our democratic friends would have consented to any reasonable adjustment, no necessity would now exist for an extra session of Congress, and I now, Mr. Speaker, offer what I send to the desk to be read as a part of my remarks; and if it can be passed now at this moment, under a suspension of the rules, we can yet avert an extra session.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.
Be it enacted, &c. That for a period not exceeding six months from and after the 30th day of June, 1879—

Mr. FOSTER, (interrupting the reading.) The bill need not be read. It is a copy, verbatim, of the act introduced in 1876 by the then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for the extension of the appropriations of the various Departments of the Government for a few days, with only this difference, that this provides for an extension for six months and covers two appropriation bills. If I can have unanimous consent, I will move that that bill be now put upon its passage.

[Cries on the democratic side of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. FOSTER. If I can offer that, an extra session can be averted.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I do not object to the reading of the resolution, but I object to its being offered for the purpose of being considered at this time.

Mr. BANKS. Let it be read.

Mr. FOSTER. I only want that it shall be printed as part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. It may as well be read.

Mr. WILSON. I think it would be better to have the paper read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That for a period not exceeding six months from and after the 30th day of June, 1879, unless the regular appropriations shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1880, it shall be lawful to use for the necessary service of the Government any unexpended balance which may exist of the appropriations made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879; and in case no sufficient balance remains at the conclusion of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, to the credit of any appropriation, the necessary amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and no greater amount shall be expended under this act than such proportional sum of the appropriation of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, as six months' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year, and such expenditure shall be only for the necessary operations of the Government under existing laws. All sums expended under this act shall be charged to and deducted from the appropriations for like service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and this act shall apply only to expenditures upon subjects which are embraced under the provisions of the acts making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government and for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879.

Mr. FOSTER. I now renew my request that I may be permitted to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. I have no doubt that if it pass this House it would pass the Senate in two minutes.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It will not pass this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Then take the responsibility if you want to do so.

Mr. SOUTHARD. We will take the responsibility and appeal to the verdict that will be rendered by the country.

Mr. HOOKER. The paper which has been read is the argument of the gentleman from Ohio why he did not yield to the amendments which we put on the appropriation bills. It is an excuse, and a lame one, for his not having done what he ought to have done in the committee of conference, that is, assented to the amendments.

Mr. ATKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] five minutes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 174) for the relief of Thomas B. Hunt;

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 1346) for the relief of William C. Edmonston;

A bill (H. R. No. 1704) for the relief of Daniel M. Frost, and the heirs and executors of William M. McPherson, of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 6500) to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a national board of health.

Mr. SAMPSON, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 3737) for the relief of V. H. McCormick; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4565) for the relief of Lieutenant George M. Wells, of the Marine Corps.

FAILURE OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DURHAM. I shall not detain the House more than a very few moments, and I certainly should not have said anything but for the fact that I have had to bear my share of responsibility in the difficulties of the situation that now surround not only this Congress but the whole people of the United States.

Every member upon this floor, Mr. Speaker, knows what have been my ideas on the subject of putting general legislation upon appropriation bills. Anticipating a result of this kind it is known to all that in the regular course of legislation a bill repealing all these laws was introduced by myself, referred to the proper committee of this House, and matured by that committee; and the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] and myself have prepared a report in the regular course of business of this House. That report is now in print. That report gives expression to my sincere and honest sentiments. I believe and have ever believed that the States, and the States alone, have a right to regulate their own elections, and that the Government of the United States has no right to interfere in any election or in any of the domestic affairs of any of the States unless the States prove themselves insufficient to preserve order and carry out and maintain the laws of the country.

Whenever, Mr. Speaker, insurrection exists, whether it be at the ballot-box, at the polls, or at any other place, and the constituted authorities of that State are insufficient to quell insurrection, to secure every individual that right which is granted to him, not only by the constitution of his State, but by the Constitution of the United States, then it may be proper for the Federal Government to interfere; but I do not believe such a state of case has existed anywhere, either North or South. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these supervisors, these deputy marshals who are employed under the pretext of preserving order at the polls, have been more corrupting to the ballot-box and have thwarted the will of the American people more than would have been done had those officers never been created.

I believe it is one of the cardinal principles of the democratic party—certainly it is one with myself—that the States must regulate these matters for themselves, and believing so, I had no hesitation in saying from the beginning that all these obnoxious statutes should be wiped and blotted from the statute-book.

I would have preferred, Mr. Speaker, that these matters should have come in the regular course of legislation, as I said a moment ago; but if that could not be accomplished, then, when it was put on this appropriation bill by the majority of the House, I felt that as the organ, in part, of the House I was in honor bound to stand by the instructions given to me; and I should have stood by those instructions until the hands on that dial pointed to the hour of twelve. But if the session had continued one month longer I would have obeyed them. Unless the House had directed me to surrender, I never would have surrendered, but would have stood by the action of the House. [Applause on the democratic side of the House and in the galleries.]

Only one or two words more. I believe local self-government is the cardinal principle involved in State sovereignty. I believe that it lies at the foundation of all free institutions. Believing, as I said a moment ago, that all these laws in regard to supervisors and marshals corrupt the ballot-box rather than preserve its purity, I am glad that, as I perhaps shall never stand in the American Congress again, that as I shall within a few minutes step out of the position which I have occupied here for the last six years, in the last declaration I shall probably ever utter in the American Congress, the opportunity is presented to me to raise my voice for free elections, free ballots, for State rights, and for unrestricted local self-government. [Great applause on the democratic side.]

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WOOD, from the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, reported that, in conjunction with the committee appointed on behalf of the Senate, they had performed that duty, and that the President had requested them to inform the two Houses of Congress that he had no further communication to make to them, except as to the signing of bills.

ELECTION CONTEST—NUTTING VS. REILLY.

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee of Elections, submitted a report in the contested-election case of Nutting vs. Reilly, from the thirteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRICE submitted the views of the minority of the Committee of Elections on the same case; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

Mr. REILLY (the contestee) asked and obtained leave to print some remarks in the RECORD upon the subject. [See Appendix.]

FAILURE OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ATKINS. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] a member of the Committee on Appropriations, for five minutes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a sane man in the country who wants an extra session of Congress. The embarrassments that will follow from it are grave and many. The inflammation of political issues and discussions, the possible conflict between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, above all the great financial and currency questions, touching nigh the business interests of all the people, which will be disturbed and kept in an uncertain condition, altogether nothing more calamitous could befall the country.

This side of the House has sat here every day since this session began trying to urge forward the needed legislative business. We have been willing to pass appropriation bills, pure and simple, and to adjourn and let the country have the peace which it needs.

The other side of the House has, without need, forced political amendments upon appropriation bills, and the responsibility is theirs. I have faith to believe that there are many moderate, prudent, and patriotic men on the other side, who dread the result of this, who are not satisfied with it. But the spectacle presented is not a rare one in history, where the revolutionary and reactionary elements in a great party, though in a minority as to numbers, have obtained such control of it as to drive the entire force of the party toward revolution. If the people of the North do not appreciate the situation now, they never will appreciate it. If the people of the whole country do not appreciate it now, they never will appreciate it.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] has said that it was necessary to put upon the appropriation bills this political legislation. Sir, my comment upon that statement is to say that I hold in my hand a bill passed seventy-four days ago by a republican Senate repealing the test oath so much insisted on by this democratic House. That bill is very brief and in these words:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 820 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed, saving the application of the same to all offenses committed prior to April 20, 1871, and all proceedings for prosecution of offenses pending on the said 20th day of April, 1871.

Passed the Senate, December 20, 1878.

Attest:

By WM. E. SPENCER, Chief Clerk.

GEO. C. GORHAM, Secretary.

Seventy-four days have gone by since that bill came to us from the Senate, and no attempt has been made to take it from the Speaker's table and pass it, so as to give the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] and his associates "an honest and an intelligent jury." [Applause on the republican side.]

Instead of that, a democratic caucus has taken this matter into its own hands, has ignored a proper bill passed by a republican Senate, and has demanded that this and other measures, which they declare to be of vital importance, shall be forced through Congress upon appropriation bills. It has attempted to array this House against a coordinate branch of the National Legislature, the Senate of the United States, as I believe with the intention on the part of some men belonging to the reactionary and revolutionary portion of that party to precipitate an extra session of Congress. That is what I have charged from the beginning, and in proof of the correctness of my assertion is this bill passed by a republican Senate, but which this democratic House has persistently refused even to take up and consider. [Great and continued applause on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. SOUTHARD. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to me for a minute or two.

Mr. ATKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio for a minute.

Mr. SOUTHARD. As the mover of a part of these amendments, I desire to say that it was with the highest, the purest, and the most patriotic motives. The positions taken are incontestably right, and will be maintained until these odious laws cease to exist. Laws prescribing test oaths for jurors and those creating marshals and supervisors of elections, clothed with the arbitrary power of arrest without warrant, should cease to exist in this free country, and the polling-places of elections should be free from the presence of the military. As it has been in England since the dawn of her civilization, so shall it be in America. The democratic party have considerably and firmly planted themselves upon these truths. They now appeal to the people of these United States, confidently trusting in their patriotism, their intelligence, and their integrity. [Applause on the democratic side of the House.]

Mr. ATKINS. I believe the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will remember that there was a motion made to suspend the rules and pass these very measures, and the other side of the House voted against it and defeated it. [Applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. MANNING. Yes, Mr. Speaker, three weeks ago I made a motion to suspend the rules and put upon its passage a bill repealing the test oath and certain election laws. One hundred and twenty-six democrats voted for the passage of the bill and one hundred and thirteen republicans voted against it; the democrats standing solidly for it and the republicans solidly against it.

Mr. HALE. Bring out the record; let us see the record.

Mr. MANNING. It will be seen by reference to the RECORD of the 11th ultimo, page 20, that I introduced the following bill in the due course of business:

Be it enacted, &c., That sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and also the sections from 2041 to 2049, both inclusive, and all other sections authorizing the appointment and payment of supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals to aid and assist said supervisors, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

All the sections referred to were read to the House. It was my purpose in introducing it to afford a full vindication to the democratic party in the event of the present threatened emergency that it could not be truthfully said we were undertaking to coerce the repeal of these statutes until we had exhausted all ordinary means. So important a fact so recently transpiring could hardly have been forgotten by either the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from Maine, as they were both present and voted against the bill.

VALEDICTORY OF THE SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. Representatives, in a moment this Congress will expire. Its acts, whether for weal or woe, are indelibly inscribed upon the pages of history. In this Hall party has been arrayed against party and interest against interest in fierce and bitter struggle; but it is due to truth to say that on every side there has been honest ambition to win popular esteem by seeking, each in his own way and according to his best judgment, the general welfare. Whether or not the desired end of the public good has been successfully attained is for time to prove; but that such has been the aim of both sides cannot justly be disputed.

Genuine concord between all the States and the citizens thereof is the corner-stone of our national prosperity. What prostrates or elevates one at the expense of the other inevitably inures to the ultimate injury of all. Although each Representative has championed the wishes of his immediate constituency with earnestness and energy, yet during the whole period of the existence of this House there has not been a single breach of legislative decorum. That noble respect born of generous rivalry in a common good cause has softened all asperities.

I feel that mere words are inadequate to thank fully this House for its resolution of approval of the manner in which I have discharged the duties of Speaker, always responsible and onerous, and often most delicate and difficult. I have done my best.

Long service here has taught me that hate or vengeance has never raised any cause to enduring honor, while, on the contrary, justice and mutual regard have often given the weaker side an easy victory. With two great parties dividing the people, each holding an important share in government, with strict accountability on the part of public servants and vigilant eyes watching all, with reviving business and restored confidence, may we not look hopefully to the early dawn of a new era of increased prosperity and greater happiness for the country? Such is my fervent prayer.

To each and every Representative here I desire to tender my heartfelt acknowledgment for the kindly forbearance extended to me as presiding officer of this House, and to say that I shall ever gratefully cherish the honor of which I have been the recipient.

With the expression of the wish that you all may return safely and in health to your homes, it only remains for me to declare that, in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, this House stands adjourned without day. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]
